EDITOR'S PREFACE.

It will be obvious to every one that to bring the Six Volume Edition of Dr. Clarke's Commentary within the compass of three volumes must involve considerable abridgement and condensation, especially as the Text and Marginal References must necessarily remain intact.

To act upon one unvarying rule in the work of abridgement has been impossible; but the Editor has kept in view the general principle of fitting the Commentary for domestic and private use, and especially for devotional purposes. Learned and scientific disquisitions on points having only a limited interest, illustrations of travel rendered obsolete by more recent investigation, elaborate citations from classical and ecclesiastical writers, have, with a few exceptions, been cut down, or altogether omitted. So far, however, as it has been possible, all matter essential to the exposition has been retained, in the very words of the Commentator himself.

A few short notes, distinguished by brackets, have been added, where a serious error or a more recent criticism has seemed to require such addition. But the Editor has not felt himself justified in omitting or modifying Dr. Clarke's special views on particular questions, even though they are divergent from the teachings of his own Church, and without the sanction of recent exegesis. Many criticisms, in the department of etymology more particularly, have been retained as characteristic, though fanciful and probably without foundation. Had they been omitted, the individuality of the work would have been destroyed.

Recent researches have added immensely to the exposition and illustration of Holy Scripture; and it has been assumed by some that the new information thus gained has rendered the Commentary of Dr. Clarke obsolete. But though here and there one may meet with exceptional instances, the work as a whole is a monument of erudition and industry, which has no rival, while its devotional passages are of immortal worth.

PREFACE TO THE BOOK

GENESIS.

THE BOOK OF GENESIS has its name from the title it bears in the Septuagint, which signifies the book of the Generation; but it is called in Hebrew Bereshith, "In the beginning," from its initial word. It is the most ancient history in the world; and, from the great variety of its singular details and most interesting accounts, is as far superior in its value and importance to all others, as it is in its antiquity. This book contains an account of the creation of the world, and its first inhabitants; the original innocence and fall of man; the rise of religion; the invention of arts; the general corruption and degeneracy of mankind; the universal deluge; the repopling and division of the earth; the origin of nations and kingdoms; and a particular history of the patriarchs from Adam down to the death of Joseph; including a space, at the lowest computation, of 2369 years.

It may be asked how a detail so circumstantial and minute could have been preserved when there was no writing of any kind, and when the earth, whose history is here given, had already existed more than 2000 years. There are only three ways in which these important records could have been preserved and brought down to the time of Moses: viz., writing, tradition, and divine revelation. In the antediluvian world, when the life of man was so protracted, there was comparatively little need for writing of any kind, and perhaps no alphabetical writing then existed. Tradition answered every purpose to which writing in any kind of characters could be subservient; and the necessity of erecting monuments to perpetuate public events could scarcely have suggested itself, as during those times there could be little danger apprehended of any important fact becoming obsolete, as its history had to pass through very few hands.

From Adam to Noah there was but one man necessary to the correct transmission of the history of this period of 1656 years. Now, this history was, without doubt, perfectly known to Methuselah, who lived to see them both. In like manner Shem connected Noah and Abraham, having lived to converse with both; as Isaac did with Abraham and Joseph, from whom these things might be easily conveyed to Moses by Amram, who was contemporary with Joseph. Supposing, then, all the curious facts recorded in the book of Genesis had no other authority than the tradition already referred to, they would stand upon a foundation of credibility superior to any that the most reputable of the ancient Greek and Latin historians can boast. Yet, to preclude all possibility of mistake, the unerring Spirit of God directed Moses in the selection of his facts and the ascertaining of his dates. Indeed, the narrative is so simple, so much like truth, so consistent everywhere with itself, so correct in its dates, so impartial in its biography, so accurate in its philosophical details, so pure in its morality, and so benevolent in its design, as amply to demonstrate that it never could have had an earthly origin. In this case, also, Moses constructed every thing according to the pattern which God showed him in the mount.

CHAPTER I.

First day's work—*Creation of the heavens and the earth, 1, 2. Of the light and its separation from the darkness, 3-5. Second day's work—The creation of the firmament, and the separation of the waters above the firmament from those below it, 6-8. Third day's work—The waters are separated from the earth, and formed into seas, &c., 9, 10. The earth rendered fruitful, and clothed with trees, herbs, grass, &c., 11-13. Fourth day's work—Creation of the celestial luminaries intended for the measurement of time, the distinction of periods, seasons, &c., 14; and to illuminate the earth, 15. Distinct account of the formation of the sun, moon, and stars, 16-19. Fifth day's work—The creation of fish, fowls, and reptiles in general, 20. Of great aquatic animals, 21. They are blessed so as to make them very prolific, 22, 23. Sixth day's work—Wild and tame cattle created, and all kinds of animals which derive their nourishment from the earth, 24, 25. The creation of man in the image and likeness of God, with dominion given him over the earth and all inferior animals, 26. Man or Adam, a general name for human beings, including both male and female, 27. Their peculiar blessing, 28. Vegetables appointed as the food of man and all other animals, 29, 30. Verse 1. Many attempts have been made to define the term GOD: as to the word itself, it is pure Anglo-Saxon, and among our ancestors signified, not only the Divine Being, now commonly designated by the word, but also good; as in their apprehensions it appeared that God and good were correlative terms; and when they thought or spoke of him, they were doubtless led from the word itself to consider him as THE GOOD BEING, a fountain of infinite benevolence and beneficence towards his creatures.

A general definition of this great First Cause, as far as human words dare attempt one, may be thus given: The eternal, independent, and self-existent Being: the Being whose purposes and actions spring from himself, without foreign motive or influence: he who is absolute in dominion; the most pure, the most simple, and most spiritual of all essences; infinitely benevolent, beneficent, true, and holy: the cause of all being, the upholder of all things; infinitely happy, because infinitely perfect; and eternally self-sufficient, needing nothing that he has made: illimitable in his immensity, inconceivable in his mode of existence, and indescribable in his essence; known fully only to himself, because an infinite mind can be fully apprehended only by itself. In a word, a Being who, from his infinite wisdom, cannot err or be deceived; and who, from his infinite goodness, can do nothing but what is eternally just, right, and kind. Reader, such is the God of the Bible; but how widely different from the God of most human creeds and apprehensions!

The original word Elohim, God, is certainly the plural form of El, or Eloah, and has long been supposed, by the most eminently learned and pious men, to imply a plurality of Persons in the divine nature. As this plurality appears in so many parts of the sacred writings to be confined to three Persons, hence the doctrine of the TRINITY, which has formed a part of the creed of all those who have been deemed sound in the faith, from the earliest ages of Christianity. Nor are the Christians singular in receiving this doctrine, and in deriving it from the first words of divine revelation. An eminent Jewish rabbin, Simeon ben Joachi, in his comment on the sixth section of Leviticus, has these remarkable words: "Come and see the mystery of the word Elohim; there are three degrees, and each degree by itself alone, and yet notwithstanding they are all one, and joined together in one, and are not divided from each other." The verb bara, he created, being joined in the singular number with this plural noun, has been considered as pointing out, and not obscurely, the unity of the Divine Persons in this work of creation. In the ever-blessed Trinity, from the infinite and indivisible unity of the persons, there can be but one will, one purpose, and one infinite and uncontrollable energy.

In the following passages the word Elohim is joined with adjectives, verbs, and pronouns plural:

4 And God saw the light, that it was good: and God <sup>a</sup>divided <sup>b</sup>the light from the darkness.

5 And God called the light <sup>c</sup>Day, and the darkness he called Night. <sup>d</sup>And the evening and the morning were the first day.

See also Prov. ix. 10; xxx. 3; Ps. cxlix. 2; Eccl. v. 7; xii. 1; Job v. 1; Isa. vi. 3; liv. 5; lxii. 5; Hos. xi. 12, or xii. 1; Mal. i. 6; Dan. v. 18-20; vii. 18-22.

As the word Elohim is the term by which the Divine Being is most generally expressed in the Old Testament, it may be necessary to consider it here more at large. It is a maxim that admits of no controversy, that every noun in the Hebrew language is derived from a verb, which is usually termed the radix or root, from which, not only the noun, but all the different flexions of the verb spring. This radix is the third person singular of the pretorite or past tense. The ideal meaning of this root expresses some essential property of the thing which it designates, or of which it is an appellative. The root in Hebrew, and in its sister language, the Arabic, generally consists of three letters, and every word must be traced to its root in order to ascertain its genuine meaning, for there alone is this meaning to be found.

I mention the Arabic with the Hebrew for two reasons. 1. Because the two languages evidently spring from the same source, and have very nearly the same mode of construction. 2. Because the deficient roots in the Hebrew Bible are to be sought for in the Arabic language, inasmuch as either the Arabic was derived from the Hebrew, or the Hebrew from the Arabic.

The first sentence in the scripture shows the propriety of having recourse to this principle. We have seen that the word Elohim is plural; we have traced our term God to its source, and have seen its signification; and also a general definition of the thing or being included under this term, has been tremblingly attempted. We should now trace the original to its root, but this root does not appear in the Hebrew Bible. Mr. Parkhurst thinks he has found the root in alah, he swore, bound himself by oath; and hence he calls the ever-blessed Trinity Elohim, as being bound by a conditional oath to redeem man, &c., &c. Most pious minds will revolt from such a definition, and will be glad with me to find both the noun and the root preserved in Arabic. ALLAH is the common name for God in the Arabic tongue, and is derived from the root alah, he worshipped, adored, was struck with astonishment, fear, or terror; and hence ilahom, fear, veneration, and also the object of religious fear, the Deity, the supreme God, the tremendous Being. This is not a new idea; God was considered in the same light among the ancient Hebrews; and hence Jacob swears by the fear of his father Isaac, Gen. xxxi. 53. Goliath renders alah, he succoured, &c. Thus from the ideal meaning of this most expressive root, we acquire the most correct notion of the divine nature; for we learn that God is the sole object of adoration; that the perfections of his nature are such as must astonish all those who piously contemplate them, and fill with horror all who would dare to give his glory to another, or break his commandments; that consequently he should be worshipped with reverence and religious fear; and that every sincere worshipper may expect from him help in all his weaknesses, trials, difficulties, temptations, &c.; freedom from the power, guilt, nature, and consequences of sin; and to be supported, defended, and saved to the uttermost, and to the end.

In the beginning] Before the creative acts mentioned in this chapter all was ETERNITY. Time signifies duration measured by the revolutions of the heavenly bodies: but prior to the creation of these bodies there could be no measurement of duration, and consequently no time; therefore in the beginning must necessarily mean the commencement of time which followed, or rather was produced by, God's creative acts, as an effect follows or is produced by a cause.

Created] Caused existence where previously to this moment there was no being. The rabbins, who are legitimate judges in a case of verbal criticism on their own language, are unanimous in asserting that the word bara expresses the commencement of the existence of a thing, or egression from nonentity to entity. It does not in its primary meaning denote the preserving or new forming things that had previously existed, as some imagine, but creation in the proper sense of the term, though it has some other acceptations in other places. The supposition that God formed all things out of a pre-existing, eternal nature, is certainly absurd, for if there had been an eternal nature besides an eternal God, there must have been two self-existing, independent, and eternal beings, which is a most palpable contradiction.

The heavens] The word eth, which is generally considered as a particle, simply denoting that the word following is in the accusative or oblique case, is often understood by the rabbins in a much more extensive sense. "The particle eth," says Aben Ezra, "signifies the substance of the thing." The like definition is given by Kimchi in his Book of Roots. "This particle," says Mr. Ainsworth, "having the first and last letters of the Hebrew alphabet in it, is supposed to comprise the sum and substance of all things." "The particle eth (says Buxtorf, Talmudic Lexicon, sub voce) with the Cabalists is often mystically put for the beginning and the end, as A alpha and Ω omega are in the Apocalypse." On this ground these words should be translated, "God in the beginning created the substance of the heavens and the substance of the earth," i.e. the prima materia, or first elements, out of which the heavens and the earth were successively formed. The Syriac translator understood the word in this sense, and to express this meaning has used a word which has this signification; and St. Ephraim Syrus, in his comment on this place, uses the same Syriac word, and appears to understand it precisely in the same way. Though the Hebrew words are certainly no more than the notation of a case in most places, yet understood here in the sense above, they argue a wonderful philosophic accuracy in the statement of Moses, which brings before us, not a finished heaven and earth, as every other translation appears to do, though afterwards the process of their formation is given in detail, but merely the materials out of which God built the whole system in the six following days.

The heaven and the earth.] As the word shamayim is plural we may rest assured that it means more than the atmosphere, to express which some have endeavoured to restrict its meaning. Nor does it appear that the atmosphere is particularly intended here, as this is spoken of, ver. 6, under the term firmament. The word heavens must therefore comprehend the whole solar system, as it is very likely the whole of this was created in these six days; for unless the earth had been the centre of a system, the reverse of which is sufficiently demonstrated, it would be unphilosophic to suppose it was created independently of the other parts of the system, as on this supposition we must have recourse to the almighty power of God to suspend the influence of the earth's gravitating power till the fourth day, when the sun was placed in the centre, round which the earth began then to revolve. But as the design of the inspired penman was to relate what especially belonged to our world and its inhabitants, therefore he passes by the rest of the planetary system, leaving it simply included in the plural word heavens. In the word earth everything relative to the terr-aque-aerial globe is included, that is, all that belongs to the solid and fluid parts of our world with its surrounding atmosphere.

Verse 2. The earth was without form and void] The original terms tohu and bohu, which we translate without form and void, are of uncertain etymology; but in this place, and wherever else they are used, they convey the idea of confusion and disorder. From these terms it is probable that the ancient Syrians and Egyptians borrowed their gods, Theuth and Bau, and the Greeks their Chaos. God seems at first to have created the elementary principles of all things; and this formed the grand mass of matter, which in this state must be without arrangement, or any distinction of parts: a vast collection of indescribably confused materials, of nameless entities strangely mixed.

And when this congeries of elementary principles was brought together, God was pleased to spend six days in assimilating, assorting, and arranging the materials, out of which he built up, not only the earth, but the whole of the solar system.

The Spirit of God] This has been variously and strangely understood. Some think a violent wind is meant, because ruach often signifies wind as well as spirit, as πνευμα does in Greek; and the term God is connected with it merely, as they think, to express the superlative degree. Others understand by it an elementary fire. Others, the sun, penetrating and drying up the earth with his rays. Others, the angels, who were supposed to have been employed as agents in creation. Others, a certain occult principle, termed the anima mundi or soul of the world. Others, a magnetic attraction, by which all things were caused to gravitate to a common centre. But it is sufficiently evident, from the use of the word in other places, that the Holy Spirit of God is intended; which our blessed Lord represents under the notion of wind, John iii. 8; and which, as a mighty rushing wind on the day of Pentecost, filled the house where the disciples were sitting, Acts ii. 2, which was immediately followed by their speaking with other tongues, because they were filled with the Holy Ghost, ver. 4. These scriptures sufficiently ascertain the sense in which the word is used by Moses.

Moved] Was brooding over; for the word expresses that tremulous motion made by the hen while either hatching her eggs or fostering her young. It here probably signifies the communicating a vital or prolific principle to the waters. As the idea of incubation, or hatching an egg, is implied in the original word, hence probably the notion, which prevailed among the ancients, that the world was generated from an egg.

Verse 3. And God said, Let there be light]. Nothing can be conceived more dignified than this form of expression. It argues at once uncontrollable authority, and omnific power; and in human language it is scarcely possible to conceive that God can speak more like himself. Of this passage, Dionysius Longinus, who is highly celebrated over the civilized world for a treatise he wrote, entitled, Concerning the SUBLIME, both in prose and poetry, speaks in the following terms; "So likewise the Jewish lawgiver (who was no ordinary man) having conceived a just idea of the divine power, he expressed it in a dignified manner; for at the beginning of his laws he thus speaks: GOD SAID—What? LET THERE BE LIGHT! and there was light. LET THERE BE EARTH! and there was earth." Longinus, sect. ix. edit. Pearce.

Many have asked, "How could light be produced on the first day, and the sun, the fountain of it, not created till the fourth day?" With the various and often unphilosophical answers which have been given to this question I will not meddle, but shall observe that the original word signifies not only light but fire, see Isa. xxxi. 9, Ezek. v. 2. It is used for the sun, Job xxi. 26. And for the electric fluid or LIGHTNING, Job xxviii. 3. And it is worthy of remark that it is used in Isa. xlv. 16, for the heat, derived from esh, the fire. He burneth part thereof in the fire: yea, he warmeth himself, and saith, Ah! I have seen the fire, which a modern philosopher who understood the language would not scruple to translate, I have received caloric, or an additional portion of the matter of heat. I therefore conclude that, as gathering together of the waters called he Seas: and God saw that it was good.

11 And God said, Let the earth <sup>a</sup>bring forth <sup>b</sup>grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding <sup>c</sup>fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so.

12 And the earth brought forth grass, and herb yielding seed after his kind, <sup>d</sup>and the tree yielding i. 9. 2 Pet. iii. 5.—<sup>a</sup>2 Pet. iii. 5.—<sup>d</sup>Heb. vi. 7.—<sup>e</sup>Heb. tender grass.—<sup>f</sup>Luke vi. 44.—<sup>g</sup>Luke vi. 44.

God has diffused the matter of caloric or latent heat through every part of nature, without which there could be neither vegetation nor animal life, that it is caloric or latent heat which is principally intended by the original word.

That there is latent light, which is probably the same with latent heat, may be easily demonstrated: take two pieces of smooth rock crystal, agate, cornelian, or flint, and rub them together briskly in the dark, and the latent light or matter of caloric will be immediately produced and become visible. The light or caloric thus disengaged does not operate in the same powerful manner as the heat or fire which is produced by striking with flint and steel, or that produced by electric friction. The existence of this caloric—latent or primitive light, may be ascertained in various other bodies; it can be produced by the flint and steel, by rubbing two hard sticks together, by hammering cold iron, which in a short time becomes red hot, and by the strong and sudden compression of atmospheric air in a tube. Friction in general produces both fire and light. God therefore created this universal agent on the first day, because without it no operation of nature could be carried on or perfected.

Verse 4. God divided the light from the darkness]. This does not imply that light and darkness are two distinct substances, seeing darkness is only the privation of light; but the words simply refer us by anticipation to the rotation of the earth round its own axis once in twenty-three hours, fifty-six minutes, and four seconds, which is the cause of the distinction between day and night, by bringing the different parts of the surface of the earth successively into and from under the solar rays; and it was probably at this moment that God gave this rotation to the earth, to produce this merciful provision of day and night.

Verse 6. And God said, Let there be a firmament]. Our translators, by following the firmamentum of the Vulgate, which is a translation of the στέρωμα of the Septuagint, have deprived this passage of all sense and meaning. The Hebrew word, from raka, to spread out as the curtains of a tent or pavilion, simply signifies an expanse or space, but it appears to have been used by Moses to include the whole of the planetary vortex, or the space which is occupied by the whole solar system.

Verse 10. And God called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas]. These two constitute what is called the terrestrial globe, in which the earth and the water exist in a most judicious proportion to each other. Nearly three-fourths of the surface of our globe, from the arctic to the antarctic polar circles, are covered with water. This proportion of three-fourths water may be considered as too great, if not useless; but it requires so much aqueous surface to yield a sufficiency of vapours for the purpose of cooling the atmosphere, and watering the earth.

Moses clearly considered the whole terrestrial globe as being created in a fluid state, the earthy and other particles of matter being mingled with the water. The present form of the earth demonstrates the truth of the Mosaic account; for it is well known that if a soft or elastic globular body be rapidly whirled round on its axis, the parts at the poles will be flattened, and the parts on the equator will be raised up. This is precisely the shape of our earth; it has the figure of an oblate spheroid, a figure pretty much resembling the shape of an orange. The diameter of the earth at the equator is greater by more than twenty-three and a half miles than it is at the poles, allowing the polar diameter to be  $\frac{1}{25}$ th part shorter than the equatorial.

And God saw that it was good]. This is the judgment which God pronounced on his own works. They were beautiful and perfect in their kind, for such is the import of the word to. They were in weight and measure perfect and entire, lacking nothing. But the reader will think it strange fruit, whose seed was in itself, after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

13 And the evening and the morning were the third day.

14 And God said, Let there be <sup>a</sup>lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide <sup>b</sup>the day from the

that this approbation should be expressed once on the first, fourth, fifth, and sixth days; twice on the third, and not at all on the second! I suppose that the words, And God saw that it was good, have been either lost from the conclusion of the eighth verse, or that the clause in the tenth verse originally belonged to the eighth. It appears, from the Septuagint translation, that the words in question existed originally at the close of the eighth verse, in the copies which they used; for in that Version we still find, And God saw that it was good. This reading, however, is not acknowledged by any of Kennicott's or De Rossi's MSS., nor by any of the other Versions.

Verse 11. Let the earth bring forth grass—herb—fruit-tree, &c. In these general expressions all kinds of vegetable productions are included. Fruit-tree is not to be understood here in the restricted sense in which the term is used among us; it signifies all trees, not only those which bear fruit, which may be applied to the use of men and cattle, but also those which had the power of propagating themselves by seeds, &c. Now, as God delights to manifest himself in the little as well as in the great, he has shown his consummate wisdom in every part of the vegetable creation. Who can account for, or comprehend, the structure of a single tree or plant? The roots, the stem, the woody fibres, the bark, the rind, the air-vessels, the sap-vessels, the leaves, the flowers and the fruits, are so many mysteries. All the skill, wisdom, and power of men and angels could not produce a single grain of wheat! A serious and reflecting mind can see the grandeur of God, not only in immense cedars on Lebanon, but also in the endlessly varied forests that appear through the microscope in the mould of cheese, stale paste, &c., &c.

Verse 12. Whose seed was in itself Which has the power of multiplying itself by seeds, slips, roots, &c., ad infinitum; which contains in itself all the rudiments of the future plant through its endless generations. This doctrine has been abundantly confirmed by the most accurate observations of the best modern philosophers. The astonishing power with which God has endued the vegetable creation to multiply its different species, may be instanced in the seed of the elm. This tree produces one thousand five hundred and eighty-four millions of seeds; and each of these seeds has the power of producing the same number. How astonishing is this produce! The seeds of the third generation from one elm would be many myriads of times more than sufficient to stock the whole superficies of all the planets in the solar system! But plants multiply themselves by slips as well as by seeds. Sir Kenelm Digby saw in 1660 a plant of barley, in the possession of the Fathers of the Christian Doctrine at Paris, which contained 249 stalks springing from one root or grain, and in which he counted upwards of 18,000 grains.

Verse 14. And God said, Let there be lights, &c. One principal office of these was to divide between day and night. When night is considered a state of comparative darkness, how can lights divide or distinguish it? The answer is easy: The sun is the monarch of the day, which is the state of light; the moon, of the night, the state of darkness. The rays of the sun, falling on the atmosphere, are refracted and diffused over the whole of that hemisphere of the earth immediately under his orb; while those rays of that vast luminary which, because of the earth's smallness in comparison of the sun, are diffused on all sides beyond the earth, falling on the opaque disc of the moon, are reflected back upon what may be called the lower hemisphere, or that part of the earth which is opposite to the part which is illuminated by the sun: and as the earth completes a revolution on its own axis in about twenty-four hours, consequently each hemisphere has alternate day and night. But as the solar light reflected from the face of the moon is computed to be 50,000 times less in intensity and effect than the light of the sun, as it comes directly from himself to our earth (for light decreases in its intensity as the distance it travels from the sun increases), therefore a sufficient distinction is made between night; and let them be for signs, and <sup>c</sup>for seasons, and for days, and years.

15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon the earth: and it was so.

16 And God <sup>d</sup>made two great lights; the greater

day and night, or light and darkness, notwithstanding each is ruled and determined by one of these two great lights; the moon ruling the night, i.e. reflecting from her own surface back on the earth the rays of light which she receives from the sun. It is true that both the planets and fixed stars afford a considerable portion of light during the night, yet they cannot be said to rule or to predominate by their light, because their rays are quite lost in the superior splendour of the moon's light.

And let them be for signs Let them ever be considered as continual tokens of God's tender care for man, and as standing proofs of his continual miraculous interference; for so the word oth is often used. And is it not the almighty energy of God that upholds them in being? The sun and moon also serve as signs of the different changes which take place in the atmosphere, and which are so essential for all purposes of agriculture, commerce, &c.

For seasons For the determination of the times on which the sacred festivals should be held. In this sense the word frequently occurs; and it was right that at the very opening of his revelation God should inform man that there were certain festivals which should be annually celebrated to his glory. Some think we should understand the original word as signifying months, for which purpose we know the moon essentially serves through all the revolutions of time.

For days Both the hours of the day and night, as well as the different lengths of the days and nights, are distinguished by the longer and shorter spaces of time the sun is above or below the horizon.

And years That is, those grand divisions of time by which all succession in the vast lapse of duration is distinguished. This refers principally to a complete revolution of the earth round the sun, which is accomplished in 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, and 48 seconds; for though the revolution is that of the earth, yet it cannot be determined but by the heavenly bodies.

Verse 16. And God made two great lights Moses speaks of the sun and moon here, not according to their bulk or solid contents, but according to the proportion of light they shed on the earth. The expression has been cavilled at by some who are as devoid of mental capacity as of candour. "The moon," say they, "is not a great body;" on the contrary, it is the very smallest in our system." Well, and has Moses said the contrary? He has said it is a great LIGHT; had he said otherwise he had not spoken the truth. It is, in reference to the earth, next to the sun himself, the greatest light in the solar system; and so true is it that the moon is a great light, that it affords more light to the earth than all the planets in the solar system, and all the innumerable stars in the vault of heaven, put together. It is worthy of remark that on the fourth day of the creation the sun was formed, and then "first tried his beams athwart the gloom profound;" and that at the conclusion of the fourth millenary from the creation, according to the Hebrew, the Sun of Righteousness shone upon the world, as deeply sunk in that mental darkness produced by sin as the ancient world was, while teeming darkness held the dominion, till the sun was created as the dispenser of light. What would the natural world be without the sun? A howling waste, in which neither animal nor vegetable life could possibly be sustained. And what would the moral world be without Jesus Christ, and the light of his word and Spirit? Just what those parts of it now are where his light has not yet shone: "dark places of the earth, filled with the habitations of cruelty," where error prevails without end, and superstition, engendering false hopes and false fears, degrades and debases the mind of man.

Many have supposed that the days of the creation answer to so many thousands of years; and that as God created all in six days, and rested the seventh, so the world shall last six thousand years, and the seventh shall be the eternal rest that remains for the people of God. To this conclusion they have been led by these words of the apostle, 2 Pet. iii. 8:

light <sup>a</sup> to rule the day, and <sup>b</sup> the lesser light to rule the night: he made <sup>c</sup> the stars also.

17 And God set them in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon the earth,

18 And to <sup>a</sup> rule over the day, and over the night; and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good.

19 And the evening and the morning were the fourth day.

20 And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the <sup>a</sup> moving creature that hath <sup>b</sup> life, and <sup>c</sup> fowl that may fly above the earth in the <sup>d</sup> open firmament of heaven.

One day is with the Lord as a thousand years; and a thousand years as one day. Secret things belong to God; those that are revealed, to us and our children.

He made the stars also. Or rather, He made the lesser light, with the stars to rule the night.

Verse 20. Let the waters bring forth abundantly] There is a meaning in these words which is seldom noticed. Innumerable millions of animalcula are found in water. Eminent naturalists have discovered not less than 30,000 in a single drop! How inconceivably small must each be, and yet each a perfect animal, furnished with the whole apparatus of bones, muscles, nerves, heart, arteries, veins, lungs, viscera in general, animal spirits, &c., &c. What a proof is this of the manifold wisdom of God! But the fecundity or fishes is another point intended in the text; no creatures are so prolific as these. A TENCH lays 1,000 eggs, a carp 20,000, and Leuwenhock counted in a middling-sized cod 9,384,000! Thus, according to the purpose of God, the waters bring forth abundantly. And what a merciful provision is this for the necessities of man! Many hundreds of thousands of the earth's inhabitants live for a great part of the year on fish only. Fish afford, not only a wholesome, but a very nutritive diet; they are liable to few diseases, and generally come in vast quantities to our shores when in their greatest perfection. In this also we may see that the kind providence of God goes hand in hand with his creating energy. While he manifests his wisdom and his power, he is making a permanent provision for the sustenance of man through all his generations.

Verse 21. And God created great whales] Though this is generally understood by the different Versions as signifying whales, yet the original must be understood rather as a general than a particular term, comprising all the great aquatic animals, such as the various species of whales, the porpoise, the dolphin, the monocoeros or narwal, and the shark. God delights to show himself in little as well as in great things; hence he forms animals so minute that 30,000 can be contained in one drop of water; and others so great that they seem to require almost a whole sea to float in.

Verse 22. Let fowl multiply in the earth.] It is truly astonishing with what care, wisdom, and minute skill God has formed the different genera and species of birds, whether intended to live chiefly on land or in water. The structure of a single feather affords a world of wonders; and as God made the fowls that they might fly in the firmament of heaven, ver. 20, so he has adapted the form of their bodies, and the structure and disposition of their plumage, for that very purpose. The head and neck in flying are drawn principally within the breast-bone, so that the whole under-part exhibits the appearance of a ship's hull. The wings are made use of as sails, or rather oars, and the tail as a helm or rudder. By means of these the creature is not only able to preserve the centre of gravity, but also to go with vast speed through the air, either straight forward, circularly, or in any kind of angle, upwards or downwards.

Verse 24. Let the earth bring forth the living creature, &c.] A general term to express all creatures endowed with animal life, in any of its infinitely varied gradations. The word chaitin, in the latter part of the verse, seems to signify all wild animals, as lions, tigers, &c., and especially such as are carnivorous, or live on flesh, in contradistinction from domestic animals, such as are graminivorous, or live on grass and living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

22 And God blessed them, saying, <sup>a</sup> Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas; and let fowl multiply in the earth.

23 And the evening and the morning were the fifth day.

24 And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so.

25 And God made the beast of the earth after his other vegetables, and are capable of being tamed, and applied to domestic purposes. These latter are probably meant by behemah in the text, which we translate cattle, such as horses, kine, sheep, dogs, &c. Creeping thing, all the different genera of serpents, worms, and such animals as have no feet. In beasts also God has shown his wondrous skill and power; in the vast elephant, or still more colossal mammoth or mastodon, the whole race of which appears to be extinct, a few skeletons only remaining. But his skill and power are not less seen in the beautiful chevrotin, or tragulus, a creature of the antelope kind, whose delicate limbs are scarcely so large as an ordinary goose quill. In the reptile kind we see also the same skill and power, not only in the immense snake called boa constrictor, but also in the cobra de manille, a venomous serpent, only a little larger than a common sewing needle.

Verse 25. And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, &c. Every thing both in the animal and vegetable world was made so according to its kind, both in genus and species, as to produce its own kind through endless generations. Thus the several races of animals and plants have been kept distinct from the foundation of the world to the present day. This is a proof that all future generations of plants and animals have been seminally included in those which God formed in the beginning.

Verse 26. And God said, Let us make man] It is evident that God intends to impress the mind of man with a sense of something extraordinary in the formation of his body and soul, when he introduces the account of his creation thus: Let US make man. The word Adam, which we translate man, is intended to designate the species of animal.

In our image, after our likeness] What is said above refers only to the body of man, what is here said refers to his soul. This was made in the image and likeness of God. Now, as the Divine Being is infinite, he is neither limited by parts, nor definable by passions; therefore he can have no corporeal image after which he made the body of man. The image and likeness must necessarily be intellectual; his mind, his soul, must have been formed after the nature and perfections of his God. The human mind is still endowed with most extraordinary capacities; it was more so when issuing out of the hands of its Creator. God was now producing a spirit, and a spirit too formed after the perfections of his own nature. God is the fountain whence this spirit issued, hence the stream must resemble the spring which produced it. God is holy, just, wise, good, and perfect; so must the soul be that sprang from him: there could be in it nothing impure, unjust, ignorant, evil, low, base, mean, or vile. It was created after the image of God; and that image, St. Paul tells us, consisted in righteousness, true holiness, and knowledge, Eph. iv. 24; Col. iii. 10. Hence man was wise in his mind, holy in his heart, and righteous in his actions. The text tells us he was the work of ELOHIM, the Divine Plurality, marked here more distinctly by the plural pronouns US and OUR; and to show that he was the master-piece of God's creation, all the persons in the God-head are represented as united in counsel and effort to produce this astonishing creature.

Gregory Nyssen has very properly observed that the superiority of man to all other parts of creation is seen in this, that all other creatures are represented as the effect of God's word, but man is represented as the work of God, kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

26 And God said, * Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and <sup>b</sup> let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

27 So God created man in his own image, <sup>c</sup> in the image of God created he him; <sup>d</sup> male and female created he them.

28 And God blessed them, and God said unto them, <sup>e</sup> Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that <sup>f</sup> moveth upon the earth.

29 And God said, Behold I have given you every herb <sup>g</sup> bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which <sup>h</sup> is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; <sup>i</sup> to you it shall be for meat.

30 And to <sup>j</sup> every beast of the earth, and to every <sup>k</sup> fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein <sup>l</sup> there is <sup>m</sup> life, I have given every green herb for meat: and it was so.

31 And <sup>n</sup> God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, <sup>o</sup> it was very good. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day.

The morning—baker; from bakar, he looked out; a beautiful figure which represents the morning as looking out at the East, and illuminating the whole of the upper hemisphere.

The evening and the morning were the sixth day.—It is somewhat remarkable that through the whole of this chapter, whenever the division of days is made, the evening always precedes the morning. The reason of this may perhaps be, that darkness was pre-existent to light, and therefore time is reckoned from the first act of God towards the creation of the world, which took place before light was called forth into existence. It is very likely, for this same reason, that the Jews began their day at six o'clock in the evening, in imitation of Moses's division of time in this chapter. The same peculiarity existed among the Gauls and the Germans.

READER, thou hast now before thee the most ancient and most authentic history in the world; a history that contains the first written discovery that God has made of himself to mankind; a discovery of his own Being, in his wisdom, power, and goodness, in which thou and the whole human race are so intimately concerned. How much thou art indebted to him for this discovery he alone can teach thee, and cause thy heart to feel its obligations to his wisdom and mercy. Read so as to understand, for these things were written for thy learning; therefore mark what thou redest, and inwardly digest—deeply and seriously meditate on, what thou hast marked, and pray to the Father of lights that he may open thy understanding, that thou mayest know these holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation.

God made thee and the universe, and governs all things according to the counsel of his will; that will is infinite goodness, that counsel is unerring wisdom. While under the direction of this counsel, thou canst not err; while under the influence of this will, thou canst not be wretched. Give thyself up to his teaching, and submit to his authority; and, after guiding thee here by his counsel, he will at last bring thee to his glory. Every object that meets thy eye should teach thee reverence, submission, and gratitude. The earth and its productions were made for thee; and the providence of thy heavenly Father, infinitely diversified in its operations, watches over and provides for thee. Behold the firmament of his power, the sun, moon, planets, and stars, which he has formed not for himself, for he needs none of these things but for his intelligent offspring. What endless gratification has he designed thee in placing within thy reach these astonishing effects of his wisdom and power, and in rendering thee capable of searching out their wonderful relations and connexions, and of knowing himself, the source of all perfection, by having made thee in his own image, and in his own likeness! It is true thou art fallen; but he has found out a ransom. God so loved thee in conjunction with the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Believe on HIM; through him alone cometh salvation; and the fair and holy image of God in which thou wast created shall be again restored; he will build thee up as at the first, restore thy judges and counsellors as at the beginning, and in thy second creation, as in thy first, will pronounce thee to be very good, and thou shalt show forth the virtues of him by whom thou art created anew in Christ Jesus. Amen.

according to plan and consideration; Let us make MAN in our IMAGE, after our LIKENESS.

And let them have dominion.] Hence we see that the dominion was not the image. God created man capable of governing the world, and when fitted for the office, he fixed him in it. We see God's tender care and parental solicitude for the comfort and well-being of this master-piece of his workmanship, in creating the world previously to the creation of man.

It has been supposed by some that God speaks here to the angels, when he says, Let us make man; but to make this a likely interpretation these persons must prove, 1. That angels were then created. 2. That angels could assist in a work of creation. 3. That angels were themselves made in the image and likeness of God. If they were not, it could not be said, in our image, and it does not appear from any part in the sacred writings that any creature but man was made in the image of God.

Verse 28. And God blessed them.] Marked them as being under his especial protection, and gave them power to propagate and multiply their own kind on the earth. A large volume would be insufficient to contain what we know of the excellence and perfection of man, even in his present degraded fallen state. The contrivance, arrangement, action, and re-action of the different parts of the body, show the admirable skill of the wondrous Creator; while the various powers and faculties of the mind, acting on and by the different organs of this body, proclaim the soul's divine origin, and demonstrate that he who was made in the image and likeness of God, was a transcript of his own excellency, destined to know, love, and dwell with his Maker throughout eternity.

Verse 29. I have given you every herb—for meat.] It may be inferred from this passage that man was originally intended to live upon vegetables only; and that no animal whatever was originally designed to prey on others; for nothing is here said to be given to any beast of the earth besides green herbs. Before sin entered into the world, there could be, at least, no violent deaths, if any death at all. But by the particular structure of the teeth of animals God prepared them for that kind of aliment which they were to subsist on after the FALL.

Verse 31. And, behold, it was very good.] Superlatively or only good; as good as they could be. The plan wise, the work well executed, the different parts properly arranged, their nature, limits, mode of existence, manner of propagation, habits, mode of sustenance, &c., &c., properly and permanently established and secured; for every thing was formed to the utmost perfection of its nature, so that nothing could be added or diminished without encumbering the operations of matter and spirit on the one hand, or rendering them inefficient to the end proposed on the other. And God has so done all these marvellous works as to be glorified in all, by all, and through all.

And the evening and the morning were the sixth day.] The word ereb, which we translate evening, comes from the root arab, to mingle; and properly signifies that state in which neither absolute darkness nor full light prevails. It has nearly the same grammatical signification with our twilight. The Hebrews extended the meaning of the term to the whole duration of night, because it was ever a mingled state, the moon, the planets, or the stars, tempering the darkness with some rays of light.

Verse 1. And all the host of them.] The word host signifies literally an army, composed of a number of companies of soldiers under their respective leaders; and seems here elegantly applied to the various celestial bodies in our system, placed by the divine wisdom under the influence of the sun. From the original word tsaba, a host, some suppose the Sabeans had their name, because of their paying divine honours to the heavenly bodies.

Verse 2. On the seventh day God ended, &c.] It is the general voice of scripture that God finished the whole of the creation in six days and rested the seventh; giving us an example that we might labour six days, and rest the seventh from all manual exercises. It is worthy of notice that the Septuagint, the Syriac, and the Samaritan, read the sixth day instead of the seventh; and this should be considered the genuine reading, which appears from these Versions to have been originally that of the Hebrew text. How the word sixth became changed into seventh may be easily conceived from this circumstance. It is very likely that in ancient times all the numerals were signified by letters, and not by words at full length. This is the case in the most ancient Greek and Latin MSS., and in almost all the rabbinical writings. When these numeral letters became changed for words at full length, two letters nearly similar might be mistaken for each other; <sup>1</sup> tau stands for six, <sup>2</sup> zain for seven; how easy to mistake these letters for each other when writing the words at full length, and so give birth to the reading in question.

Verse 3. And God blessed the seventh day.] The original word barach, which is generally rendered to bless, has a very extensive meaning. It is frequently used in scripture in the sense of speaking good of or to a person. So God has spoken well of the sabbath, and good to them who conscientiously observe it. Blessing is applied both to God and man; when God is said to bless, we generally understand by the expression that he communicates some good; but when man is said to bless God, we surely cannot imagine that he bestows any gift or confers any benefit on his Maker. He speaks good of him, for the giving and fulfilment of his promises.

Because that in it he had rested.] Shabbath, he rested; hence sabbath, the name of the seventh day, signifying a day of rest. He who labours with his mind by worldly schemes and plans on the sabbath day is as culpable as he who labours with his hands in his accustomed calling. It is by the authority of God that the sabbath is set apart for rest and religious purposes, as the six days of the week are appointed for labour. How wise is this provision! It is essentially necessary, not only to the body of man, but to all the animals employed in his service; take this away and the labour is too great, both man and beast would fail under it. Without this consecrated day religion itself would fail, and the human mind, becoming sensualized, would soon forget its origin and end. Even as a political regulation, it is one of the wisest and most beneficent in its effects of any ever instituted. Those who habitually disregard its moral obligation are, to a man, not only good for nothing, but are wretched in themselves, a curse to society, and often end their lives miserably.

As God formed both the mind and body of man on principles of activity, so he assigned him proper employment; and it is his decree that the mind shall improve by exercise, and the body find increase of vigour and health in honest labour. He who idles away his time in the six days is equally culpable in the sight of God as he who works on the seventh.

Verse 4. In the day that the Lord God made, &c.] The word Yehovah is for the first time mentioned here. What it signifies see on Exod. xxiv. 5, 6. Wherever this word occurs in the sacred writings we translate it LORD, which word is, through respect and reverence, always printed in capitals. Though our English term Lord does not give the particular meaning of the original word, yet it conveys a strong and noble sense. The word in the Anglo-Saxon implies the giver of bread, i.e. he who deals out all the necessaries of life. With what propriety then does this word apply to the Lord Jesus, who is emphatically called the bread of life; the bread of God which cometh down from heaven, and which is given for the life of the world! [It is doubtful whether the Saxon hlaford bears this sense. It rather implies rule.]

Verse 5. Every plant of the field before it was in the earth.] It appears that God created every thing, not only perfect as it respects its nature, but also in a state of maturity; and this was necessary that man, when he came into being, might find every thing ready for his use.

Verse 6. There went up a mist.] The plain meaning seems to be this, that the aqueous vapours, ascending from the earth, and becoming condensed in the colder regions of the atmosphere, fell back upon the earth in the form of dews, and by this means an equal portion of moisture was distributed to the roots of plants, &c.

Verse 7. God formed man of the dust.] In the most distinct manner God shows us that man is a compound being, having a body and soul distinctly and separately created; the body out of the dust of the earth, the soul immediately breathed from God himself. Does not this strongly mark that the soul and body are not the same thing? The body derives its origin from the earth; hence because it is earthy it is decomposable and perishable. Of the soul it is said, God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; nishmath chayim, the breath of LIVES, i.e. animal and intellectual.

Verse 8. A garden eastward in Eden.] Though the word Eden signifies pleasure or delight, it is certainly the name of a place. See chap. iv. 16; 2 Kings xix. 12; Isa. xxxvii.

of the ground, and <sup>a</sup>breathed into his <sup>b</sup>nostrils the breath of life; and <sup>c</sup>man became a living soul.

9 And out of the ground made the LORD God to grow <sup>b</sup>every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; <sup>c</sup>the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, <sup>d</sup>and the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

10 And a river went out of <sup>b</sup>Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads.

11 The name of the first is Pison: that is it which compasseth <sup>a</sup>the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold;

12; Ezek. xvi. 23; Amos i. 5. And such places probably received their name from their fertility, pleasant situation, &c. In this light the Septuagint have viewed it as they render the passage thus: God planted a paradise in Eden. Hence the word paradise has been introduced into the New Testament, and is generally used to signify a place of exquisite pleasure and delight. From this the ancient heathens borrowed their ideas of the gardens of the Hesperides, where the trees bore golden fruit; the gardens of Adonis, a word which is evidently derived from the Hebrew Eden; and hence the origin of sacred gardens or enclosures dedicated to purposes of devotion, some comparatively innocent, others impure. The word paradise is not Greek; in Arabic and Persian it signifies a garden, a vineyard, and also the place of the blessed. As it is a word of doubtful origin its etymology is uncertain.

Verse 9. The tree of life] Chaiyim; Of lives, or life-giving tree. It is likely that this tree of life was intended as an emblem of that life which man should ever live, provided he continued in obedience to his Maker. And probably the use of this tree was intended as the means of preserving the body of man in a state of continual vital energy, and an antidote against death. This seems strongly indicated from chap. iii. 22.

And the tree of knowledge of good and evil.] This may mean any tree or plant which possessed the property of increasing the knowledge of what was in nature, yet much more seems intended. Some very eminent men have contended that the passage should be understood allegorically! and that the tree of the knowledge of good and evil means simply that prudence which was prescribed to regulate the whole of man's conduct. But how could the acquisition of such a faculty be a sin? Or can we suppose that such a faculty could be wanting when man was in a state of perfection? To this it may be answered: The prohibition was intended to exercise this faculty in man that it should constantly teach him this moral lesson, that there were some things fit and others unfit to be done, and that in reference to this point the tree itself should be both a constant teacher and monitor. The eating of its fruit would not have increased this moral faculty, but the prohibition was intended to exercise the faculty he already possessed.

Verse 10. A river went out of Eden, &c.] It would astonish an ordinary reader, who should be obliged to consult different commentators and critics on the situation of the terrestrial Paradise, to see the vast variety of opinions by which they are divided. That there was such a place once there is no reason to doubt; the description given by Moses is too particular and circumstantial to be capable of being understood in any spiritual or allegorical way. As well might we contend that the persons of Adam and Eve were allegorical, as that the place of their residence was such.

Reland supposes it to have been in Armenia, near the sources of the great rivers Euphrates, Tigris, Phasis, and Araxes. He thinks Pison was the Phasis, a river of Colchis, emptying itself into the Euxine Sea, where there is a city called Chabala, the pronunciation of which is nearly the same with that of Havilah. The Gihon he thinks to be the Araxes, which runs into the Caspian Sea. The Hiddekel all agree to be the Tigris, and the other river, Phrat, or Peruth, to be the Euphrates. [Recent criticism identifies the Pison with the Halys.]

Verse 12. There is bdellium and the onyx stone.] Bochart thinks that bdellium means the pearl-oyster; and shoham is generally understood to mean the onyx, a precious stone which has its name from ovvξ, a man's nail, to the colour of which it nearly approaches.

Verse 15. Put him into the garden—to dress it, and to keep it.] Though the garden may be supposed to produce all things spontaneously, yet dressing and tilling were afterwards necessary to maintain the different kinds of plants and vegetables in their perfection, and to repress luxuriance. Even in a state of innocence we cannot conceive it possible that man could have been happy if inactive. The structure of his body, as well as of his mind, plainly proves that he was never intended for a merely contemplative life.

Verse 17. Of the tree of the knowledge—thou shalt not eat] This is the first positive precept God gave to man; and it was given as a test of obedience, and a proof of his being in a dependant, probationary state. It was necessary that, while constituted lord of this lower world, he should know that he was only God's viceroy, and must be accountable to him for the use of his mental and corporeal powers, and for the use he made of the different creatures put under his care. As God is sovereign, he has a right to give to his creatures what commands he thinks proper. An intelligent creature, without a law to regulate his conduct, is an absurdity; this would destroy at once the idea of his dependancy and accountability. This rule God gives; and it is no matter of what kind it is, as long as obedience to it is not beyond the powers of the creature who is to obey. God says: There is a certain fruit-bearing tree; thou shalt not eat of its fruit; but of all the other fruits, and they are all that are necessary for thee, thou mayest freely, liberally eat. Had he not an absolute right to say so? And was not man bound to obey?

Thou shalt surely die] Literally, dying thou shalt die. Thou shalt not only die spiritually, by losing the life of God, but from that moment thou shalt become mortal, and shalt continue in a dying state till thou die. This we find literally accomplished; every moment of man's life may be considered as an act of dying, till soul and body are separated.

Verse 18. It is not good that the man should be alone] Only himself. I will make him an help meet for him; a counterpart of himself, one formed from him, and a perfect resemblance of his person. Literally the word signifies one like, or as himself, standing opposite to or before him. And this implies that the woman was to be a perfect resemblance of the man, possessing neither inferiority nor superiority, but being in all things like and equal to himself. As man was made a social creature, it was not proper that he should be alone; for to be alone, i.e. without a matrimonial companion, was not good. Hence we find that celibacy in general is a thing that is not good, whether it be on the side of the man or of the woman.

Verse 20. And Adam gave names to all cattle] Two things God appears to have had in view: 1. To show him with what comprehensive powers of mind his Maker had endowed him; and 2. To show him that no creature yet formed could make him a suitable companion. And that this twofold purpose was answered we shall shortly see; for,

1. Adam gave names; but how? From an intimate knowledge of the nature and properties of each creature, without which he never could have given them such names. This one circumstance is a strong proof of the original perfection and excellence of man, while in a state of innocence.

2. Adam was convinced that none of these creatures could be a suitable companion for him, and that therefore he must continue in a state that was not good, or be a further debtor to the bounty of his Maker; for among all the animals which he had named there was not found an help meet for him.

Verse 21. The Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, &c.] This was neither swoon nor ecstasy, but what our translation very properly terms a deep sleep.

And he took one of his ribs] It is immaterial whether we render teela a rib, or a part of his side, for it may mean either: some part of man was to be used on the occasion, whether bone or flesh it matters not; though it is likely, from verse 23, that a part of both was taken; for Adam, knowing how the woman was formed, said, This is flesh of my flesh, and bone of my bone. God could have formed the woman out of the dust of the earth, as he had formed the man; but had he done so, she must have appeared in his eyes as a distinct being, to whom he had no natural relation. But as God formed her out of a part of the man himself, he saw she was of the same nature, the same identical flesh and blood, and of the same constitution in all respects, and consequently having equal powers, faculties, and rights. This at once insured his affection, and excited his esteem.

Verse 23. Adam said, This is now bone of my bones, &c.] There is a very delicate and expressive meaning in the original which does not appear in our version. It is probable that the creatures passed in pairs before him, and as they passed received their names. To this circumstance the words in this place seem to refer. Instead of this now is, zoth happaam, we should render more literally this turn, this creature, which now passes or appears before me, is flesh of my flesh, &c.

She shall be called Woman] A literal version of the Hebrew would appear strange, and yet a literal version is the only proper one. Ish signifies man, and the word used to express what we term woman is the name with a feminine termination, ishshah, and literally means she-man. Most of the ancient Versions have felt the force of the term, and have endeavoured to express it as literally as possible. Our term is a proper and literal translation of the original, and we may thank the discernment of our Anglo-Saxon ancestors for giving it. Wombman, of which woman is a contraction, means the man with the womb.

Verse 24. Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother] There shall be, by the order of God, a more intimate connexion formed between the man and woman, than can subsist even between parents and children.

And they shall be one flesh.] These words may be understood in a twofold sense. 1. These two shall be one flesh, shall be considered as one body, having no separate or independent rights, privileges, cares, concerns, &c., each being equally interested in all things that concern the marriage state. 2. These two shall be for the production of one flesh, from their union a posterity shall spring, as exactly resembling themselves as they do each other. Our Lord quotes these words, Mat. xix. 5, with some variation from this text: They twain shall be one flesh. So in Mark x. 8. St. Paul quotes it in the same way, 1 Cor. vi. 16, and in Eph. v. 31. The Vulgate Latin, the Septuagint, the Syriac, the Arabic, and the Samaritan, all read the word two. That this is the genuine reading I have no doubt. The word shenehem, they two, or both of them, probably occurred in the 24th verse, and not in the 25th; and a copyist having found that he had written it twice, struck out the word in the 24th verse instead of the 25th. Without the word, some have contended a man may have as many wives as he chooses, as the terms are indefinite, they shall be, &c., but with the word marriage is restricted. A man can have in legal wedlock but one wife at the same time.

We have here the first institution of marriage, and we see in it several particulars worthy of our most serious regard. 1. God pronounces the state of celibacy to be a bad state, or, if the reader please, not a good one. This is God's judgment. Councils, and fathers, and doctors, and synods have given a different judgment; but on such a subject they are worthy of no attention. 2. God made the woman for the man, and thus he has shown us that every son of Adam should be united to a daughter of Eve to the end of the world. See on 1 Cor. vii. 3. God made the woman out of the man, to intimate that the closest union should subsist in the matrimonial connexion, so that the man should ever consider and treat the woman as a part of himself; and on the other hand the woman should consider that the man was not made for her, but that she was made for the man; therefore the wife should see that she reverence her husband. Eph. v. 33. How happy must such a state be where God's institution is properly regarded.

Verse 25. They were both naked, &c.] The weather was perfectly temperate, and therefore they had no need of clothing. And as sin had not yet entered into the world, therefore there was no shame, for shame can only arise from a consciousness of sinful or irregular conduct.

Even in a state of innocence, when all was perfection and excellence, when God was clearly discovered in all his works, every place being his temple, every moment a time of worship, and every object an incitement to religious reverence and adoration—even then, God chose to consecrate a seventh part of time to his more especial worship, and to hallow it unto his own service by a perpetual decree. Had the religious observance of the sabbath been never proclaimed till the proclamation of the law on Mount Sinai, then it might have been conjectured that this, like several other ordinances, was a shadow which must pass away with that dispensation; neither extending to future ages, nor binding on any other people. But this was not so. God gave the sabbath, his first ordinance, to man, while all the nations of the world were seminally included in him, and while he stood the father and representative of the whole human race; therefore the sabbath is not for one nation, for one time, or for one place. It is the fair type of heaven's eternal day.

Of this rest, the garden of Eden appears also to have been a type and pledge; and the institution of marriage, the cause, bond, and cement of the social state, was probably designed to prefigure that harmony, order, and blessedness which must reign in the kingdom of God, of which the condition of our first parents in the garden of paradise is justly supposed to have been an expressive emblem.

CHAPTER III.

Satan, by means of a creature here called the Serpent, deceives Eve, 1-5. Both she and Adam transgress the divine command, and fall into sin and misery, 6, 7. They are summoned before God, and judged, 8-13. The creature called the serpent is degraded and punished, 14. The promise of redemption by the incarnation of Christ, 15. Eve sentenced, 16. Adam sentenced, 17. The ground cursed, and death threatened, 18, 19. Why the woman was called Eve, 20. Adam and Eve clothed with skins, 21. The wretched state of our first parents after their fall, and their expulsion from the garden of Paradise, 22-24.

NOW <sup>a</sup>the serpent was <sup>b</sup>more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. And he said unto the woman, <sup>c</sup>Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?

Vorse 1. Now the serpent was more subtle] That man is in a fallen state, the history of the world, with that of the life and miseries of every human being, establishes beyond successful contradiction. But how, and by what agency, was this brought about? Who was the serpent? of what kind? In what way did he seduce the first happy pair? The whole account is either a simple narrative of facts, or it is an allegory. If it be an historical relation, its literal meaning should be sought out; if it be an allegory, no attempt should be made to explain it, as it would require a direct revelation to ascertain the sense in which it should be understood, for fanciful illustrations are endless. Believing it to be a simple relation of facts, I shall take it up on this ground; and, by a careful examination of the original text, endeavour to fix the meaning, and show the propriety and consistency of the Mosaic account of the Fall of Man. The chief difficulty is found in the question, Who was the agent employed in the seduction of our first parents?

The word in the text which we, following the Septuagint, translate serpent, is nachash; and, according to Luthorf and others, has three meanings in scripture. 1. It signifies to view or observe attentively, to divine or use enchantments, because in them the augurs viewed attentively the flight of birds, the entrails of beasts, the course of the clouds, &c.; and under this head it signifies to acquire knowledge by experience. 2. It signifies brass, brazen, and is translated in our Bible, not only brass, but chains, fetters, fetters of brass, and in several places steel; see 2 Sam. xxii. 35, Job xx. 24, Ps. xviii. 34; and in one place, at least, filthiness or fornication, Ezek. xvi. 36. 3. It signifies a serpent, but of what kind is not determined. In Job xvi. 13 it seems to mean the whale or hippopotamus. In Eccles. x. 11 the nachash is compared to the babblers. In Isa. xxvii. 1, the crocodile or alligator seems particularly meant by the original. And in Isa. lxxv. 25, the same creature is meant as in Gen. iii. 1, for in the words, And dust shall be the serpent's meat, there is an evident allusion to the text of Moses. In Amos ix. 3 the crocodile is evidently intended. From the various acceptations of the word, it appears to be a sort of general term, confined to no one sense. Hence it will be necessary to examine the root accurately, to see if its ideal meaning will enable us to ascertain the animal intended in the text. We have already seen that nachash signifies to view attentively, to acquire knowledge or experience by attentive observation; so nichashti, Gen. xxx. 27: I have learned by experience; and this seems to be its most general meaning in the Bible. The original word is by the Septuagint translated a serpent, not because this was its fixed determinate meaning in the sacred writings, but because it was the best that occurred to the translators. And the New Testament writers, who seldom quote the Old Testament but from the Septuagint translation, and often do not change even a word in their quotations, copy this version in the use of this word. In such an inquiry the Arabic may be expected to afford some help, from its great similarity to the Hebrew. A root in this language, very nearly similar to that in the text, seems to cast considerable light on the subject: chanas, or khanasa, signifies he departed, drew off, lay hid, seduced, slunk away; from this root come akhnas, khanasa, and *khanoo*s, which all signify an ape or satyrus,

2 And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden:

3 <sup>a</sup>But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die.

or any creature of the simia or ape genus. It is very remarkable, also, that from the same root comes khanas, the DEVIL, which appellative he bears from that meaning of khanasa, he drew off, seduced, &c., because he draws men off from righteousness, seduces them from their obedience to God, &c., &c. Is it not strange that the devil and the ape should have the same name, derived from the same root, and that root so very similar to the word in the text? But let us return and consider what is said of the creature in question. Now the nachash was more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. In this account we find, 1. That whatever this nachash was, he stood at the head of all inferior animals for wisdom and understanding. 2. That he walked erect, for this is necessarily implied in his punishment—on thy belly (i. e., on all fours) shalt thou go. 3. That he was endued with the gift of speech, for a conversation is here related between him and the woman. 4. That he was also endued with the gift of reason, for we find him reasoning and disputing with Eve. 5. That these things were common to this creature, the woman no doubt having often seen him walk erect, talk, and reason; and therefore she testifies no kind of surprise when he accosts her in the language related in the text; and indeed, from the manner in which this is introduced, it appears to be only a part of a conversation that had passed between them on the occasion: Yea, hath God said, &c.

Now I apprehend that none of these things can be spoken of a serpent of any species. 1. None of them ever did or ever can walk erect. The very name serpent comes from serpo, to creep, and therefore to such it could be neither curse nor punishment to go on their bellies, i. e. to creep on, as they had done from their creation, and must do while their race endures. 2. They have no organs for speech, or any kind of articulate sound; they can only hiss. God did not qualify this creature with speech for the occasion; on the contrary, the text intimates that speech and reason were natural to the nachash. Nor can I find that the serpentine genus are remarkable for intelligence. All these things considered, we are obliged to seek for some other word to designate the nachash in the text than the word serpent; and it appears to me that a creature of the ape or ouranoutang kind is here intended; and that Satan made use of this creature as the most proper instrument for the accomplishment of his murderous purposes against the life and soul of man. Such a creature answers to every part of the description in the text: it is evident, from the structure of its limbs and their muscles, that it might have been originally designed to walk erect, and that nothing less than a sovereign controlling power could induce it to put down hands in every respect formed like those of man, and walk like those creatures whose claw-armed paws prove them to have been designed to walk on all fours. The subtlety, cunning, endlessly varied pranks and tricks of these creatures, show them, even now, to be more subtle and more intelligent than any other creature, man alone excepted. Being obliged now to walk on all fours, and gather their food from the ground, they are religiously obliged to eat the dust. Add to this their utter aversion to walk upright; it requires the utmost discipline to bring them to it, and scarcely anything irritates them more than to be obliged to do it.

4 * And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die:

5 For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then <sup>b</sup> your eyes shall be opened; and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.

Should any person object against my conclusions, because apparently derived from an Arabic word which is not exactly similar to the Hebrew, he is welcome to take up the Hebrew root only, which signifies to gaze to view attentively, pry into, inquire narrowly, &c., and consider the passage that appears to compare the nachash to the babbling—Eccles. x. 11—and he will soon find, if he have any acquaintance with creatures of this genus, that for earnest, attentive watching, looking, &c., and for chattering or babbling, they have no fellows in the animal world.

I have spent the longer time on this subject, 1. Because it is exceedingly obscure; 2. Because no interpretation hitherto given of it has afforded me the smallest satisfaction; 3. Because I think the above mode of accounting for every part of the whole transaction is consistent and satisfactory, and in my opinion removes many embarrassments, and solves the chief difficulties. I think it can be no solid objection to the above mode of solution that Satan, in different parts of the New Testament, is called the serpent, the serpent that deceived Eve by his subtlety, the old serpent, &c., for we have already seen that the New Testament writers have borrowed the word from the Septuagint, and the Septuagint themselves use it in a vast variety and latitude of meaning; and surely the uran-ourang is as likely to be the animal in question as nachash and ophis are likely to mean at once a snake, a crocodile, a hippopotamus, fornication, a chain, a pair of fetters, a piece of brass, a piece of steel, and a conjuror. [It is scarcely necessary to say that Dr. Clarke's theory of the nachash has found little favour among critics. The ordinary sense of the word is without doubt that which the Authorized Version gives.]

Yea, hath God said! This seems to be the continuation of a discourse of which the preceding part is not given, and a proof that the creature in question was endued with the gift of reason and speech, for no surprise is testified on the part of Eve.

Verse 3. Neither shall ye touch it! Did not the woman add this to what God had before spoken?

Verse 4. Ye shall not surely die! The tempter, through the nachash, insinuates the impossibility of her dying, as if he had said, God has created thee immortal, thy death therefore is impossible; and God knows this, for as thou livest by the tree of life, so shalt thou get increase of wisdom by the tree of knowledge.

Verse 5. Your eyes shall be opened! Your understanding shall be greatly enlightened and improved; and ye shall be as gods, like God, so the word should be translated; for what idea could our first parents have of gods before idolatry could have had any being, because sin had not yet entered into the world? The Syriac has the word in the singular number.

Verse 6. The tree was good for food! Exactly what the apostle calls the desire of the flesh; the tree was good for food: the desire of the eye; it was pleasant to the sight: and the pride of life; it was a tree to be desired to make one wise. Those who think that Adam was created so perfect as to preclude the possibility of his increase in knowledge, have taken a very false view of the subject. We shall certainly be convinced that our first parents were in a state of sufficient perfection when we consider, 1. That they were endued with a vast capacity to obtain knowledge. 2. That all the means of information were within their reach. 3. That there was no hinderance to the most direct conception of occurring truth. 4. That all the objects of knowledge, whether natural or moral, were ever in hand. 5. That they had the strongest propensity to know; and 6. The greatest pleasure in knowing. We see at once how transgression came; it was natural for them to desire to be increasingly wise. God had implanted of the fruit thereof; <sup>a</sup> and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her, <sup>c</sup> and he did eat.

7 And <sup>b</sup> the eyes of them both were opened, <sup>d</sup> and they knew that they were naked; and they sewed fig-leaves together, and made themselves <sup>e</sup> aprons.

this desire in their minds; but he showed them that this desire should be gratified in a certain way; that prudence and judgment should always regulate it; that they should carefully examine what God had opened to their view; and should not pry into what he chose to conceal. There are doubtless many subjects which angels are capable of knowing, and which God chooses to conceal even from them, because that knowledge would tend neither to their perfection nor happiness.

Verse 7. The eyes of them both were opened! They now had a sufficient discovery of their sin and folly in disobeying the command of God, they could discern between good and evil; and what was the consequence? Confusion and shame were engendered, because innocence was lost and guilt contracted.

Let us review the whole of this melancholy business, the fall and its effects.

1. From the New Testament we learn that Satan associated himself with the creature which we term the serpent, in order to seduce and ruin mankind; 2 Cor. xi. 3; Rev. xii. 9, xx. 2. 2. That this creature was the most suitable to his purpose, as being the most subtle of all beasts of the field. 3. As he knew that while they depended on God they could not be ruined, he therefore endeavoured to seduce them from this dependence. 4. He does this by working on that propensity of the mind to desire an increase of knowledge with which God, for the most gracious purposes, had endued it. 5. In order to succeed, he insinuates that God through motives of envy had given the prohibition. 6. As their present state of blessedness must be inexpressibly dear to them, he endeavours to persuade them that they could not fall from this state: Ye shall not surely die—ye shall not only retain your present blessedness, but it shall be greatly increased; a temptation by which he has ever since fatally succeeded in the ruin of multitudes of souls, whom he persuaded that being once right they could never finally go wrong. 7. As he kept the unlawfulness of the means proposed out of sight, they listened, and, fixing their eye only on the promised good, neglecting the positive command, and determining to become wise and independent at all events, they took of the fruit, and did eat.

Let us now examine the effects.

1. Their eyes were opened, and they saw they were naked. They saw that they were stripped of their excellence; that they had lost their innocence; and that they had fallen into a state of indigence and danger. 2. Though their eyes were opened yet their mind was clouded, and their judgment confused. It was dishonourable and shameful to break the commandment of God; but it was neither to go naked, when clothing was not necessary. 3. They seem in a moment, not only to have lost sound judgment, but also reflection; a short time before Adam was so wise that he could name all the creatures brought before him, according to their respective natures and qualities; now, he does not know the first principle concerning the divine nature, that it knows all things, and that it is omnipresent, therefore he endeavours to hide himself among the trees from the eye of the all-seeing God! 4. This account could never have been credited had not the indisputable proofs and evidences of it been continued by uninterrupted succession to the present time. All the descendants of this first guilty pair resemble their degenerate ancestors, and copy their conduct. The original mode of transgression is still continued, and the original sin in consequence.

Verse 8. The voice of the Lord! The voice is properly used here, for as God is an infinite Spirit, and cannot be confined to any form, so he can have no personal appearance. It is very likely that God used to converse with them in the sence of the LORD God amongst the trees of the garden.

9 And the LORD God called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou?

10 And he said, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid, because I was naked; and I hid myself.

11 And he said, Who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat?

12 And the man said, The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat.

13 And the LORD God said unto the woman, What is this that thou hast done? And the woman said, The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

14 And the LORD God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon garden, and that the usual time was the decline of the day, lervach haiyom, in the evening breeze; and probably this was the time that our first parents employed in the more solemn acts of their religious worship, at which God was ever present. The time for this solemn worship is again come, and God is in his place; but Adam and Eve have sinned, and therefore, instead of being found in the place of worship, are hidden among the trees! Reader, how often has this been thy case?

Verse 10. I was afraid, because I was naked] See the immediate consequences of sin. 1. SHAME, because of the ingratitude marked in the rebellion, and because that in aiming to be like God they were now sunk into a state of the greatest wretchedness. 2. FEAR, because they saw they had been deceived by Satan, and were exposed to that death and punishment from which he had promised them an exemption. Shame and fear were the first fruits of sin, and fruits which it has invariably produced from the first transgression to the present time.

Verse 12. And the man said, &c.] Adam is obliged to acknowledge his transgression; and he does this in such a way as to shift off the blame from himself, and lay it upon God and upon the woman! This woman whom thou didst give to be with me to be my companion (for so the word is repeatedly used), she gave me, and I did eat. I have no farther blame in this transgression; I did not pluck the fruit; she took it and gave it to me. When the woman is questioned she lays the blame upon God and the serpent. Thou didst make him much wiser than thou didst make me, and therefore my simplicity and ignorance were overcome by his superior wisdom and subtlety; I can have no fault here, the fault is his, and his who made him so wise and me so ignorant. Their posterity copy their example. How few ingenuously confess their own sin! They are continually making excuses for their crimes; the strength and subtlety of the tempter, the natural weakness of their own minds, the unfavourable circumstances in which they were placed, &c., &c., are all pleaded as excuses for their sins, and thus the possibility of repentance is precluded; for till a man take his sin to himself, till he acknowledge that he alone is guilty, he cannot be humbled, and consequently cannot be saved. Reader, till thou accuse thyself, and thyself only, and feel that thou alone art responsible for all thy iniquities, there is no hope of thy salvation.

Verse 14. And the Lord God said unto the serpent] The tempter is not asked why he deceived the woman; he cannot roll the blame on any other. His fault admits of no excuse, and therefore God begins to pronounce sentence on him first. And here we must consider a twofold sentence, one on Satan and the other on the agent he employed. The nashash, whom I suppose to have been at the head of all the inferior animals, and in a sort of society and intimacy with man, is to be greatly thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life:

15 And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

16 Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

17 And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake: in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life;

18 Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field;

19 In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, degraded, entirely banished from human society, and deprived of the gift of speech. Thou shalt be considered the most contemptible of animals; thou shalt no longer walk erect, but mark the ground equally with thy hands and feet; though formerly possessed of the faculty to distinguish, choose, and cleanse thy food, thou shalt feed henceforth like the most stupid and abject quadruped, through all the innumerable generations of thy species.

Verse 15. I will put enmity between thee and the woman] This has been generally supposed to apply to a certain enmity subsisting between men and serpents; but this is rather a fancy than a reality. It is yet to be discovered that the serpentine race have any peculiar enmity against mankind, nor is there any proof that men hate serpents more than they do other noxious animals. But we are not to look for merely literal meanings here; it is evident that Satan, who actuated this creature, is alone intended in this part of the prophetic declaration. God in his endless mercy has put enmity between men and him; so that, though all mankind love his service, yet all invariably hate himself. Were it otherwise, who could be saved? But there is a deeper meaning in the text than even this, especially in these words, it shall bruise thy head, or rather, hu, HE; who? The seed of the woman; the person is to come by the woman, and by her alone, without the concurrence of man. Therefore the address is not to Adam and Eve, but to Eve alone; and it was in consequence of this purpose of God that Jesus Christ was born of a virgin; this, and this alone, is what is implied in the promise of the seed of the woman bruising the head of the serpent. Jesus Christ died to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, and to destroy him who had the power of death, that is, the devil. Thus he bruises his head—destroys his power and lordship over mankind, turning them from the power of Satan unto God; Acts xxvi. 18. And Satan bruises his heel—God so ordered it, that the salvation of man could only be brought about by the death of Christ; and even the spiritual seed of our blessed Lord have the heel often bruised, as they suffer persecution, temptation, &c., which may be all that is intended by this part of the prophecy.

Verse 16. Unto the woman he said] She being second in the transgression, is brought up the second to receive her condemnation, and to hear her punishment: I will greatly multiply, or multiplying I will multiply; i. e. I will multiply thy sorrows, and multiply those sorrows by other sorrows, and this during conception and pregnancy, and particularly so in parturition or child-bearing. And this curse has fallen in a heavier degree on the woman than on any other female. Thy desire shall be to thy husband—thou shalt not be able to shun the great pain and peril of child-bearing, for thy desire, thy appetite, shall be to thy husband; and he shall rule over thee, though at their creation both were formed with equal rights; but subjection to the will of her husband is one part of her curse.

Verse 17. Unto Adam he said] The man being the last in the transgression, is brought up last to receive his sentence. Cursed is the ground for thy sake—from henceforth its fertility shall be greatly impaired; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it—be in continual perplexity concerning the seed-time and the harvest, the cold and the heat, the wet and the dry.

Verse 18. Thorns also and thistles, &c.] In the curse pronounced on the ground, there is much more implied than generally appears. The amazing fertility of some of the most common thistles and thorns renders them the most proper instruments for the fulfilment of this sentence against man. Thistles multiply enormously; a species called the Carolina sylvestris bears ordinarily from 20 to 40 heads, each containing from 100 to 150 seeds.

Another species, called the Acanthum vulgare, produces above 100 heads, each containing from 300 to 400 seeds. Suppose we say that these thistles produce at a medium only 80 heads, and that each contains only 300 seeds, the first crop from these would amount to 24,000. The fourth year's growth from these will amount to 7,962,624,000,000,000,000, a progeny more than sufficient to stock, not only the surface of the whole world, but of all the planets in the solar system, so that no other plant or vegetable could possibly grow, allowing but the space of one square foot for each plant.

As to THORNS, the bramble, which occurs so commonly and is so mischievous, is a sufficient proof how well the means are calculated to secure the end. The genista, or spinosa vulgaris, is allowed to be one of the most mischievous shrubs on the face of the earth.

Verse 19. In the sweat of thy face] Though the whole body may be thrown into a profuse sweat, if hard labour be long continued, yet the face or forehead is the first part whence this sweat begins to issue. Thus then the very commencement of every man's labour may put him in mind of his sin and its consequences.

Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.] God had said that in the day they ate of the forbidden fruit, dying they should die—they should then become mortal and continue under the influence of a great variety of unfriendly agencies, till the spirit, finding its earthly house no longer tenable, should return to God who gave it; and the body, being decomposed, should be reduced to its primitive dust. It is evident from this that man would have been immortal had he never transgressed, and that this state of continual life and health depended on his obedience to his Maker.

Verse 20. And Adam called his wife's name Eve; because she was the mother of all living.] Our translators often follow the Septuagint; it is a pity they had not done so here, as the Septuagint translation is literal and correct: "And Adam called his wife's name Life, because she was the mother of all the living." This is a proper and faithful representation of the Hebrew text, for the Chavvah of the original, which we have corrupted into Eve, a word destitute of all meaning, answers exactly to the Ḳayn of the Septuagint, both signifying life; as does also the Hebrew chai to the Greek ζωων, both of which signify the living. Adam called his wife's name Life, because she was to be the mother of all human beings, and because she was to be the mother of HIM who was to give life to a world dead in trespasses, and dead in sins, Eph. ii. 1, &c.

Verse 21. God made coats of skins] It is very likely that the skins out of which their clothing was made were taken off animals whose blood had been poured out as a sin-offering to God; for, as we find Cain and Abel offering sacrifices to God, we may fairly presume that God had now, lest he put forth his hand, 'and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever; given them instructions on this head; nor is it likely that the notion of a sacrifice could have ever occurred to the mind of man without an express revelation from God. Hence we may safely infer, 1. That as Adam and Eve needed this clothing as soon as they fell, and death had not as yet made any ravages in the animal world, it is most likely that the skins were taken off victims offered under the direction of God himself, and in faith of HIM who, in the fulness of time, was to make an atonement by his death. And 2. It seems reasonable also that this matter should be brought about in such a way that Satan and death should have no triumph, when the very first death that took place in the world was an emblem and type of that death which should conquer Satan, destroy his empire, reconcile God to man, convert man to God, sanctify human nature, and prepare it for heaven.

23 Therefore the LORD God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, <sup>a</sup>to till the ground from whence he was taken.

24 So he drove out the man; and he placed <sup>b</sup>at the east of the garden of Eden <sup>c</sup>Cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life.

Isa. xix. 12. xlvii. 12, 13. Jer. xxii. 23.—<sup>a</sup> Ch. ii. 9.—<sup>b</sup> Ch. ii. 5. iv. 2. ix. 20. Eccles. v. 9.—<sup>c</sup> Ch. ii. 8.—<sup>d</sup> Exod. xxv. 2, 20. 1 Kings vi. 25-28. Josh. v. 13. 1's. civ. 4. Heb. i. 7.

Verse 22. Behold, the man is become as one of us] The Hebrew has hayah, which is the third person preterite tense, and signifies was, not is. The Samaritan text, the Samaritan Version, the Syriac, and the Septuagint, have the same tense. These lead us to a very different sense, and indicate that there is an ellipsis of some words which must be supplied in order to make the sense complete. Some suppose that his removal from the tree of life was in mercy to prevent a second temptation. He before imagined that he could gain an increase of wisdom by eating of the tree of knowledge, and Satan would be disposed to tempt him to endeavour to elude the sentence of death, by eating of the tree of life. Others imagine that the words are spoken ironically. But God is ever consistent with himself; and surely his infinite pity prohibited the use of either sarcasm or irony, in speaking of so dreadful a catastrophe, that was in the end to occasion the agony and bloody sweat, the cross and passion, the death and burial, of Him in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, Col. ii. 9.

Verse 24. So he drove out the man] Three things are noted here: 1. God's displeasure against sinful man, evidenced by his expelling him from this place of blessedness; 2. Man's unworthiness for the place, of which he had rendered himself unworthy by his ingratitude and transgression; and 3. His reluctance to leave this place of happiness. He was, as we may naturally conclude, unwilling to depart, and God drove him out.

He placed at the East] Or before the garden of Eden, before what may be conceived its gate or entrance; THE cherubim. Hebrew plurals in the masculine end in general in im: to add an s to this when we introduce such words into English, is very improper; therefore the word should be written cherubim, not cherubims. But what were these? They are utterly unknown. From the description in Exod. xxvi. 1, 31; 1 Kings vi. 29, 32; 2 Chron. iii. 14, it appears that the cherubs were sometimes represented with two faces namely, those of a lion and of a man; but from Ezek. i. 5, &c., x. 20, 21, we find that they had four faces and four wings; the faces were those of a man, a lion, an ox, and an eagle; but it seems there was but one body to these heads. The two-faced cherubs were such as were represented on the curtains and veil of the tabernacle, and on the wall, doors, and veil of the temple; those with four faces appeared only in the Holy of Holies.

The word kerub never appears as a verb in the Hebrew Bible, and therefore is justly supposed to be a word compounded of ke, a particle of resemblance, like to, like as, and rab, he was great, powerful, &c. Hence it is very likely that the cherubs to whatever order of being they belonged, were emblems of the ALL-MIGHTY, and were those creatures by whom he produced the great effects of his power. These angelic beings were for a time employed in guarding the entrance to Paradise, and keeping the way of, or road to the tree of life. This, I say, for a time; for it is very probable that God soon removed the tree of life, and abolished the garden, so that its situation could never after be positively ascertained.

By the flaming sword turning every way, or flame folding back upon itself, we may understand the formidable appearances which these cherubim assumed, in order to render the passage to the tree of life inaccessible.

To what has already been said on the awful contents of this chapter, I can add little that can either set it in a clearer light, or make its solemn subject more impressive. How abominable must sin be in the sight of God, when it has not only defaced his own image from the soul of man, but has also become a source of natural and moral evil throughout every part of the globe! How wonderful is the economy of God! That which entered into the world as one of the prime fruits and effects of sin, is now an instrument in his hands to prevent the extension of its contagion. If men were permitted to live nearly a thousand years to mature and perfect their infectious and destructive counsels, what a sum of iniquity and ruin would the face of the earth present! Even while they are laying plans to extend the empire of death, God, by the very means of death itself, prevents the completion of their pernicious and diabolic designs. Thus what man, by his wilful obstinacy, does not permit grace to correct and restrain, God, by his sovereign power, brings in death to control.

Life and immortality are, however, brought to light by the gospel; and he only who keepeth the sayings of the Son of God shall live for ever. Though the body is dead—consigned to death, because of sin, yet the spirit is life because of righteousness; and on those who are influenced by this Spirit of righteousness, the second death shall have no power.

CHAPTER IV.

The birth, trade, and religion of Cain and Abel, 1-7. Cain murders his brother Abel, 8. God calls him into judgment for it, 9, 10. He is cursed, 11, 12. He despairs, 13, 14. A promise given him of preservation, and a mark set on him to prevent his being killed, 15. He departs from God's presence, 16. Has a son, whom he calls Enoch; and builds a city, which he calls after his name, 17. Cain has several children, among whom are Lamech, the first bigamist, 18, 19. Jubal, who taught the use of tents and feeding cattle, 20. Jubal, the inventor of musical instruments, 21. Tubal-cain, the inventor of smith-work, 22. Strange speech of Lamech to his wives, 23, 24. Seth born to Adam and Eve in the place of Abel, 25. Enoch born, and the worship of God restored, 26.

AND Adam knew Eve his wife; and she conceived, and bare <sup>a</sup>Cain, and said, I have gotten a man from the LORD.

Verse 1. I have gotten a man from the Lord.] Cain, signifies acquisition; hence Eve says kanithi, I have gotten or acquired a man, eth Yehovah, the Lord. Most expositors think that Eve imagined Cain to be the promised seed that should bruise the head of the serpent. This exposition really seems too refined for that period. It is very likely that she meant no more than to acknowledge that it was through God's peculiar blessing that she was enabled to conceive and bring forth a son, and that she had now a well-grounded hope that the race of man should be continued on the earth. Unless she had been under divine inspiration she could not have called her son (even supposing him to be the promised seed) Jehovah; and that she was not under such an influence her mistake sufficiently proves, for Cain, so far from being the Messiah, was of the wicked one; 1 John iii. 12. We may therefore suppose that eth Yehovah, THE LORD, is an elliptical form of expression for meeth Yehovah, FROM THE LORD, or through the divine blessing.

Verse 2. And she again bare his brother Abel.] Literally, She added to bear his brother. From the very face of this account it appears evident that Cain and Abel were twins. [This theory is not sustained by the original.]

Abel was a keeper of sheep.] Adam was originally a gardener, Abel a shepherd, and Cain an agriculturist or farmer. These were the three primitive employments, and, I may add, the most rational, and consequently the best calculated to prevent strife and an immoderate love of the world.

Verse 3. In process of time.] Mikkets yamim, at the end of days. Some think the anniversary of the creation to be here intended; it is more probable that it means the sabbath, on which Adam and his family undoubtedly offered oblations to God, as the divine worship was certainly instituted, and no doubt the sabbath properly observed in that family. This worship was, in its original institution, very simple. It appears to have consisted of two parts: 1. Thanksgiving to God as the author and dispenser of all the bounties of nature, and oblations indicative of that gratitude. 2. Piacular sacrifices to his justice and holiness, implying a conviction of their own sinfulness, confession of transgression, and faith in the promised Deliverer. If we collate the passage here with the apostle's allusion to it, Heb. xi. 4, we shall see cause to form this conclusion.

4 And Abel, he also brought of <sup>g</sup>the firstlings of his <sup>h</sup>flock, and of the fat thereof. And the LORD had <sup>i</sup>respect unto Abel and to his offering;

Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering.] The word minchah is explained, Lev. ii. 1, &c., to be an offering of fine flour, with oil and frankincense. It was in general a eucharistic or gratitude offering, and is simply what is implied in the fruits of the ground brought by Cain to the Lord, by which he testified his belief in him as the Lord of the universe, and the dispenser of secular blessings.

Verse 4. Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock.] Dr. Kennicott contends that the words he also brought, should be translated, Abel brought it also, i.e. a minchah or gratitude offering; and besides this he brought of the first-born of his flock, and it was by this alone that he acknowledged himself sinner, and professed faith in the promised Messiah. To this circumstance the apostle seems evidently to allude, Heb. xi. 4: By FAITH Abel offered  $\pi\lambda\epsilon\iota\omega\alpha$   $\theta\upsilon\sigma\iota\alpha$ , a MORE or GREATER sacrifice; not a more excellent (for this is no meaning of the word  $\pi\lambda\epsilon\iota\omega\upsilon$ ), which leads us to infer, according to Dr. Kennicott, that Abel, besides his minchah, brought also θυσία, a victim, to be slain for his sins; and this he chose out of the first-born of his flock, which, in the order of God, was a representation of the Lamb of God that was to take away the sin of the world; and what confirms this exposition more is the 5 But unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect. And Cain was very wroth, <sup>a</sup>and his countenance fell.

6 And the LORD said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen?

7 If thou doest well, shalt thou <sup>b</sup>not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door. And <sup>c</sup>unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him.

8 And Cain talked with Abel his brother: and it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and <sup>d</sup>slew him.

9 And the LORD said unto Cain, <sup>e</sup>Where is Abel thy brother? And he said, 'I know not: Am I my brother's keeper?

observation of the apostle: God testifying <sup>g</sup>tois <sup>h</sup>doulos, of his GIFTS, which certainly shows he brought more than one. According to this interpretation, Cain, the father of Deism, not acknowledging the necessity of a vicarious sacrifice, nor feeling his need of an atonement, according to the dictates of his natural religion, brought a minchah or eucharistic offering to the God of the universe. Abel, not less grateful, brought a similar offering, and by adding a sacrifice to it, acknowledged himself a sinner, and thus, deprecating the divine displeasure, showed forth the death of Christ till he came. Thus his offerings were accepted, while those of Cain were rejected; for this, as the apostle says, was done by FAITH, and therefore he obtained witness that he was righteous, or a justified person, God testifying with his gifts, the thank-offering and the sin-offering, by accepting them, that faith in the promised seed was the only way in which he could accept the services and offerings of mankind.

Verse 5. Unto Cain] As being unconscious of his sinfulness, and consequently unhumbled, and to his offering, as not being accompanied, as Abel's was, with faith and a sacrifice for sin, he had not respect. Of the manner in which God testified his approbation we are not informed; it was probably, as in the case of Elijah, by sending down fire from heaven, and consuming the sacrifice.

Verse 6. Why art thou wroth?] This was designed as a gracious warning, and a preventive of the meditated crime.

Verse 7. If thou doest well] That which is right in the sight of God, shalt thou not be accepted? Does God reject any man who serves him in simplicity and godly sincerity? But if thou doest not well, have recourse to thy Maker for mercy; a sin-offering lieth at thy door; an animal proper to be offered as an atonement for sin is now couching at the door of thy fold.

The words chattah, and chattaah, frequently signify sin; but I have observed more than a hundred places in the Old Testament where they are used for sin-offering, and translated ἀπαρτία by the Septuagint, which is the term the apostle uses, 2 Cor. v. 21: He hath made him to be sin (ἀπαρτία), A SIN-OFFERING for us, who knew no sin. How many sinners perish, not because there is not a Saviour able and willing to save them, but because they will not use that which is within their power.

Unto thee shall be his desire, &c.] These words spoken of Abel's submission to Cain as his superior, are spoken to remove Cain's envy.

Verse 8. Cain talked with Abel his brother] Or rather Cain said to Abel, &c. In the most correct editions of the Hebrew Bible there is a small space left here in the text and a circular mark which refers to a note in the margin, intimating that there is a hiatus or deficiency in the verse. Now this deficiency is supplied in the principal ancient Versions and in the Samaritan text. In this the supplied words are, LET US WALK OUT INTO THE FIELD. This addition is completely lost from every MS. of the Pentateuch now known; and yet it is sufficiently evident from the Samaritan text, the Samaritan Version, the Syriac, Septuagint, and Vulgate, 10 And he said, What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's <sup>a</sup>blood <sup>b</sup>crieth unto me from the ground.

11 And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand;

12 When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength; a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.

13 And Cain said unto the LORD, <sup>c</sup>'My punishment is greater than I can bear.

that it was in the most authentic copies of the Hebrew before and some time since the Christian era. The words may therefore be safely considered as a part of the sacred text, and with them the whole passage reads clear and consistently: "And Cain said unto Abel his brother, Let us go out into the field: and it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up," &c.

It is here supposed that the first murder committed in the world was the consequence of a religious dispute; however this may have been, millions since have been sacrificed to prejudice, bigotry, and intolerance. Here, certainly, originated the many-headed monster, religious persecution; the spirit of the wicked one in his followers impels them to afflict and destroy all those who are partakers of the Spirit of God. Every persecutor is a legitimate son of the old murderer. This is the first triumph of Satan; it is not merely a death that he has introduced, but a violent one, as the first-fruits of sin. It is not the death of an ordinary person, but of the most holy man then in being; it is not brought about by the providence of God, or by a gradual failure and destruction of the earthly fabric, but by a violent separation of body and soul; it is not done by a common enemy, from whom nothing better could be expected, but by the hand of a brother, and for no other reason but because the object of his envy was more righteous than himself. Alas! how exceeding sinful does sin appear in its first manifestation!

Verse 10. The voice of thy brother's blood] Some think that by the voice of thy brother's blood the cries of Abel's widow and children are to be understood, as it is very probable that he was father of a family; indeed his occupation and sacrifices seem to render this probable, and probability is all we can expect on such a subject. God represents these as calling aloud for the punishment of the murderer; and it is evident that Cain expected to fall by the hands of some persons who from his consanguinity, had the right of the avenger of blood; for now that the murder is found out, he expects to suffer death for it. See ver. 14.

Verse 12. A fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be] Thou shalt be expelled from the presence of God, and from thy family connections, and shalt have no fixed secure residence in any place. The Septuagint render this, thou shalt be groaning and trembling upon the earth—the horror of thy crime shall ever haunt thee, and thou shalt never have any well-grounded hope that God will remit the punishment thou deservest. No state out of endless perdition can be considered more awful than this.

Verse 13. My punishment is greater than I can bear.] The margin reads, Mine iniquity is greater than that it may be forgiven. The original words may be translated, Is my crime too great to be forgiven? Words which we may presume he uttered on the verge of black despair. It is most probable that avon signifies rather the crime than the punishment; in this sense it is used Lev. xxvi. 41, 43, 1 Sam. xxviii. 10, 2 Kings vii. 9; and nasa signifies to remit or forgive. The marginal reading is, therefore, to be preferred to that in the text.

Verse 14. Behold thou hast driven me out] In verses 11, 12, God states two parts of Cain's punishment: 1. The 15 And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him <sup>a</sup>seven-fold. And the Lord <sup>b</sup>set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

16 And Cain <sup>c</sup>went out from the presence of the Lord, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.

name of the one was Adah, and the name of the other Zillah.

20 And Adah bare Jabal: he was the father of such as <sup>g</sup>dwell in tents, and of such as have cattle.

21 And his brother's name was Jubal: he was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ.

22 And Zillah, she also bare Tubal-cain, an <sup>h</sup>instructor of every artificer in brass and iron: and the sister of Tubal-cain was Naamah.

23 And Lamech said unto his wives, Adah and Zillah, hear my voice; ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech: for <sup>i</sup>I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man <sup>j</sup>to my hurt.

24 <sup>k</sup>If Cain shall be avenged seven-fold, truly Lamech seventy and seven-fold.

ground was cursed, so that it was not to yield any adequate recompence for his most careful tillage. 2. He was to be a fugitive and a vagabond, having no place in which he could dwell with comfort or security. To these Cain himself adds others. 1. His being hidden from the face of God; which appears to signify his being expelled from that particular place where God had manifested his presence, in or contiguous to Paradise, whither our first parents resorted as to an oracle, and where they offered their daily adorations. 2. The continual apprehension of being slain, as all the inhabitants of the earth were at that time of the same family, the parents themselves still alive, and each having a right to kill this murderer of his relative. 3. The terrors of a guilty conscience; his awful apprehension of God's judgments, and of being everlastingly banished from the beatific vision.

Verse 15. The Lord set a mark upon Cain] What this mark was, has given rise to a number of frivolously curious conjectures. Some say he was paralytic; this seems to have arisen from the version of the Septuagint. The Targum of Jonathan ben Uzziel says the sign was probably one of the letters of the word Jehovah. The author of Bereshith Rabba, a comment on Genesis, says the mark was a circle of the sun rising upon him. Abravanel says the sign was Abel's dog, which constantly accompanied him. Some of the doctors in the Talmud say that it was the letter tau marked on his forehead, which signified his contrition, as it is the first letter in the word teshubah, repentance. Rabbi Joseph, wiser than the rest, says it was a long horn growing out of his forehead!

The Hebrew word oth, which we translate a mark, signifies a sign or token. Thus, Gen. ix. 13, the bow was to be leath, for a sign or token that the world should not be destroyed; therefore the words, And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, should be translated, And the Lord appointed to Cain a token or sign, to convince him that no person should be permitted to slay him. Some think that he did repent and find mercy. I can only say this was possible. Most people who read this account wonder why Cain should dread being killed, when it does not appear to them that there were any inhabitants on the earth at that time besides himself and his parents. To correct this mistake, let it be observed that the death of Abel took place in the one hundred and twenty-eighth or one hundred and twenty-ninth year of the world. Now, supposing that Adam at one hundred and thirty years of age had one hundred and thirty children, which is quite possible, and each of these a child at sixty-five years of age, and one in each successive year, the whole, in the one hundred and thirtieth year of the world, would amount to one thousand two hundred and nineteen persons; a number sufficient to found several villages, and to excite the apprehensions under which Cain appeared at this time to labour.

Verse 17. She—bare Enoch] As Chanoch signifies instructed, dedicated, or initiated, and especially in sacred things, it may be considered some proof of Cain's repentance, that he appears to have dedicated this son to God, who, in his father's stead, might minister in the sacerdotal office, from which Cain, by his crime, was for ever excluded.

Verse 19. Lamech took—two wives] He was the first who dared to reverse the order of God by introducing polygamy.

Verse 20. Jabal—was the father] The inventor or teacher, for so the word is understood, 1 Sam. x. 12. He was the first who invented tent-making, and the breeding and managing of cattle; or he was, in these respects, the most eminent in that time. Though Abel was a shepherd, it is not likely he was such on an extensive scale.

Verse 21. Jubal—the father] i.e. The inventor of musical instruments, such as the kinnor, which we translate harp, and the ugab, which we render organ; it is very likely that both words are generic, the former including under it all stringed instruments, and the latter all wind instruments.

Verse 22. Tubal-cain] The first smith on record, who taught how to make warlike instruments and domestic utensils out of brass and iron. Agricultural instruments must have been in use long before, for Cain was a tiller of the ground, and so was Adam, and they could not have cultivated the ground without spades, hooks, &c.

Of Naamah nothing more is spoken in the scriptures; but the Targum of Jonathan ben Uzziel makes her the inventress of funeral songs and lamentations. R. S. Jarchi says she was the wife of Noh, and quotes Bereshith Rabba in support of the opinion. Some of the Jewish doctors say her name is recorded in scripture because she was an upright and chaste woman; but others affirm that the whole world wandered after her, and that of her evil spirits were born into the world.

Verse 23. And Lamech said unto his wives] The speech of Lamech to his wives is in hemistichs in the original, and consequently, as nothing of this kind occurs before this time, it is very probably the oldest piece of poetry in the world.

The following is, as nearly as possible, a literal translation:

“And Lamech said unto his wives,
Adah and Zillah, hear ye my voice;
Wives of Lamech, hearken to my speech;
For I have slain a man for wounding me,
And a young man for having bruised me.
If Cain shall be avenged seven-fold,
Also Lamech seventy and seven.”

It is supposed that Lamech had slain a man in his own defence, and that his wives being alarmed lest the kindred of the deceased should seek his life in return, to quiet their fears he makes this speech, in which he endeavours to prove that there was no room for fear on this account; for if the slayer of the wilful murderer, Cain, should suffer a seven-fold punishment, surely he who should kill Lamech for having slain a man in self-defence, might expect a seventy-seven-fold punishment. If the words be read interrogatively, as they certainly may, the sense will be much clearer, and some of the difficulties will be removed:

“Have I slain a man, that I should be wounded?
Or a young man, that I should be bruised?”

But this supposes some previous reason or conversation.

Verse 25. God—hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel] Eve must have received on this occasion some divine communication, else how could she have known that this son was appointed in the place of Abel, to continue that holy line by which the Messiah was to come? From this we see that the line of the Messiah was determined from the beginning, and that it was not first fixed in the days of Abraham; for the promise was then only renewed, and that branch of his family designated by which the sacred line was to be continued. And it is worthy of remark that Seth's posterity alone continued after the flood, when all the other families of the earth were destroyed, Noah being the tenth descendant from Adam through Seth.

25 And Adam knew his wife again; and she bare a son, and <sup>a</sup>called his name <sup>b</sup>Seth: For God, said she, hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew.

Particular care was taken that, where there were two or more sons in a family, the one through whom God particularly designed to bring his Son into the world was, by some special providence, pointed out. Thus, in the family of Adam, Seth was chosen; in the family of Noah, Shem; in the family of Abraham, Isaac; and in that of David, Solomon and Nathan. All these things God watched over by an especial providence from the beginning, that when Jesus Christ should come it might be clearly seen that he came by the promise, through grace, and not by nature.

Vers 26. Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord. The marginal reading is, Then began men to call themselves by the name of the Lord; which words are supposed to signify that in the time of Enos the true followers of God began to distinguish themselves, and to be distinguished by others, by the appellation of Sons of God; those of the other branch of Adam's family, among whom the divine worship was not observed, being distinguished by the name, Children of Men. It must not be dissembled that many eminent men have contended that kuchal, which we translate began, should be rendered began profanely, or then profanation began, and from this time they date the origin of idolatry. Most of the Jewish doctors were of this opinion, and Maimonides has discussed it at some length in his Treatise on Idolatry.

1. We see here the vast importance of worshipping God according to his own mind; no sincerity, no uprightness of intention, can atone for the neglect of positive commands delivered in divine revelation, when this revelation is known. He who will bring an eucharistic offering instead of a sacrifice, while a sin-offering lieth at the door, as he copies Cain's conduct, may expect to be treated in the same manner. Reader, remember that thou hast an entrance unto the holiest through the veil, that is to say his flesh; and those who come in this way, God will in no wise cast out.

2. We see the horrible nature of envy: its eye is evil merely because God is good; it easily begets hatred; hatred, deep settled malice; and malice, murder! Watch against the first appearance of this most destructive passion, the prime characteristic of which is to seek the destruction of the object of its malevolence, and finally to ruin its possessor.

3. Be thankful to God that, as weakness increased and wants became multiplied, God enabled man to find out useful inventions, so as to lessen excessive labour, and provide every thing indispensably necessary for the support of life. He who carefully attends to the dictates of honest, sober industry, is never likely to perish for lack of the necessities of life.

4. As the followers of God at this early period found it indispensably necessary to separate themselves from all those who were irreligious and profane, and to make a public profession of their attachment to the truth, so it should be now. There are still men of profane minds, whose spirit and conduct are destructive to godliness; and in reference to such the permanent order of God is, Come out from among them, touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. He who is not determined to be a Christian at all events, is not far from being an Infidel. Those only who confess Christ among men shall be acknowledged before his Father and the angels of God.

A recapitulation of the account of the creation of man, 1, 2; and of the birth of Seth, 3. Genealogy of the ten antediluvian patriarchs, 3-31. Enosh's extraordinary piety, 22; his translation to heaven without seeing death, 24. The birth of Noah, and the reason of his name, 29; his age at the birth of Japheth, 32.

Vers 1. The book of the generations [Sepher in Hebrew, which we generally translate book, signifies a register, an account, any kind of writing, even a letter, such as the bill of divorce. Here it means the account or register of the generations of Adam or his descendants to the five hundredth year of the life of Noah.

In the likeness of God made he him] This account is again introduced to keep man in remembrance of the heights of glory whence he had fallen; and to prove to him that the miseries and death consequent on his present state were produced by his transgression, and did not flow from his original state.

Vers 3. And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, &c.] The scripture chronology, especially in the ages of some of the antediluvian and postdiluvian patriarchs, has exceedingly puzzled chronologists, critics, and divines. The printed Hebrew text, the Samaritan, the Septuagint, and Josephus, are all different, and have their respective vouchers and defenders.

And begat a son in his own likeness, after his image] Words nearly the same with those chap. i. 26. What this image and likeness of God were we have already seen, and we may rest assured that the same image and likeness are not meant here. The body of Adam was created provisionally immortal, i.e. while he continued obedient he could not die; but his obedience was voluntary, and his state, a probationary one. The soul of Adam was created in the moral image of God, in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness. He had now sinned, and consequently had lost this moral resemblance to his Maker; he had also become mortal through his breach of the law. His image and likeness were therefore widely different at this time from what they were before; and his begetting children in this image and likeness plainly implies that they were imperfect like himself, mortal like himself, sinful and corrupt like himself. For it is impossible that he, being impure, fallen from the divine image, could beget a pure and holy offspring, unless we could suppose it possible that a bitter fountain could send forth sweet waters, or that a cause could produce effects totally dissimilar from itself.

Verse 22. And Enoch walked with God—three hundred years] There are several things worthy of our most particular notice in this account :

1. The name of this patriarch; Enoch, from chanack, which signifies to instruct, to initiate, to dedicate. From his subsequent conduct we are authorised to believe he was early instructed in the things of God, initiated into the worship of his Maker, and dedicated to his service.

2. His religious conduct. He walked with God; he set himself to walk, he was fixedly purposed and determined to live to God. Those who are acquainted with the original will at once see that it has this force.

3. The circumstances in which he was placed. He was a patriarch; the king, the priest, and the prophet of a numerous family; he walked three hundred years with God, and begat sons and daughters; therefore marriage is no hindrance even to the perfection of piety; much less inconsistent with it, as some have injudiciously taught.

4. The astonishing height of piety to which he had arrived; being cleansed from all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit, we find not only his soul but his body purified, so that he was capable of immediate translation to the paradise of God. There are few cases of this kind on record; but probably there might be more, many more, were the followers of God more faithful to the grace they receive.

5. Enoch attained this state of religious and spiritual excellence in a time when, comparatively speaking, there were few helps, and no written revelation. It is not the want of grace nor of the means of grace that is the cause of the decay of this primitive piety, but the want of faithfulness in those who have the light, and yet will not walk as children of the light.

6. If the grace of God could work such a mighty change in those primitive times, when life and immortality were not brought to light by the gospel, what may we not expect in these times, in which all things are possible to him who believes?

7. It is said that Enoch not only walked with God, but also that he pleased God, and had the testimony that he did please God, Heb. xi. 5. Hence we learn that it was then possible to have the continual evidence or testimony that all that a man did and purposed was pleasing in the sight of Him who searches the heart, and by whom devices are weighed: and if it was possible then, it is surely, through the same grace, possible now; for God, and Christ, and faith, are still the same.

Verse 27. The days of Methuselah were nine hundred sixty and nine years] This is the longest life mentioned in scripture, and probably the longest ever lived; but we have not authority to say positively that it was the longest.

Verse 29. This same shall comfort us] This is an allusion, as some think, to the name of Noah, which they derive from nacham, to comfort; but it is much more likely that it comes from nach or nuach, to rest, to settle, &c. These words seem to have been spoken prophetically concerning Noah, who built the ark for the preservation of the human race, who seems to have been a typical person: for when he offered his sacrifice after the drying up of the waters, it is said that God smelled a savour of rest, and said he would not curse the ground any more for man's sake, chap. viii. 21; and from that time the earth seems to have had upon an average the same degree of fertility; and the life of man, in a few generations after, was settled in the mean at threescore years and ten.

Verse 32. Noah begat Shem, Ham, and Japheth] Japheth was the eldest son of Noah, but Shem is mentioned first, because it was from him, in a direct line, that the Messiah came. Ham was certainly the youngest of Noah's sons, and, from what we read, chap. ix. 22, the worst of them; and how he comes to be mentioned out of his natural order is not easily to be accounted for.

Among many important things presented to our view in this chapter, several of which have been already noticed, we may observe that, of all the antediluvian patriarchs,

Enoch, who was probably the best man, was the shortest time upon earth; his years were exactly as the days in a solar revolution, viz., three hundred and sixty-five; and like the sun he fulfilled a glorious course, shining more and more unto the perfect day, and was taken, when in the meridian splendour, to shine like the sun in the kingdom of his Father for ever.

CHAPTER VI.

The children of God, among whom the true religion was at first preserved, corrupt it by forming matrimonial connexions with irreligious women, 1, 2. God, displeased with these connexions and their consequences, limits the continuance of the old world to one hundred and twenty years, 3. The issue of those improper connexions termed giants, 4. An affecting description of the depravity of the world, 5, 6. God threatens the destruction of every living creature, 7. Noah and his family find grace in his sight, 8. The character and family of Noah, 9, 10. And a further description of the corruption of man, 11, 12. Noah is forewarned of the approaching destruction of the human race, 13; and is ordered to build an ark for the safety of himself and household, the form and dimensions of which are particularly described, 14-16. The deluge threatened, 17. The covenant of God's mercy is to be established between him and the family of Noah, 18. A male and female of all kinds of animals that could not live in the waters to be brought into the ark, 19, 20. Noah is commanded to provide food for their sustenance, 21; and punctually follows all these directions, 22.

AND it came to pass, <sup>a</sup>when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them,

2 That the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they <sup>b</sup>took them wives of all which they chose.

3 And the LORD said, <sup>c</sup>My Spirit shall not always strive with man, <sup>d</sup>for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years.

4 There were giants in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them, the same became mighty men which were of old, men of renown.

5 And God said that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that <sup>e</sup>every *'*imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil <sup>f</sup>continually.

6 And it <sup>g</sup>repented the LORD that he had made man on earth, and it <sup>h</sup>grieved him at his heart.

7 And the LORD said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; <sup>i</sup>both man and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them.

8 But Noah <sup>k</sup>found grace in the eyes of the LORD.

Verse 1. When men began to multiply] As there is a distinction made here between men and those called the sons of God, it is generally supposed that the immediate posterity of Cain and that of Seth are intended. The first were mere men, such as fallen nature may produce, degenerate sons of a degenerate father, governed by the desire of the flesh, the desire of the eye, and the pride of life. The others were sons of God, not angels, as some have dreamed, but such as were, according to our Lord's doctrine, born again, born from above, John iii. 3, 5, 6, &c., and made children of God by the influence of the Holy Spirit, Gal. v. 6. The former were apostates from the true religion, the latter were those among whom it was preserved and cultivated.

Verse 3. My Spirit shall not always strive] God delights in mercy, and therefore a gracious warning is given. Even at this time the earth was ripe for destruction.

Verse 4. There were giants in the earth] Nephilim, from naphal, "he fell." Those who had apostatized or fallen from the true religion. The Septuagint translate the original word by one which literally signifies earth-born, and which we, following them, term giants, without having any reference to the meaning of the word, which we generally conceive to signify persons of enormous stature. But the word when properly understood makes a very just distinction between the sons of men and the sons of God; those were the nephilim, the fallen, earth-born men, with the animal and devilish mind. These were the sons of God, who were born from above; children of the kingdom, because children of God.

The same became mighty men—men of renown.] It may be necessary to remark here that our translators have rendered seven different Hebrew words by the one term giants, viz., nephilim, gibborim, enachim, rephaim, emim, and zanzumim; by which appellatives are probably meant in general persons of great knowledge, piety, courage, wickedness, &c., and not men of enormous stature as is generally conjectured.

Verse 5. The wickedness of man was great] What an awful character does God give of the inhabitants of the antediluvian world! 1. They were flesh (ver. 3), wholly sensual, their souls no longer discerning their high destiny, but ever minding earthly things. 2. They were in a state of wickedness. 3. This wickedness was great—was continually increasing, so that the whole earth was corrupt before God. 4. All the imaginations of their thoughts were evil—the very first embryo of every idea, the fgment of every thought, the very materials out of which perception, conception, and ideas were formed, were all evil. 5. All these were evil without any mixture of good. 6. They were evil continually—there was no interval of good, no moment allowed for serious reflection, no holy purpose, no righteous act. 7. To complete the whole, God represents himself as repenting because he had made them, and as grieved at the heart because of their iniquities! Had not these been voluntary transgressions, crimes which they might have avoided, could he speak of them in the manner he does here? 8. So incensed is the most holy and the most merciful God, that he is determined to destroy the work of his hands: And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created; ver. 7. How great must the evil have been, and how provoking the transgressions, which obliged the most compassionate God, for the vindication of his own glory, to form this awful purpose! Fools make a mock at sin, but none except fools.

Verse 8. Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord.] Why? Because he was, 1. A just man, a man who gave to all their due; for this is the ideal meaning of the original word. 2. He was perfect in his generation—he was in all things a consistent character, never departing from the truth in principle or practice. 3. He walked with God—he was not only righteous in his conduct, but he was pious, and had continual communion with God. The same word is used here as before in the case of Enoch.

9 These are the generations of Noah : * Noah was a just man, and <sup>b</sup>perfect in his generations, and Noah <sup>c</sup>walked with God :

10 And Noah begat three sons, <sup>d</sup>Shem, Ham, and Japheth.

11 The earth also was corrupt <sup>e</sup>before God, and the earth was <sup>f</sup>'filled with violence.

Verse 13. I will destroy them with the earth.] Not only the human race was to be destroyed, but all terrestrial animals, i.e. those which could not live in the waters. These must necessarily be destroyed when the whole surface of the earth was drowned. But destroying the earth may probably mean the alteration of its constitution.

Verse 14. Make thee an ark.] Tebath, a word which is used only to express this vessel, and that in which Moses was preserved, Exod. ii. 3, 5. It signifies no more than our word vessel in its common acceptation, without any particular reference to shape or form.

Gopher wood.] Some think the cedar is meant; others, the cypress. Bochart renders this probable, 1. From the appellation, supposing the Greek word κυπαρισσο, cypress, was formed from the Hebrew gopher. 2. Because the cypress is not liable to rot, nor to be injured by worms. 3. The cypress was anciently used for ship-building. 4. This wood abounded in Assyria, where it is probable Noah built the ark.

Verse 15. Thou shalt make—the length of the ark—three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits.] Allowing the cubit, which is the length from the elbow to the tip of the middle finger, to be eighteen inches, the ark must have been four hundred and fifty feet in length, seventy-five in breadth, and forty-five in height. But the ancient cubit was twenty-one, or nearly twenty-two inches. And from this it will appear that the three hundred cubits of the ark's length make five hundred and forty-seven feet; the fifty for its breadth, ninety-one feet two inches; and the thirty for its height, fifty-four feet eight inches. When these dimensions are examined, the ark will be found to be a vessel whose capacity was more than sufficient to contain all persons and animals said to have been in it, with sufficient food for each for more than twelve months.

At the first view the number of animals contained in the ark may appear so immense that no space but the forest could be thought sufficient to contain them. If, however, we come to a calculation, the number of the different genera or kinds of animals will be found much less than is generally imagined. Naturalists have divided the whole system of zoology into CLASSES and ORDERS, containing genera and species. There are six classes thus denominated: 1. Mammalia; 2. Aves; 3. Amphibia; 4. Pisces; 5. Insecta; and 6. Vermea. With the three last of these, viz. fishes, insects, and worms, the question can have little to do.

The different species in the first class amount, the cete excluded, to five hundred and forty-three.

The different species in the second class, the anseres excepted, amount to two thousand three hundred and seventy-two.

The third class contains three hundred and sixteen species.

When the quantum of room which these animals and their provender required for one year, is compared with the capacity of the ark, we shall be led to conclude, with the learned Bishop Wilkins, "that of the two it is more difficult to assign a number and bulk of necessary things to answer to the capacity of the ark, than to find sufficient room for the several species of animals and their food already known to have been there." [More accurate information considerably modifies these calculations. According to Johnson's Physical Atlas (edition 1856), there are 1658 species of mammals, 6266 birds, and 642 reptiles. It is evident that these could not have been stowed in a vessel of the dimensions specified. The only refuge from this and many other difficulties is the theory that the flood, though universal in its relation to man and his habitation, was geographically local.]

Verse 16. A window shalt thou make.] What this was cannot be absolutely ascertained. The original word tsolar signifies clear or bright; the Septuagint did not understand the word as signifying any kind of window or light. It is probably a word which should be taken in a collective sense, signifying apertures for air and light.

In a cubit shalt thou finish it above.] Probably meaning that the roof should be left a cubit broad at the apex or top, and that it should not terminate in a sharp ridge.

Verse 17. I—do bring a flood.] A word used only to designate the general deluge, being never applied to signify any other kind of inundation; and does not the Holy Spirit intend to show by this that no other flood was ever like this, and that it should continue to be the sole one of the kind?

Verse 18. With thee will I establish my covenant.] The word signifies properly a purification or purifier, because in all covenants made between God and man, sin and sinfulness were ever supposed to be on man's side, and that God could not enter into any covenant or engagement with him without a purifier; hence, in all covenants, a sacrifice was offered for the removal of offences.

Almost all nations, in forming alliances, &c., made their covenants or contracts in the same way. A sacrifice was provided, its throat was cut, and its blood poured out before God; then the whole carcase was divided through the spinal marrow from the head to the rump, so as to make exactly two equal parts; these were placed opposite to each other, and the contracting parties passed between them, or entering at opposite ends, met in the centre, and there took the covenant oath.

Thou shalt come into the ark, &c., so committing himself to God's preservation, Heb. xi. 7. And under this the covenant or testament of eternal salvation by Christ was also implied, the apostle testifying, 1 Pet. iii. 21, that the anti-type, baptism, doth also now save us; for baptism is a seal of our salvation, Mark xvi. 16. To provide a Saviour, and the means of salvation, is GOD's part; to accept this Saviour, laying hold on the hope set before us, is ours.

Verse 19. To keep them alive.] God might have destroyed all the animal creation, and created others to occupy the new world, but he chose rather to preserve those already created. The Creator and Preserver of the universe does nothing but what is essentially necessary to be done.

caten, and thou shalt gather it to thee; and it shall be for food for thee, and for them.

22 <sup>b</sup> Thus did Noah; <sup>c</sup> according to all that God commanded him, so did he.

Verse 21. Of all food that is eaten] That is, of the food proper for every species of animals.

Verse 22. Thus did Noah] He prepared the ark; and during one hundred and twenty years preached righteousness to that sinful generation by the Spirit of Christ; for it was only through him that the doctrine of repentance could ever be successfully preached. The people in Noah's time are represented as shut up in prison—arrested and condemned by God's justice, but graciously allowed the space of one hundred and twenty years to repent in.

CHAPTER VII.

God informs Noah that within seven days he shall send a rain upon the earth, that shall continue for forty days and nights; and therefore commands him to take his family, with the different clean and unclean animals, and enter the ark, 1-4. This command punctually obeyed, 5-9. In the seventeenth day of the second month, in the six hundredth year of Noah's life, the waters from the opened windows of heaven, and the broken up fountains of the great deep, were poured out upon the earth, 10-12. The different quadrupeds, fowls, and reptiles, come unto Noah, and the Lord shuts him and them in, 13-16. The waters increase, and the ark floats, 17. The whole earth is covered with water fifteen cubits above the highest mountains, 18-20. All terrestrial animals die, 21-23. And the waters prevail one hundred and fifty days, 24.

AND the LORD said unto Noah, <sup>a</sup> Come thou and all thy house into the ark: for <sup>b</sup> thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation.

2 Of every <sup>c</sup> clean beast thou shalt take to thee by <sup>d</sup> sevens, the male and his female; <sup>e</sup> and of beasts that are not clean by two, the male and his female.

3 Of fowls also of the air by sevens, the male and the female; to keep seed alive upon the face of all the earth.

4 For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth <sup>f</sup> forty days and forty nights; and every living substance that I have made will I <sup>g</sup> destroy from off the face of the earth.

5 <sup>h</sup> And Noah did according unto all that the LORD commanded him.

6 And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters was upon the earth.

beginning of the year was changed from Marcheshvan to Nisan, which answers to a part of our March and April.

Were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened.] It appears that an immense quantity of waters occupied the centre of the antediluvian earth; and as these burst forth, by the order of God, the circumambient strata must sink, in order to fill up the vacuum occasioned by the elevated waters.

By the opening of the windows of heaven is probably meant the precipitating all the aqueous vapours which were suspended in the whole atmosphere, so that, as Moses expresses it, chap. i. 7, the waters that were above the firmament were that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every <sup>a</sup> sort.

15 And they <sup>b</sup> went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh wherein is the breath of life.

20 Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail; and the mountains were covered.

23 And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth: and <sup>j</sup> Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark.

again united to the waters which were below the firmament, from which on the second day of creation they had been separated.

Verse 15. And they went in, &c.] It was physically impossible for Noah to have collected such a vast number of tame and ferocious animals, nor could they have been retained in their wards by mere natural means. How then were they brought from various distances to the ark and preserved there? Only by the power of God. And now we may reasonably suppose that their natural enmity was so far removed or suspended that the lion might dwell with the lamb, and the wolf lie down with the kid, though each might still require his peculiar aliment.

Verse 16. The Lord shut him in.] This seems to imply that God took him under his especial protection, and as he shut him in, so he shut the others out.

Verse 22. Of all that was in the dry land] From this we may conclude that such animals only as could not live in the water were preserved in the ark.

Verse 24. And the waters prevailed upon the earth an hundred and fifty days.] The breaking up of the fountains of the great deep, and the raining forty days and nights, had raised the waters fifteen cubits above the highest mountains; after which forty days it appears to have continued at its height for one hundred and fifty days more.

CHAPTER VIII.

At the end of one hundred and fifty days the waters begin to subside, 1-3. The ark rests on mount Ararat, 4. On the first of the tenth month the tops of the hills appear, 5. The window opened, and the raven sent out, 6, 7. The dove sent forth and returns, 8, 9. The dove sent forth a second time, and returns with an olive leaf, 10, 11. The dove sent out the third time and returns no more, 12. On the twentieth day of the second month the earth is completely dried, 13, 14. God orders Noah, his family, and all the creatures, to come out of the ark, 15-19. Noah builds an altar, and offers sacrifices to the Lord, 20. They are accepted; and God promises that the earth shall not be cursed thus any more, notwithstanding the iniquity of man, 21, 22.

AND God <sup>a</sup> remembered Noah, and every living thing and all the cattle that was with him in the ark: <sup>b</sup> and God made a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters asswaged;

2 <sup>c</sup> The fountains also of the deep and the windows of heaven were stopped, and <sup>d</sup> the rain from heaven was restrained;

3 And the waters returned from off the earth continually: and after the end <sup>e</sup> of the hundred and fifty days, the waters were abated.

4 And the ark rested in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, upon the mountains of Ararat.

5 And the waters <sup>f</sup> decreased continually until the tenth month: in the tenth month, on the first day of the month, were the tops of the mountains seen.

6 And it came to pass, at the end of forty days, that Noah opened <sup>g</sup> the window of the ark which he had made:

7 And he sent forth a raven, which went forth <sup>h</sup> to and fro, until the waters were dried up from off the earth.

turning. — <sup>f</sup> Ch. vii. 24. — <sup>g</sup> Heb. were in going and decreasing. — <sup>h</sup> Ch. vi. 16. — <sup>i</sup> Heb. in going forth and returning.

Verse 1. And God made a wind to pass over the earth] Such a wind as produced a strong and sudden evaporation. The effects of these winds, which are frequent in the East, are truly astonishing.

Verse 4. The mountains of Ararat.] As there is a great chain of mountains which are called by this name, it is impossible to determine on what part of them the ark rested; but the highest part, called by some the finger mountain, has been fixed on as the most likely place.

Verse 7. He sent forth a raven, which went forth to and

8 Also he sent forth a dove from him, to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground ;

9 But the dove found no rest for the sole of her foot, and she returned unto him into the ark, for the waters were on the face of the whole earth ; then he put forth his hand, and took her, and “pulled her in unto him into the ark.”

10 And he stayed yet other seven days ; and again he sent forth the dove out of the ark ;

11 And the dove came in to him in the evening ; and lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf plucked off : so Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth.

12 And he stayed yet other seven days, and sent forth the dove ; which returned not again unto him any more.

13 And it came to pass in the six hundredth <sup>b</sup> and first year, in the first month, the first day of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth : and Noah removed the covering of the ark, and looked, and, behold the face of the ground was dry.

14 And in the second month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, was the earth dried.

15 And God spake unto Noah, saying,

Verse 8. He sent forth a dove] The dove was sent forth thrice ; the first time she speedily returned, having gone but a little way from the ark. After seven days, being sent out a second time, she returned with an olive leaf plucked off, an emblem of the restoration of peace between God and the earth ; and from this circumstance the olive has been the emblem of peace among all civilized nations. At the end of the other seven days the dove, being sent out the third time, returned no more, from which Noah conjectured that the earth was now sufficiently drained. See verse 17.

Verse 14. And in the second month, on the seven and twentieth day] From this it appears that Noah was in the ark a complete solar year, or three hundred and sixty-five days.

Verse 20. Noah builded an altar.] As we have already seen that Adam, Cain, and Abel offered sacrifices, there can be no doubt that they had altars on which they offered them ; but this, builded by Noah, is certainly the first on record. It is worthy of remark that, as the old world began with sacrifice, so also did the new. Religion, or the proper mode of worshipping the Divine Being, is the invention or institution of God himself ; and sacrifice, in the act and design, is the essence of religion. Without sacrifice, actually offered or implied, there never was, there never can be, any religion. Even in the heavens, a lamb is represented before the throne of God as newly slain, Rev. v. 6, 12, 13. The design of sacrificing is two-fold : the slaying and burning of the victim point out, 1st, that the life of the sinner is forfeited to divine justice ; 2ndly, that his soul deserves the fire of perdition.

The Jews have a tradition that the place where Noah built his altar was the same in which the altar stood which was built by Adam, and used by Cain and Abel, and the same spot on which Abraham afterwards offered up his son Isaac.

Verse 21. The Lord smelled a sweet savour] That is, He was well pleased with this religious act, performed in obedience to his own appointment, and in faith of the promised Saviour. That this sacrifice prefigured that which was offered by our blessed Redeemer in behalf of the world, is sufficiently evident from the words of St. Paul, Eph. v. 2.

I will not again curse the ground] I will not add to curse the ground—there shall not be another deluge to destroy the whole earth ; for the imagination of man's heart, ki, ALTHOUGH the imagination of man's heart should be evil, i.e. should they become afterwards as evil as they have been before, I will not destroy the earth by a FLOOD. God has other means of destruction ; and the next time he visits by a general judgment, FIRE is to be the agent, 2 Pet. iii. 7.

Verse 22. While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, &c.] There is something very expressive in the original,

16 Go forth of the ark, “thou, and thy wife, and thy sons, and thy sons' wives with thee.”

17 Bring forth with thee “every living thing that is with thee, of all flesh, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth ; that they may breed abundantly in the earth, and be fruitful, and multiply upon the earth.”

18 And Noah went forth, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him :

19 Every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, and whatsoever creepeth upon the earth, after their “kinds,” went forth out of the ark.

20 And Noah builded an altar unto the LORD ; and took of “every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt offerings on the altar.”

21 And the LORD smelled <sup>a</sup> a “sweet savour : and the LORD said in his heart, I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake ; <sup>b</sup> for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth ; neither will I again smite any more every thing living, as I have done.”

until all the DAYS of the earth ; for God does not reckon its duration by centuries, and the words themselves afford a strong presumption that the earth shall not have an endless duration.

Seed-time and harvest.—Most European nations divide the year into four distinct parts, called quarters or seasons ; but there are six divisions in the text, and probably all intended to describe the seasons in one of these postdiluvian years, particularly in that part of the globe, Armenia, where Noah was when God gave him, and mankind through him, this gracious promise. From the Targum of Jonathan on this verse we learn that in Palestine their seed-time was in September, at the autumnal equinox ; their harvest in March, at the vernal equinox ; that their winter began in December, at the solstice ; and their summer at the solstice in June.

This is a very merciful promise to the inhabitants of the earth. There may be a variety in the seasons, but no season essentially necessary to vegetation shall utterly fail. The times which are of greatest consequence to the preservation of man are distinctly noted ; there shall be both seed-time and harvest—a proper time to deposit the different grain in the earth, and a proper time to reap the produce of this seed.

The ark has been considered a type of our blessed Lord ; and hence it has been observed, that “as all those who were out of the ark perished by the flood, so those who take not refuge in the meritorious atonement of Christ Jesus must perish everlastingly.” Of all those who, having the opportunity of hearing the gospel, refuse to accept of the sacrifice it offers them, this saying is true ; but the parallel is not good. Myriads of those who perished during the flood probably repented, implored mercy, and found forgiveness : for God ever delights to save, and Jesus was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. And there is much reason to believe that those who during the forty days' rain would naturally flee to the high lands and tops of the highest mountains, would earnestly implore that mercy which has never been denied, even to the most profligate, when under deep humiliation of heart they “have returned to God.”

St. Peter, 1 Epist. iii. 21, makes the ark a figure of baptism, and intimates that we are saved by this, as the eight souls were saved by the ark. But let us not mistake the apostle by supposing that the mere ceremony itself saves any person : he tells us that the salvation conveyed through this sacred rite is not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God ; i.e. remission of sins and regeneration by the Holy Spirit, which are signified by this baptism. A good conscience never existed where remission of sins had not taken place ; and every person knows that it is God's prerogative to forgive sins, and that no ordinance can confer it, though ordinances may be the means to convey it when piously and believingly used.

CHAPTER IX.

God blesses Noah and his sons, 1. The brute creation to be subject to them through fear, 2. The first grant of animal food, 3. Eating of blood forbidden, 4. Cruelty to animals forbidden, 5. A manslayer to forfeit his life, 6. The covenant of God established between him and Noah and the whole brute creation, 8-11. The rainbow given as the sign and pledge of his covenant, 12-17. The three sons of Noah people the whole earth, 18, 19. Noah plants a vineyard, drinks of the wine, is intoxicated, and lies exposed in his tent, 20, 21. The reprehensible conduct of Ham, 22. The laudable carriage of Shem and Japheth, 23. Noah prophetically declares the servitude of the posterity of Ham, 24, 25; and the dignity and increase of Shem and Japheth, 26, 27. The age and death of Noah, 28, 29.

AND God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them, <sup>a</sup>Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth.

<sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup>And the fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth, and upon every fowl of the air, upon all that moveth upon the earth, and upon all the fishes of the sea; into your hand are they delivered.

Verse 1. God blessed Noah] Even the increase of families, which appears to depend on merely natural means, and sometimes fortuitous circumstances, is all of God. It is by his power and wisdom that the human being is formed, and it is by his providence alone that man is supported and preserved.

Verse 2. The fear of you and the dread, &c.] Prior to the fall man ruled the inferior animals by love and kindness, for then gentleness and docility were their principal characteristics. After the fall untractableness, with savage ferocity, prevailed among almost all orders of the brute creation; enmity to man seems particularly to prevail; and had not God in his mercy impressed their minds with the fear and terror of man, so that some submit to his will while others flee from his residence, the human race would long ere this have been totally destroyed by the beasts of the field.

Verse 3. Every moving thing—shall be meat] There is no positive evidence that animal food was ever used before the flood. We may infer that the earth was less productive after the flood than it was before, and that the human constitution was so impaired by the alterations which had taken place through the whole economy of nature as to require a higher nutriment than vegetables could supply.

Verse 4. But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood] The blood was most solemnly forbidden, because it was the life of the beast, and this life was to be offered to God as an atonement for sin. Hence the blood was ever held sacred, because it was typical of that blood by which we enter into the holiest. 1. Before the deluge it was not eaten, because animal food was not in use. 2. After the deluge it was prohibited, as we find above; and, being one of the seven Noachic precepts, it was not eaten previously to the publication of the Mosaic law. 3. At the giving of the law, and at several times during the ministry of Moses, the prohibition was most solemnly, and with awful penalties, renewed. Hence

<sup>10</sup> <sup>o</sup>And with every living creature that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beast of the earth with you; from all that go out of the ark, to every beast of the earth.

<sup>12</sup> And God said, <sup>q</sup>This is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you and every living creature that is with you, for perpetual generations:

we may rest assured that no blood was eaten previously to the Christian era, nor indeed ever since by the Jewish people. 4. That the prohibition has been renewed under the Christian dispensation, can admit of little doubt by any man who dispassionately reads Acts xv. 20, 29, xxi. 25, where even the Gentile converts are charged to abstain from it on the authority, not only of the apostles, but of the Holy Ghost, who gave them there and then especial direction concerning this point; see Acts xv. 28; not for fear of stumbling the converted Jews, the gloss of theologians, but because it was one τῶν παραγὰς τούτων, of those necessary points, from the burden (βάρος) of obedience to which they could not be excused. 5. This command is still scrupulously obeyed by the oriental Christians, and by the whole Greek church; and why? because the reasons still subsist.

Verse 5. Surely your blood—will I require; at the hand of every beast] This is very obscure, but if taken literally it seems to be an awful warning against cruelty to the brute creation; and from it we may conclude that horse-racers, hare-hunters, bull-baiters, and cock-fighters shall be obliged to give an account to God for every creature they have wantonly destroyed.

Verse 6. Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood] Hence it appears that whoever kills a man, unless unwittingly, as the scripture expresses it, shall forfeit his own life.

A man is accused of the crime of murder; of this crime he is guilty or he is not: if he be guilty of murder he should die; if not, let him be punished according to the demerit of his crime; but for no offence but murder should he lose his life. As punishment should be ever proportioned to crimes, so the highest punishment due to the highest crime should not be inflicted for a minor offence.

Verse 18. I do set my bow in the cloud] From the well-known cause of this phenomenon it cannot be rationally between me and you and every living creature of all flesh; and the waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh.

16 And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember <sup>a</sup>the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature of all flesh that is upon the earth.

17 And God said unto Noah, This is the token of the covenant which I have established between me and all flesh that is upon the earth.

18 And the sons of Noah, that went forth of the ark, were Shem, and Ham, and Japheth: <sup>b</sup>and Ham is the father of <sup>c</sup>Canaan.

19 <sup>d</sup>These are the three sons of Noah: <sup>e</sup>and of them was the whole earth overspread.

20 And Noah began to be <sup>f</sup>an husbandman, and he planted a vineyard:

21 And he drank of the wine, <sup>g</sup>and was drunken; and he was uncovered within his tent.

22 And Ham, the father of Canaan, saw the nakedness of his father, and told his two brethren without.

23 <sup>h</sup>And Shem and Japheth took a garment, and laid it upon both their shoulders, and went backward, and covered the nakedness of their father; and their faces were backward, and they saw not their father's nakedness.

24 And Noah awoke from his wine, and knew what his younger son had done unto him.

25 And he said, <sup>i</sup>Cursed be Canaan; <sup>j</sup>a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren.

26 And he said, <sup>k</sup>Blessed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan shall be <sup>l</sup>his servant.

27 God shall <sup>m</sup>enlarge Japheth, <sup>n</sup>and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and <sup>o</sup>Canaan shall be his servant.

28 And Noah lived after the flood three hundred and fifty years.

29 And all the days of Noah were nine hundred and fifty years: and he died.

supposed that there was no rainbow in the heavens before the time mentioned in the text, for as the rainbow is the natural effect of the sun's rays falling on drops of water, and of their being refracted and reflected by them, it must have appeared at different times from the creation of the sun and the atmosphere. Nor does the text intimate that the bow was now created for a sign to Noah and his posterity; but that what was formerly created, or rather that which was the necessary effect, in certain cases, of the creation of the sun and atmosphere, should now be considered by them as an unfailing token of their continual preservation from the waters of a deluge; therefore the text speaks of what had already been done, and not of what was now done, "My bow I have given, or put in the cloud;" as if he said: As surely as the rainbow is a necessary effect of sunshine in rain, and must continue such as long as the sun and atmosphere endure, so surely shall this earth be preserved from destruction by water; and its preservation shall be as necessary an effect of my promise as the rainbow is of the shining of the sun during a shower of rain.

Verses 17, This is the token.] Both the Greeks and Latins, as well as the Hebrews, have ever considered the rainbow as a divine token or portent; and both of these nations have even deified it, and made it a messenger of the gods.

As I believe the rainbow to have been intended solely for the purpose mentioned in the text, I forbear to make spiritual uses and illustrations of it. Many have done this, and their observations may be very edifying, but they certainly have no foundation in the text.

Verses 20, Noah began to be an husbandman.] A man of the ground, a farmer; by his beginning to be an husbandman we are to understand his recommencing his agricultural operations, which, undoubtedly, he had carried on for six hundred years before, but this had been interrupted by the flood.

Verses 21, He drank of the wine, &c.] It is very probable that this was the first time the vine was cultivated; and it is as probable that the strength or intoxicating power of the expressed juice was never before known. Noah, therefore, might have drunk it at this time without the least blame, as he knew not till this trial the effects it would produce. No blame can be attached to the character of Noah, unless from a subsequent account it should appear that, knowing the power and effects of the liquor, he repeated the act. Some expositors seem to be glad to fix on a fact like this, which by their distortion becomes a crime; and then, in a strain of sympathetic tenderness, affect to deplore "the failings and imperfections of the best of men;" when, from the interpretation that should be given of the place, neither failing nor imperfection can possibly appear.

Verses 22-24, And Ham, the father of Canaan, &c.] Had Noah not been innocent God would not have endured him with the spirit of prophecy on this occasion, and testified such marked disapprobation of their conduct. The conduct of Shem and Japheth was such as became pious and affectionate children, who appear to have been in the habit of treating their father with decency, reverence, and obedient respect. On the one the spirit of prophecy (not the incensed father) pronounces a curse; on the others the same spirit (not parental tenderness) pronounces a blessing. But the curse pronounced on the Canaanites does not exclude them from the possibility of obtaining salvation; it extends not to the soul and to eternity, but merely to their bodies and to time; though, if they continued to abuse their liberty, resist the Holy Ghost, and refuse to be saved on God's terms, then the wrath of divine justice must come upon them to the uttermost.

Verses 29, The days of Noah were nine hundred and fifty years.] The oldest patriarch on record, Methuselah only excepted.

CHAPTER X.

The generations of the sons of Noah, 1. JAPHETH and his descendants, 2-4. The Isles of the Gentiles, or Europe, peopled by the Japhethites, 5. HAM and his posterity, 6-20. Nimrod, one of his descendants, a mighty hunter, 8, 9, founds the first kingdom, 10. Nineveh and other cities founded, 11, 12. The Canaanites in their nine grand branches or families, 15-18. Their territories, 19. SHEM and his posterity, 21-31. The earth divided in the days of Peleg, 25. The territories of the Shemites, 30. The whole earth peopled by the descendants of Noah's three sons, 32.

NOW these are the generations of the sons of Noah; Shem, Ham, and Japheth: * and unto them were sons born after the flood.

2 <sup>b</sup> The sons of Japheth: Gomer, and Magog, and Madai, and Javan, and Tubal, and Meshech, and Tiras.

3 And the sons of Gomer; Ashkenaz, and Riphath, and Togarmah.

4 And the sons of Javan; Elishah, and Tarshish, Kittim, and <sup>c</sup> Dodanim.

5 By these were <sup>d</sup> the isles of the Gentiles divided in their lands; every one after his tongue, after their families, in their nations.

6 * And the sons of Ham; Cush, and Mizraim, and Phut, and Canaan.

7 And the sons of Cush; Seba, and Havilah, and Sabtah, and Raamah, and Sabtechah: and the sons of Raamah; Sheba, and Dedan.

8 And Cush begat Nimrod; he began to be a mighty one in the earth.

9 He was a mighty <sup>e</sup> hunter <sup>f</sup> before the LORD: wherefore it is said, Even as Nimrod, the mighty hunter before the LORD.

10 <sup>h</sup> And the beginning of his kingdom was <sup>i</sup> Babel, and Erech, and Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar.

11 Out of that land <sup>j</sup> went forth Asshur, and builded Nineveh, and <sup>k</sup> the city Rehoboth, and Calah, Verse 1. Now the generations] It is extremely difficult to say what particular nations and peoples sprang from the three grand divisions of the family of Noah, because the names of many of those ancient people have become changed in the vast lapse of time from the deluge to the Christian era; yet some are so very distinctly marked that they can be easily ascertained, while a few still retain their original names.

Verse 2. The sons of Japheth] Japheth is supposed to be the same with the Japetus of the Greeks, from whom, in an extremely remote antiquity, that people were supposed to have derived their origin.

Gomer] Supposed by some to have peopled Galatia. From him the Cimbrians are supposed to have derived their origin.

Magog] Supposed by many to be the father of the Scythians and Tartars, or Tatars, as the word should be written.

Madai] Generally supposed to be the progenitor of the Medes [though in all probability the name, as in many other instances in this list, is ethnic, and not personal].

Javan] It is almost universally agreed that from him sprang the Ionians, of Asia Minor.

Tubal] Some think he was the father of the Iberians; and that Meshech, who is generally in scripture joined with him, was the founder of the Cappudocians, from whom proceeded the Musconites.

Tiras] From this person, according to general consent, the Thracians derived their origin.

Verse 3. Ashkenaz] Probably gave his name to Sacagena, a very excellent province of Armenia. Some suppose that from Ashkenaz the Euxine Sea derived its name, but others suppose that from him the Germans derived their origin.

Riphath] Or Diphath, the founder of the Paphlagonians, which were anciently called Riphatori.

Togarmah] The Sauromates, or inhabitants of Turcomania.

Verse 4. Elishah] As Javan peopled a considerable part of Greece, it is in that region that we must seek for the settlements of his descendants; Elishah probably was the first who settled at Elis, in Peloponnesus.

Tarshish] He first inhabited Cilicia, whose capital anciently was the city of Tarsus [more probably Tartessus, in Spain].

Kittim] Some think Cyprus is meant.

Dodanim] Or Rodanim [though this is not probable]. Some suppose that this family settled at Dodona, in Epirus; [but the evidence is in favour of the identity of Dodanim with the Dardani].

Verse 5. Isles of the Gentiles] EUROPE, of which this is allowed to be a general epithet.

Every one after his tongue] This refers to the time posterior to the confusion of tongues and dispersion from Babel.

Verse 6. Cush] Who peopled the Arabic nome near the Red Sea in Lower Egypt.

Mizraim] This family certainly peopled Egypt; and both in the East and West Egypt is called Mezr and Mezraim.

Phut] Who first peopled an Egyptian district, bordering on Libya.

Canaan] He who first peopled the land so called, known also by the name of the Promised Land.

Verse 7. Seba] The founder of the Sabreans [more probably Meroe, in Ethiopia]. There seem to be three different people of this name mentioned in this chapter, and a fourth in chap. xxv. 3.

Havilah] The country included within that branch of the river Pison which ran out of the Euphrates into the bay of Persia, and bounded Arabia Felix on the east.

Sabtah] Supposed by some to have first peopled an isle or peninsula called Sophia, in the Persian Gulf. [Doubtful.]

Raamah] Or Ragmah, a city near the Persian Gulf.

Sabtechah] In Caramania; [it has not been satisfactorily identified].

Sheba] Supposed to have had his residence beyond the Euphrates, in the environs of Charriar, Eden, &c. [Later criticism is in favour of South Arabia.]

Dedan] Supposed to have peopled a part of Arabia, on the confines of Idumea.

Verse 8. Nimrod] He is called a mighty hunter before the Lord; and from ver. 10 we learn that he founded a kingdom which included the cities Babel, Erech, Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar. Though the words are not definite, it is very likely he was a very bad man. His name Nimrod comes from marad, he rebelled; and the Targum, on 1 Chron. i. 10, says: Nimrod began to be a mighty man in sin, a murderer of innocent men, and a rebel before the Lord. [This derivation of his name is not sustained. The word is Cushite or Assyrian. There is nothing in the text to warrant the conclusion that he was a bad man.]

Verse 10. The beginning of his kingdom was Babel] Babel signifies confusion.

In the land of Shinar] The same as mentioned chap. xi. 2. It appears that Shinar must have been in the southern part of Mesopotamia.

Verse 11. Out of that land went forth Asshur] The marginal reading is to be preferred here. He—Nimrod—went out unto Assyria and built Nineveh; and hence Assyria is called the land of Nimrod, Mic. v. 6. The city of Nineveh, the capital of Assyria, is supposed to have had its name from Ninus, the son of Nimrod; but probably Ninus and Nimrod are the same person. [Assyria was founded by Asshur, and the name Ninus is probably not personal but representative.]

Rehoboth, and Calah, &c.] Nothing certain is known concerning the situation of these places.

Verse 13. Mizraim begat Ludim] Ludim is evidently the name of a people, inhabitants of a district in Egypt.

Lebahim] The Libyans, or a people who dwelt on the west of the Thebaid, and were called Libyo-Egyptians.

Naphtulim] Even the conjecturers can scarcely fix a place for these people.

Verse 14. Pathrusim] The inhabitants of the Delta, in Egypt.

Casulhim] The inhabitants of Colchis; [more probably a district of Upper Egypt].

Philistim] The people called Philistines, the constant plagues and frequent oppressors of the Israelites, whose history may be seen at large in the books of Samuel, Kings, &c.

14 And Pathrusim, and Casluhim (* out of whom came Philistim), and Caphtorim.

15 And Canaan begat <sup>b</sup> Sidon his first-born, and Heth,

6 And the Jebusite, and the Amorite, and the Girgashite,

17 And the Hivite, and the Arkite, and the Sinite,

18 And the Arvadite, and the Zemarite, and the Hamathite: and afterward were the families of the Canaanites spread abroad.

19 * And the border of the Canaanites was from Sidon, as thou comest to Gerar, unto <sup>d</sup> Gaza; as thou goest unto Sodom, and Gomorrah, and Admah, and Zeboim, even unto Lasha.

20 These are the sons of Ham, after their families, after their tongues, in their countries, and in their nations.

21 Unto Shem also, the father of all the children of Eber, the brother of Japheth the elder, even to him were children born.

22 The * children of Shem; Elam, and Asshur, and <sup>e</sup> Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram.

25 <sup>i</sup> And unto Eber were born two sons: the name of one was <sup>j</sup> Peleg, for in his days was the earth divided; and his brother's name was Joktan.

26 And Joktan begat Almodad, and Sheleph, and Hazarmaveth, and Jerah, 27 And Hadoram, and Uzal, and Diklah,

28 And Obal, and Abimael, and Sheba,

29 And Ophir, and Havilah, and Jobab: all these were the sons of Joktan.

30 And their dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar, a mount of the east.

31 These are the sons of Shem, after their families, after their tongues, in their lands, after their nations.

32 <sup>k</sup> These are the families of the sons of Noah, after their generations, in their nations; <sup>l</sup> and by these were the nations divided in the earth, after the flood.

[Caphtorim.] Inhabitants of Cyprus, according to Calmet. [Later researchers place them in Egypt.]

Verse 15. Sidon] Who probably built the city of this name, and was the father of the Sidonians.

Heth] From whom came the Hittites, so remarkable among the Canaanitish nations.

Verse 16. The Jebusite - Amorite, &c.] Are well known as being the ancient inhabitants of Canaan, expelled by the children of Israel.

Verse 21. Shem also, the father of all the children of Eber] It is generally supposed that the Hebrews derived their name from Eber or Heber, son of Shem; but it appears much more likely that they had it from the circumstance of Abraham passing over (for so the word abar signifies) the river Euphrates to come into the land of Canaan.

Verse 22. Elam] From whom came the Elamites, near to the Medes, and whose chief city was Elymais.

Asshur] Who gave his name to a vast province (afterwards a mighty empire) called Assyria.

Arphaxad] From whom Arrapachitis in Assyria was named.

Lud] The founder of the Lydians, in Asia Minor.

Aram] The father of the Arameans, afterwards called Syrians.

Verse 25. Peleg] From palag, to divide, because in his days, which is supposed to be about one hundred years after the flood, the earth was divided among the sons of Noah. Though some are of opinion that a physical division and not a political one, is what is intended here, viz., a separation of continents and islands from the main land; the earthy parts having been united into one great continent previously to the days of Peleg. This opinion appears to me the most likely, for what is said ver. 5 is spoken by way of anticipation. [This theory has few supporters.]

Verses 26–30. Joktan] He had thirteen sons who had their dwelling from Mesha unto Sephar, a mount of the east, which places Calmet supposes to be mount Masius on the west in Mesopotamia, and the mountains of the Saphirs on the east in Armenia, or of the Tappirs farther on in Media.

There are many customs and usages, both sacred and civil, which have prevailed in all parts of the world, which could owe their origin to nothing but a general institution, which could never have existed had not mankind been originally of the same blood, and instructed in the same common notions before they were dispersed. Among these usages may be reckoned, 1. The numbering by tens. 2. Their computing time by a cycle of seven days. 3. Their setting apart the seventh day for religious purposes. 4. Their use of sacrifices, propitiatory and eucharistical. 5. The consecration of temples and altars. 6. The institution of sanctuaries or places of refuge, and their privileges. 7. Their giving a tenth part of the produce of their fields, &c. for the use of the altar. 8. The custom of worshipping the Deity bare-footed. 9. Abstinence of the men from all sensual gratifications previously to their offering sacrifice. 10. The order of priesthood and its support. 11. The notion of legal pollutions, defilements, &c. 12. The universal tradition of a general deluge. 13. The universal opinion that the rainbow was a divine sign, or portent, &c., &c.

The wisdom and goodness of God are particularly manifested in re-peopling the earth by means of three persons, all of the same family, and who had witnessed the destruction of the world by the flood, while themselves were preserved in the ark. By this very means the true religion was propagated over the earth. It is on this ground alone that we can account for the uniformity and universality of the above traditions, and for the grand outlines of religious truth which are found in every quarter of the world.

CHAPTER XI.

All the inhabitants of the earth, speaking one language and dwelling in one place, 1, 2, purpose to build a city and a tower to prevent their dispersion, 3, 4. God confounds their language, and scatters them over the whole earth, 5–9. Account of the lives and families of the postdiluvian patriarchs. Shem, 10, 11. Arphaxad, 12, 13. Sarai, 14, 15. Eber, 16, 17. Peleg, 18, 19. Ragau or Reu, 20, 21. Serug, 22, 23. Nahor, 24, 25. Terah and his three sons, Haran, Nahor, and Abram, 26, 27. The death of Haran, 28. Abram marries Sarai, and Nahor marries Milcah, 29. Sarai is barren, 30. Terah, Abram, Sarai, and Lot, leave Ur of the Chaldees, and go to Haran, 31. Terah dies in Haran, aged two hundred and five years, 32.

AND the whole earth was of one <sup>a</sup>language, and of one <sup>b</sup>speech.

2 And it came to pass, as they journeyed <sup>c</sup>from the east, that they found a plain in the land of Shinar; and they dwelt there.

3 And <sup>d</sup>they said one to another, Go to, let us make brick, and <sup>e</sup>burn them throughly. And they had brick for stone, and slime had they for mortar.

4 And they said, Go to, let us build us a city, and a tower <sup>f</sup>whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth.

5 <sup>g</sup>And the Lord came down to see the city and the tower, which the children of men builded.

Verse 1. The whole earth was of one language In all likelihood the HEBREW; and of one speech—articulating the same words in the same way. It is generally supposed, that after the confusion mentioned in this chapter, the Hebrew language remained in the family of Heber. The proper names, and their significations given in the scripture, seem incontestable evidences that the Hebrew language was the original language of the earth—the language in which God spake to man, and in which he gave the revelation of his will to Moses and the prophets. [Modern linguistic research, while confirming the theory of one primeval language, favours the Sanscrit rather than the Hebrew. The point is by no means settled.]

Verse 2. As they journeyed from the east Assyria, Mesopotamia, and the country on the borders and beyond the Euphrates, are called the east in the sacred writings.

Noah and his family, landing after the flood on one of the mountains of Armenia, would doubtless descend and cultivate the valleys; as they increased they appear to have passed along the banks of the Euphrates, till, at the time specified here, they came to the plains of Shinar, allowed to be the most fertile country in the east.

Verse 3. Let us make brick There was an utter scarcity of stones in that district; and on this account they were obliged to use slime, that is, bitumen, for mortar.

Verse 4. Let us build us a city and a tower Mr. Hutchinson supposed that the design of the builders was to erect a temple to the host of heaven, and translated the passage, its head or summit to the heavens, i.e. to the heavenly bodies: and, to make this interpretation the more probable, he says that previously to this time the descendants of Noah were all agreed in one form of religious worship (mesaphah achath, and of one lip), i.e. they had one litany; and as God confounded their litany they began to disagree in their religious opinions, and branched out into sects and parties, each associating with those of his own sentiment; and thus their tower or temple was left unfinished.

It is probable that their being of one language and of one speech implies, not only a sameness of language, but also a unity of sentiment and design. Proposing to settle themselves in the plains of Shinar, instead of spreading themselves over all the countries of the earth according to the design of God, they encouraged one another to build a city and a tower, probably a temple, "lest," say they, "we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth;" but God having confounded their language and disturbed their counsels, they went off in different directions, and thus became scattered abroad upon the face of the earth.

An account of this tower, and of the confusion of tongues, is given by several ancient authors. Herodotus saw the tower and described it. A Sybil, whose oracle is yet extant, spoke both of it and of the confusion of tongues; so did Eupolemus and Abydenus. It was probably from a disguised representation of the Hebrew text that the Greek and Roman poets took their fable of the giants waging war with the gods, and piling mountain upon mountain in order to scale heaven.

Verse 5. And the Lord came down A lesson, says an ancient Jewish commentator, to magistrates to examine every evidence before they decree judgment and execute justice.

6 And the Lord said, Behold, <sup>a</sup>the people is one, and they have all <sup>b</sup>one language; and this they begin to do; and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have <sup>c</sup>imagined to do.

7 Go to, <sup>d</sup>let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may <sup>e</sup>not understand one another's speech.

8 So <sup>f</sup>the LORD scattered them abroad from thence <sup>g</sup>upon the face of all the earth: and they left off to build the city.

9 Therefore is the name of it called <sup>h</sup>Babel; <sup>i</sup>because the LORD did there confound the language of all the earth: and from thence did the LORD scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth.

Verse 6. The people is one, &c. It is very likely that the original language was composed of monosyllables, and that each had a distinct ideal meaning, and only one meaning. Where this simple monosyllabic language prevailed men would necessarily have simple ideas, and a corresponding simplicity of manners. In order therefore to remove the unity of sentiment and design, which I suppose to be the necessary consequence of such a language, God confounded their language—caused them to articulate the same word differently, to affix different ideas to the same term, and perhaps, by transposing syllables and interchanging letters, form new terms and compounds, so that the mind of the speaker was apprehended by the hearer in a contrary sense to what was intended.

I shall not examine how the different languages of the earth were formed. It certainly was not the work of a moment; different climates must have a considerable share in the formation of tongues, by their influence on the organs of speech. The invention of new arts and trades must give birth to a variety of terms and expressions. Merchandise, commerce, and the cultivation of the sciences, would produce their share; and different forms of government, modes of life, and means of instruction, also contribute their quota. The Arabic, Chaldean, Syriac, and Æthiopic, still bear the most striking resemblance to their parent, the Hebrew. Many others might be reduced to a common source, yet every where there is sufficient evidence of this confusion. Every language is confounded less or more but that of eternal truth. This is ever the same; in all countries, climates, and ages, the language of truth, like that God from whom it sprang, is unchangeable. It speaks in all tongues, to all nations, and in all hearts: "There is one God, the fountain of goodness, justice, and truth. MAN, thou art his creature, ignorant, weak, and dependant; but he is all-sufficient—hates nothing that he has made—loves thee—is able and willing to save thee; return to and depend on him, take his revealed will for thy law, submit to his authority, and accept eternal life on the terms proposed in his word, and thou shalt never perish nor be wretched." This language of truth all the ancient and modern Babel-builders have not been able to confound, notwithstanding their repeated attempts. How have men toiled to make this language clothe their own ideas; and thus cause God to speak according to the pride, prejudice, and worst passions of men! But through a just judgment of God, the language of all those who have attempted to do this has been confounded, and the word of the Lord abideth for ever.

Verse 7. Go to A form of speech which, whatever it might have signified formerly, now means nothing.

Verse 9. Therefore is the name of it called Babel Babel, from bal, to mingle, confound, destroy; hence Babel, from the mingling together and confounding of the projects and language of these descendants of Noah. [The native etymology is Bab-il, i.e. the gate of God. This was probably the name originally given to it; the other sense was attached after the confusion.]

Besides Mr. Hutchinson's opinion (see on ver. 4), there have been various conjectures concerning the purpose for which this tower was built. Some suppose it was intended

10 *These are the generations of Shem: Shem was an hundred years old, and begat Arphaxad two years after the flood:

11 And Shem lived after he begat Arphaxad five hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.

12 And Arphaxad lived five and thirty years, and begat Salah:

13 And Arphaxad lived after he begat Salah four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters.

14 And Salah lived thirty years, and begat Eber:

15 And Salah lived after he begat Eber four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters.

16 *And Eber lived four and thirty years, and begat <sup>d</sup> Peleg:

17 And Eber lived after he begat Peleg four hundred and thirty years, and begat sons and daughters.

18 And Peleg lived thirty years, and begat Reu:

19 And Peleg lived after he begat Reu two hundred and nine years, and begat sons and daughters.

20 And Reu lived two and thirty years, and begat <sup>e</sup> Serug:

21 And Reu lived after he begat Serug two hundred and seven years, and begat sons and daughters.

22 And Serug lived thirty years, and begat Nahor:

23 And Serug lived after he begat Nahor two hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.

24 And Nahor lived nine and twenty years, and begat <sup>f</sup> Terah:

25 And Nahor lived after he begat Terah an hundred and nineteen years, and begat sons and daughters.

26 And Terah lived seventy years, and <sup>g</sup> begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran.

27 Now these are the generations of Terah: Terah begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran; and Haran begat Lot.

28 And Haran died before his father Terah in the land of his nativity, in Ur of the Chaldees.

29 And Abram and Nahor took them wives: the name of Abram's wife was <sup>h</sup> Sarai; and the name of Nahor's <sup>i</sup> wife, Milcah, the daughter of Haran, the father of Milcah, and the father of Iscah.

30 But <sup>j</sup> Sarai was barren; she had no child.

31 And Terah <sup>k</sup> took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran his son's son, and Sarai his daughter-in-law, his son Abram's wife; and they went forth with them from <sup>l</sup> Ur of the Chaldees, to go into <sup>m</sup> the land of Canaan; and they came unto Haran, and dwelt there.

32 And the days of Terah were two hundred and five years: and Terah died in Haran.

to afford an asylum to the builders and their families in case of another general deluge. Others think that it was designed to be a grand city, the seat of government, in order to prevent a general dispersion. This God would not permit, as he had purposed that men should be dispersed over the earth, and therefore caused the means which they were using to prevent it to become the grand instrument of its accomplishment.

Vorse 10. These are the generations of Shem] This may be called the holy family, as from it sprang Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, the twelve patriarchs, David, Solomon, and all the great progenitors of the Messiah.

The Scripture chronology, as it exists in the Hebrew text, the Samaritan, the Septuagint, Josephus, and some of the Fathers, is greatly embarrassed; and it is yet much more so in the various systems of learned and unlearned chronologists.

Vorse 12. And Arphaxad lived] St. Luke follows the Septuagint, and brings in here Cainan. But the Hebrew text, both here and in 1 Chron. i., is perfectly silent on this subject, and the best chronologists have agreed in rejecting this as a spurious generation.

Vorse 26. And Terah lived seventy years, and begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran.] Many have been greatly puzzled with the account here, supposing, because Abram is mentioned first, that therefore he was the eldest son of Terah; but he is only put first by way of dignity and pre-eminence. Abram was born, not when his father Terah was seventy, but when he was one hundred and thirty.

Vorse 29. Milcah, the daughter of Haran] Many suppose Sarai and Iscah are the same person; but this is improbable, as Iscah is expressly said to be the daughter of Haran, and Sarai was the daughter of Terah, and half-sister of Abram.

Vorse 31. They went forth—from Ur of the Chaldees] Ur appears to have been a city of some considerable consequence at that time in Chaldaea; but where situated is not well known. It probably had its name Ur, which signifies fire, from the worship practised there. The learned are almost unanimously of opinion that the ancient inhabitants of this region were ignicolists or worshippers of fire, and in that place this sort of worship probably originated; and in honour of this element, the symbol of the Supreme Being, the whole country, or a particular city in it, might have had the name Ur. The Chaldees mentioned here had not this name in the time of which Moses speaks, but they were called so in the time in which Moses wrote. From Chased, the son of Nahor, descended the Chasdim (whence the Χαλδαῖοι, Chaldeans, of the Septuagint, Vulgate, and all later Versions), who afterwards settled on the south of the Euphrates.

The building of Babel, the confusion of tongues, and the first call of Abram, led to the accomplishment of three grand and important designs: 1. The peopling of the whole earth; 2. The preservation of the true religion by the means of one family; and 3. The preservation of the line uncorrupted by which the Messiah should come. When God makes a discovery of himself by a particular revelation, it must begin in some particular time, and be given to some particular person, and in some particular place. But if this be the case, have not others cause to complain because not thus favoured? Not at all, unless the favouring of the one for a time should necessarily cut off the others for ever. But this is not the case. Abram was first favoured. Isaac and Jacob also received the promises, the twelve patriarchs through their father, and the whole Jewish people through them. Afterwards the designs of God's endless mercy were more particularly unfolded; and the word, which seemed to be confined for two thousand years to the descendants of a single family, bursts forth on all hands, salvation is preached to the Gentiles, and thus in Abram's seed all the nations of the earth are blessed.

CHAPTER XII.

God calls Abram to leave Haran and go into Canaan, 1; promises to bless him, and through him all the families of the earth, 2, 3. Abram, Sarai, Lot, and all their household, depart from Canaan, 4, 5; pass through Sichem, 6. God appears to him, and renews the promise, 7. His journey described, 8, 9. On account of a famine in the land he is obliged to go into Egypt, 10. Fearing lest, on account of the beauty of his wife the Egyptians should kill him, he desires her not to acknowledge that she is his wife, but only his sister, 11-13. Sarai, because of her beauty, is taken into the palace of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, who is very liberal to Abram on her account, 14-16. God afflicts Pharaoh and his household with grievous plagues on account of Sarai, 17. Pharaoh, on finding that Sarai was Abram's wife, restores her honourably, and dismisses the patriarch with his family and their property, 18-20.

NOW the <sup>a</sup>LORD had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee:

2 <sup>b</sup> And I will make of thee a great nation, <sup>c</sup> and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; <sup>d</sup> and thou shalt be a blessing:

3 <sup>e</sup> And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: <sup>f</sup> and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.

4 So Abram departed, as the LORD had spoken unto him; and Lot went with him: and Abram was seventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran.

5 And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and <sup>g</sup> the souls that they had gotten <sup>h</sup> in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan; and into the land of Canaan they came.

6 And Abram <sup>i</sup> passed through the land unto the place of Sichem, <sup>j</sup> unto the plain of Moreh. <sup>k</sup> And the Canaanite was then in the land.

7 <sup>l</sup> And the LORD appeared unto Abram, and said, <sup>m</sup> Unto thy seed will I give this land: and there builded he an altar <sup>n</sup> unto the LORD, who appeared unto him.

8 And he removed from thence unto a mountain on the east of Beth-el, and pitched his tent, <sup>o</sup> having Beth-el on the west, and Hai on the east: and there he builded an altar unto the LORD, and <sup>p</sup> called upon the name of the LORD.

9 And Abram journeyed, <sup>q</sup> going <sup>r</sup> on still toward the south.

Verse 1. Get thee out of thy country] There is great dissension between commentators concerning the call of Abram; some supposing he had two distinct calls, others that he had but one. At the conclusion of the preceding chapter, verse 31, we find Terah and all his family leaving Ur of the Chaldees, in order to go to Canaan. This was, no doubt, in consequence of some divine admonition. While resting at Haran, on their road to Canaan, Terah died, chapter xi. 32; and then God repeats his call to Abram, and orders him to proceed to Canaan, chap. xii. 1.

Thy father's house] Terah being now dead, it is very probable that the family were determined to settle at Char-ran; and as Abram might have felt inclined to stop with them in this place, hence the ground and necessity of the second call recorded here, and which is introduced in a very remarkable manner; lech lecha, go for thyself. If none of the family will accompany thee, yet go for thyself unto THAT LAND which I will shew thee. God does not tell him what land it is, that he may still cause him to walk by faith and not by sight. The apostle assures us that in all this Abram had spiritual views; he looked for a better country, and considered the land of promise only as typical of the heavenly inheritance.

Verse 2. I will make of thee a great nation] The Jewish people; and make thy name great, alluding to the change of his name from Abram, a high father, to Abraham, the father of a multitude.

Verse 3. In thee] In the Messiah, who shall spring from thee, shall all the families of the earth be blessed; for as he shall take on him human nature from the posterity of Abraham, he shall taste death for every man, his gospel shall be preached throughout the world, and innumerable blessings be derived on all mankind through his death and intercession.

Verse 5. The souls that they had gotten in Haran] This may apply either to the persons who were employed in the service of Abram, or to the persons he had been the instrument of converting to the knowledge of the true God; and in this latter sense the Chaldee paraphrasts understood the passage, translating it, The souls of those whom they proselyted in Haran.

They went forth to go into the land of Canaan] As Abram left his own country, father's house, and kindred, took at the command of God a journey to this promised land, nor ceased till he arrived in it; so we should cast aside every weight, come out from among the workers of iniquity, set out for the kingdom of God, nor ever rest till we reach the heavenly country. How many set out for the kingdom of heaven, make good progress for a time in their journey, but halt before the race is finished!

Verse 6. The plain of Moreh.] Elon should be translated oak, not plain; it is likely the place was remarkable for a grove of those trees, or for one of a stupendous height and bulk.

Verse 7. The Lord appeared] In what way this appearance was made we know not; it was probably by the great angel of the covenant, Jesus the Christ. It is worthy of remark that Abram is the first man to whom God is said to have shown himself or appeared: 1. In Ur of the Chaldees, Acts vii. 2: and 2. At the oak of Moreh, as in this verse. As Moreh signifies a teacher, probably this was called the oak of Moreh or the teacher because God manifested himself here, and instructed Abram concerning the future possession of that land by his posterity, and the dispensation of the mercy of God to all the families of the earth through the promised Messiah.

Verse 8. Beth-el] The place which was afterwards called Beth-el by Jacob, for its first name was Luz. It literally signifies the house of God.

And pitched his tent—and—builded an altar unto the Lord] Where Abram has a tent, there God must have an ALTAR, as he well knows there is no safety but under the divine protection. How few who build houses ever think on the propriety and necessity of building an altar to their Maker! The house in which the worship of God is not established cannot be considered as under the divine protection.

And called upon the name of the Lord.] Dr. Shuckford

10 And there was <sup>a</sup>a famine in the land; and Abram <sup>b</sup>went down into Egypt to sojourn there, for the famine <sup>c</sup>was <sup>c</sup>grievous in the land.

11 And it came to pass, when he was come near to enter into Egypt, that he said unto Sarai his wife Behold now, I know that thou <sup>d</sup>art <sup>d</sup>a fair woman to look upon:

12 Therefore it shall come to pass, when the Egyptians shall see thee, that they shall say, This <sup>e</sup>is his wife; and they <sup>e</sup>will kill me, but they will save thee alive.

13 'Say, I pray thee, thou <sup>f</sup>art my sister: that it may be well with me for thy sake; and my soul shall live because of thee.

14 And it came to pass that, when Abram was come into Egypt, the Egyptians <sup>g</sup>beheld the woman that she <sup>h</sup>was very fair.

15 The princes also of Pharaoh saw her, and strongly contends that kara beshem does not signify to call on the name, but to invoke in the name. Abram was taught even in these early times to approach God through a Mediator; and that Mediator, since manifested in the flesh, was known by the name Jehovah. Does not our Lord allude to such a discovery as this when he says, Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it, and was glad? John viii. 56.

Verse 10. There was a famine in the land] Of Canaan. This is the first famine on record, and it prevailed in the most fertile land then under the sun; and why? God made it desolate for the wickedness of those who dwelt in it.

Verse 11. Thou art a fair woman to look upon] Widely differing in her complexion from the swarthy Egyptians, and consequently more likely to be coveted by them. It appears that Abram supposed they would not scruple to take away the life of the husband in order to have the undisturbed possession of the wife. The age of Sarai at this time is not well agreed on by commentators, some making her ninety, while others make her only sixty-five. Probably she was but sixty-five; and as in those times people lived much longer, and disease seems to have had but a very contracted influence, women and men would necessarily arrive more slowly at a state of perfection, and retain their vigour and complexion much longer than in later times.

Verse 13. Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister] Abram did not wish his wife to tell a falsehood, but he wished her to suppress a part of the truth. From chap. xx. 12 it is evident she was his step-sister, i.e. his sister by his father, but by a different mother.

Verse 15. The woman was taken into Pharaoh's house.] Pharaoh appears to have been the common appellation of the Cushite shepherd kings of Egypt, who had conquered this land, as is conjectured, about seventy-two years before this time. The word is supposed to signify king in the ancient Egyptian language. [More probably the title corresponds to PHRA of the hieroglyphics, the meaning of which is "the sun."] All the kings of Egypt bore this name till the commencement of the Grecian monarchy, after which they were called Ptolemies.

When a woman was brought into the seraglio or haram of the Eastern princes, she underwent for a considerable time certain purifications before she was brought into the king's presence. It was in this interim that God plagued Pharaoh and his house with plagues, so that Sarai was restored before she could have been taken to the bed of the Egyptian king.

Verse 16. He had sheep and oxen, &c.] From this enumeration of the riches of Abram we may conclude that this patriarch led a pastoral and itinerant life; that his meat must have chiefly consisted in the flesh of clean animals, with a sufficiency of pulse for bread; that his chief drink was their milk; his clothing their skins; and his beasts of burden, asses and camels (for as yet we read of no horses); and the ordinary employment of his servants, to take care of the flocks, and to serve their master. Where the patriarchs became resident for any considerable time, they undoubtedly cultivated the ground to produce grain.

Verse 17. The Lord plagued Pharaoh] In the parallel commended her before Pharaoh; and the woman was <sup>h</sup>taken into Pharaoh's house.

16 And he <sup>i</sup>entreated Abram well for her sake: and he had sheep, and oxen, and he-asses, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and she-asses, and camels.

17 And the Lord <sup>j</sup>plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues, because of Sarai Abram's wife.

18 And Pharaoh called Abram and said, <sup>k</sup>What <sup>k</sup>is this that thou hast done unto me? why didst thou not tell me that she <sup>l</sup>was thy wife?

19 Why saidst thou, She is my sister? so I might have taken her to me to wife: now therefore behold thy wife, take <sup>m</sup>her, and go thy way.

20 <sup>n</sup>And Pharaoh commanded <sup>n</sup>his men concerning him: and they sent him away, and his wife, and all that he had.

case, chap. xx. 18, all the females in the family of Abimelech, who had taken Sarah in nearly the same way, were made barren; possibly this might have been the case here; yet much more seems to be signified by the expression great plagues. Whatever these plagues were, it is evident they were understood by Pharaoh as proofs of the disapprobation of God; and, consequently, even at this time in Egypt there was some knowledge of the primitive and true religion.

Verse 20. Commanded his men concerning him] Gave particular and strict orders to attend Abram and his family every accommodation for their journey.

The weighty and important contents of this chapter demand our most attentive consideration. Abram is a second time called to leave his country, kindred, and father's house, and go to a place he knew not. Everything was apparently against him but the voice of God. This to Abram was sufficient; he could trust his Maker, and knew he could not do wrong in following his command. He is therefore proposed to us in the scriptures as a pattern of faith, patience, and loving obedience. Implicit faith in the promise of God, and prompt obedience to his commands, become us, not only as his creatures, but as sinners, called to separate from evil workers and wicked ways, and travel, by that faith which worketh by love, in the way that leads to the paradise of God.

How greatly must the faith of this blessed man have been tried, when, coming to the very land in which he is promised so much blessedness, he finds instead of plenty a grievous famine! Who in his circumstances would not have gone back to his own country and kindred? Still he is not stumbled; prudence directs him to turn aside and go to Egypt, till God shall choose to remove this famine. Is it to be wondered at that, in this tried state, he should have serious apprehensions for the safety of his life? Sarai his affectionate wife and faithful companion, he supposes he shall lose; her beauty, he suspects, will cause her to be desired by men of power, whose will he shall not be able to resist. If he appear to be her husband, his death he supposes to be certain; if she pass for his sister, he may be well used on her account; he will not tell a lie, but he is tempted to prevaricate by suppressing a part of the truth. Here is a weakness which, however we may be inclined to pity or excuse it, we should never imitate. It is recorded with its own condemnation. He should have risked all rather than have prevaricated. But how could he think of lightly giving up such a wife? Surely he who would not risk his life for the safety and the protection of a good wife, is not worthy of one. Here his faith was deficient. He still credited the general promise, and acted on that faith in reference to it; but he did not use his faith in reference to intervening circumstances, to which it was equally applicable. Many trust God for their souls and eternity, who do not trust in him for their bodies and for time. To him who follows God fully in simplicity of heart, every thing must ultimately succeed. Had Abram and Sarai simply passed for what they were, they had incurred no danger. The issue sufficiently proves this.

CHAPTER XIII.

Abram and his family return out of Egypt to Canaan, 1, 2. He revisits Beth-el, and there invokes the Lord, 3, 4. In consequence of the great increase in the flocks of Abram and Lot, their herdsmen disagree; which obliges the patriarch and his nephew to separate, 5-9. Lot, being permitted to make his choice of the land, chooses the plains of Jordan, 10, 11, and pitches his tent near to Sodom, while Abram abides in Canaan, 12. Bad character of the people of Sodom, 13. The Lord renews his promise to Abram, 14-17. Abram removes to the plains of Manure, near Hebron, and builds an altar to the Lord, 18.

AND Abram went up out of Egypt, he, and his wife, and all that they had, and Lot with him, <sup>a</sup>into the south.

<sup>7</sup> And there was <sup>g</sup>a strife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle and the herdmen of Lot's cattle: <sup>h</sup>and the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land.

<sup>8</sup> And Abram said unto Lot, <sup>i</sup>Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be <sup>j</sup>brethren.

thyself, I pray thee, from me: <sup>l</sup>if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right: or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left.

<sup>15</sup> For all the land which thou seest, <sup>w</sup>to thee will I give it, and <sup>x</sup>to thy seed for ever.

<sup>16</sup> And <sup>y</sup>I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, <sup>z</sup>then shall thy seed also be numbered.

Verse 1. Abram went up out of Egypt—into the south.] Probably the south of Canaan.

Verse 2. Abram was very rich.] Josephus says that a part of this property was acquired by teaching the Egyptians arts and sciences.

Verse 6. Their substance was great.] As their families increased, it was necessary their flocks should increase also, as from those flocks they derived their clothing, food, and drink. Many also were offered in sacrifice to God.

They could not dwell together.] 1. Because their flocks were great. 2. Because the Canaanites and the Perizzites had already occupied a considerable part of the land. 3. Because there appears to have been envy between the herdmen of Abram and Lot.

Verse 8. For we be brethren.] We are of the same family, worship the same God in the same way, have the same promises, and look for the same end. Why then should there be strife?

Verse 9. Is not the whole land before thee?] As the patriarch or head of the family, Abram, by prescriptive right, might have chosen his own portion first, and appointed Lot his; but intent upon peace, and feeling pure and parental affection for his nephew, he permitted him to make his choice first.

Verse 10. Like the land of Egypt, as thou comest unto Zoar.] As Paradise was watered by the four neighbouring streams, and as Egypt was watered by the annual overflowing of the Nile; so were the plains of the Jordan, and all the land on the way to Zoar, well watered and fertilized by the overflowing of the Jordan.

Verse 11. Then Lot chose him all the plain] Lot should have left the choice to the patriarch, and should have been guided by his counsel; but he took his own way, trusting to his own judgment, and guided only by the sight of his eyes; he chose the land, without considering the character of the inhabitants, or what advantages or disadvantages it might afford him in spiritual things. This choice, as we shall see in the sequel, had nearly proved the ruin of his body, soul, and family.

Verse 13. The men of Sodom were wicked] Ravi, from ra, to break in pieces, destroy, and afflict, and sinners, chattaim, from chata, to miss the mark, to step wrong, to miscarry. Such were the companions Lot must have in the fruitful land he had chosen. This, however, amounts to no more than the common character of sinful man; but the people of Sodom were exceedingly sinful and wicked before, or against, the Lord—they were sinners of no common character; they excelled in unrighteousness, and soon filled up the measure of their iniquities.

Verse 14. The Lord said unto Abram] It is very likely that the angel of the covenant appeared to Abram in open day, when he could take a distinct view of the length and the breadth of this good land. The revelation made chap. xv. 5, was evidently made in the night; for then he was called to number the stars, which could not be seen but in the night-season: here he is called on to number the dust of the earth, ver. 16, which could not be seen but in the daylight.

Verse 15. To thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever.] The design of God was not that Abram himself should possess it, but that his posterity should, till the manifestation of Christ in the flesh. And this is chiefly what is to be understood by the words for ever, to the end of the present dispensation, and the commencement of the new.

17 Arise, walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee.

Verse 18. Abram removed his tent] Continued to travel and pitch in different places, till at last he fixed his tent by the oak of Mamre, which is in Hebron. Mamre was an Amorite then living, with whom Abram made a league, chap. xiv. 13; and the oak probably went by his name, because he was the possessor of the ground. Hebron is called Kirjath-arba, chapter xxiii. 2; but it is very likely that Hebron was its primitive name, and that it had the above appellation from being the residence of four gigantic or powerful Anakim, for Kirjath-arba literally signifies the city of the four.

Built there an altar unto the Lord.] On which he offered sacrifice, as the word nizbeach, from zabach, to slay, imports.

If earthly possessions could produce happiness, it must be granted that the family of Abram had now a considerable share of it in their power. But happiness must have its seat in the mind, and like that, be of a spiritual nature; consequently earthly goods cannot give it; they always engender care and anxiety, and often strifes and contentions. The peace of this amiable family had nearly been destroyed by the largeness of their possessions. Abram and his nephew were obliged to separate. Lot chooses the most fertile district in that country, and even sacrifices reverence and filial affection at the shrine of worldly advantage; but the issue proved that a pleasant worldly prospect may not be the most advantageous, even to our secular affairs. Abram prospered greatly in the comparatively barren part of the land, while Lot lost all his possessions, and nearly the lives of himself and family, in that land which appeared to him like the garden of the Lord, like a second paradise. The inhabitants of Sodom were sinners and exceedingly wicked, and their profligacy was of that kind which luxury produces; they fed themselves without fear, and they acted without shame. Lot however was, through the mercy of God, preserved from this contagion: he retained his religion; and this supported his soul and saved his life, when his goods and his wife perished. Let us learn from this to be jealous over our own wills and wishes; to distrust flattering prospects, and seek and secure a heavenly inheritance. A man's life—the comfort and happiness of it—does not consist in the multitude of the things he possesses. "One house, one day's food, and one suit of raiment," says the Arabic proverb, "are sufficient for thee; and if thou die before noon, thou hast one half too much." The example of Abram, in constantly erecting an altar wherever he settled, is worthy of serious regard. Reader, has God an altar in thy house? Dost thou sacrifice to him?

CHAPTER XIV.

The war of four confederate kings against the five kings of Canaan, 1-3. The confederate kings overrun and pillage the whole country, 4-7. Battle between them and the kings of Canaan, 8, 9. The latter are defeated, and the principal part of the armies of the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah slain, 10; on which these two cities are plundered, 11. Lot, his goods, and his family, are also taken and carried away, 12. Abram, being informed of the disaster of his nephew, 13, arms three hundred and eighteen of his servants, and pursues them, 14; overtakes and routs them, and recovers Lot and his family, and their goods, 15, 16; is met on his return by the king of Sodom, and by Melchizedek, king of Salem, with refreshments for himself and men, 17, 18. Melchizedek blesses Abram, and receives from him, as priest of the most high God, the tenth of all the spoils, 19, 20. The king of Sodom offers to Abram all the goods he has taken from the enemy, 21; which Abram positively refuses, having vowed to God to receive no recompence for a victory of which he knew God to be the sole author, 22, 23; but desires that a proportion of the spoils be given to Aner, Eshcol, and Mamre, who had accompanied him on this expedition, 24.

AND it came to pass, in the days of Amraphel king of Shinar, Arioch king of Ellasar, Chedorlaomer king of Elam, and Tidal king of nations;

2 That these made war with Bera king of Sodom, and with Birsha king of Gomorrah, Shinar king of Admah, and Shemeber king of Zebolim, and the king of Bela, which is Zoar.

3 All these were joined together in the vale of Siddim, which is the salt sea.

Emims] A people great and many in the days of Moses, and tall as the Anakim. They dwelt among the Moabites, by whom they were reputed giants; Deut. ii. 10, 11.

Shaveh Kiriathaim] Rather, as the margin, the plain of Kiriathaim, which was a city afterwards belonging to Sihon king of Heshbon; Josh. xiii. 19.

Verse 6. The Horites] A people that dwelt in Mount Seir, till Esau and his sons drove them thence; Deut. ii. 22.

El-paran] The plain or oak of Paran, which was a city in the wilderness of Paran; chap. xxi. 21.

Verse 7. En-mishpat] The well of judgment; probably so called from the judgment pronounced by God on Moses and Aaron for their rebellion at that place; Numb. xx. 1-10.

9 With Chedorlaomer the king of Elam, and with Tidal king of nations, and Amraphel king of Shinar, and Arioch king of Ellasar; four kings with five.

10 And the vale of Siddim was full of "slime-pits; and the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah fled, and fell there; and they that remained fled "to the mountain.

11 And they took "all the goods of Sodom and Gomorrah, and all their victuals, and went their way.

12 And they took Lot, Abram's "brother's son, "who dwelt in Sodom, and his goods, and departed.

13 And there came one that had escaped, and told Abram the Hebrew; for "he dwelt in the plain of Mamre the Amorite, brother of Eshcol, and brother of Aner: "and these were confederate with Abram.

14 And when Abram heard that "his brother was [Hazon-tamar.] Called, in the Chaldee, Engraddi; a city in the land of Canaan, which fell to the lot of Judah; Josh. xv. 62.

Verse 8. Bela, (the same is Zoar) That is, It was called Zoar after the destruction of Sodom.

Verse 10. Slime-pits Places where asphaltus or bitumen sprang out of the ground; this substance abounded in that country.

[Fell there] It either signifies they were defeated on this spot, and many of them slain, or that multitudes of them had perished in the bitumen pits.

Verse 11. They took all the goods, &c. This was a predatory war, such as the Arabs carry on to the present day.

Verse 13. Abram the Hebrew It is very likely that Abram had this appellation from his coming from beyond the river Euphrates to enter Canaan, from abar to pass over.

Verse 14. He armed his trained servants These amounted to three hundred and eighteen in number: and how many were in the divisions of Mamre, Eshcol, and Aner, we know not; but they and their men certainly accompanied him in this expedition. See ver. 24.

Verse 15. And he divided himself against them It required both considerable courage and address in Abram to lead him to attack the victorious armies of these four kings with so small a number of troops. His affection for Lot appears to have been his chief motive. It is the property of a great and generous mind, not only to forgive, but to forget offences; and at all times to repay evil with good.

Verse 16. And he brought back—the women also This is brought in by the sacred historian with peculiar interest and tenderness. All who read the account must be in pain for the fate of wives and daughters fallen into the hands of a ferocious, licentious, and victorious soldiery.

Verse 17. The king of Sodom went out to meet him This could not have been Bera, for both he and Birsha, king of Gomorrah, were slain at the bitumen-pits in the vale of Siddim; but another person in the mean time might have succeeded to the government.

Verse 18. And Melchizedek king of Salem He appears to have been as real a personage as Bera, Birsha, or Shinab, though we have no more of his genealogy than we have of theirs.

[Brought forth bread and wine] Certainly to refresh Abram and his men, exhausted with the late battle and fatigues of taken captive, he "armed his "trained servants, "born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued them "unto Dan.

15 And he divided himself against them, he and his servants, by night, and "smote them, and pursued them unto Hobah, which is on the left hand of Damascus.

16 And he brought back "all the goods, and also brought again his brother Lot, and his goods, and the women also, and the people.

17 And the king of Sodom "went out to meet him "after his return from the slaughter of Chedorlaomer, and of the kings that were with him, at the valley of Shaveh, which is the "king's dale.

18 And "Melchizedek king of Salem brought forth bread and wine: and he was "the priest of "the most high God.

19 And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, "Possessor of heaven and earth.

20 And "blessed be the most high God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him tithes "of all.

21 And the king of Sodom said unto Abram, Give me the "persons, and take the goods to thyself.

the journey; not in the way of sacrifices, &c.; this is an idle conjecture. [The bread and wine were probably part of a symbolical ceremony. They could hardly be intended for refreshment alone, for Abraham had taken a large share of "victuals" with the spoil.]

[He was the priest of the most high God.] He had preserved in his family and among his subjects the worship of the true God, and the primitive patriarchal institutions; by these the father of every family was both king and priest.

Melchizedek is called here king of Salem, and the most judicious interpreters allow that by Salem Jerusalem is meant. That it bore this name anciently is evident from Ps. lxxvi. 2: "In SALEM also is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion." From the use made of this part of the sacred history by David, and by St. Paul, we learn that there was something very mysterious, and at the same time typical, in this Canaanitish prince. 1. In his person he was a representative and type of Christ; 2. His name signifies my righteous king, or king of righteousness. This name he probably had from the pure and righteous administration of his government; and this is one of the characters of our blessed Lord. 3. Office; he was a priest of the most high God. The word cohen, which signifies both prince and priest, because the patriarchs sustained this double office, has both its root and proper signification in the Arabic; kahana signifies to approach; and from hence to officiate as priest before God. Thus Melchizedek represented Christ in his sacerdotal character. 4. His residence; he was king of Salem. Shalam signifies to make whole, complete, or perfect; and hence it means peace. Christ is called the Prince of peace, because, by his incarnation, sacrifice, and mediation, he procures and establishes peace between God and man. His residence is peace in every believing upright heart.

Verse 19. And he blessed him This was a part of the priest's office, to bless in the name of the Lord, for ever.

Verse 20. And he gave him tithes A tenth part of all the spoils he had taken from the confederate kings. These Abram gave as a tribute to the most high God, who, being the Possessor of heaven and earth, dispenses all spiritual and temporal favours, and demands the gratitude of all his subjects. Almost all nations have agreed in giving a tenth part of their property to be employed in religious uses. The tithes were afterwards granted to the Levites for the use of the sanctuary, and the maintenance of themselves and their families, as they had no other inheritance in Israel.

22 And Abram said to the king of Sodom, I have lift up mine hand unto the LORD, the most high God, <sup>b</sup> the Possessor of heaven and earth,

23 That <sup>c</sup> I will not take from a thread even to a shoe-latchet, and that I will not take any thing that is thine, *Exod. vi. 8. Dan. xii. 7. Rev. x. 5, 6.—<sup>b</sup> Ver. 19. Ch. xxi. 33.

Verse 22. I have lift up mine hand] The primitive mode of appealing to God, and calling him to witness a particular transaction; this no doubt generally obtained among the faithful till circumcision, the sign of the covenant, was established. After this, in swearing, the hand was often placed on the circumcised part; see chap. xxiv. 2 and 9.

Verse 23. From a thread even to a shoe-latchet] A proverbial expression, the full meaning of which is perhaps not known. Among the rabbinical writers, chut, or chuti, signifies a fillet worn by young women; taken in this sense it will give a good meaning here: "I will not receive the smallest portion of the property either of the women or men, from a girl's fillet to a man's shoe-tie."

Verse 24. Save only that which the young men have eaten] His own servants had partaken of the victuals which the confederate kings had carried away; see ver. 11.

1. We have already seen the danger to which Lot exposed himself in preferring a fertile region, though peopled with the workers of iniquity. His sorrows commence in the captivity of himself and family, and the loss of all his property, though by the good providence of God he and they were rescued. 2. Long observation has proved that the company a man keeps will either be the means of his salvation or destruction. 3. A generous man cannot be con-lest thou shouldst say, I have made Abram rich:

24 Save only that which the young men have eaten, and the portion of the men <sup>d</sup> which went with me, Aner, Eshcol, and Mamre; let them take their portion.

tented with mere personal safety while others are in danger, nor with his own prosperity while others are in distress. 4. Abram must have known that by numbers he could not prevail, and that in this case particularly the battle was the Lord's. 5. While depending on the divine blessing and succour, he knew he must use the means he had in his power. God requires a man to use all the faculties he has given him in every lawful enterprise, and only in the conscientious use of them can he expect the divine blessing. 6. Here is a war undertaken by Abram on motives the most honourable and conscientious; therefore he takes no spoils, and returns peaceably to his own possessions. 7. All that has been already spoken concerning Melchizedek as a type of Christ may be recapitulated in a few words. 1. The Redeemer of the world is the King of righteousness; he creates it, maintains it, and rules by it. 2. His empire is the empire of peace; this he proclaims to them who are afar off, and to them that are nigh; to the Jew and to the Gentile. 3. He is Priest of the most high God, and has laid down his life for the sin of the world; and through this sacrifice the blessing of God is derived on them that believe. Reader, take him for thy King as well as thy Priest; he saves those only who submit to his authority, and take his Spirit for the regulator of their heart, and his word for the director of their conduct.

CHAPTER XV.

God appears to Abram in a vision, and gives him great encouragement. 1. Abram's request and complaint, 2, 3. God promises him a son, 4; and an exceedingly numerous posterity, 5. Abram credits the promise, and his faith is counted unto him for righteousness, 6. Jehovah proclaims himself, and renews the promise of Canaan to his posterity, 7. Abram requires a sign of its fulfilment, 8. Jehovah directs him to offer a sacrifice of five different animals, 9; which he accordingly does, 10, 11. God reveals to him the affliction of his posterity in Egypt, and the duration of that affliction, 12, 13. Promises to bring them back to the land of Canaan with great affluence, 14-16. Renews the covenant with Abram, and mentions the possessions which should be given to his posterity, 18-21.

*Dan. x. 1. Acts x. 10, 11.—<sup>b</sup> Ch. xxvi. 24. Dan. x. 12. Luke i. 13, 30.

Verse 1. The word of the Lord came unto Abram] This is the first place where God is represented as revealing himself by his word. There have been various conjectures concerning the manner in which God revealed his will, not only to the patriarchs, but also to the prophets, evangelists, and apostles. It seems to have been done in different ways. 1. By a personal appearance of him who was afterwards incarnated for the salvation of mankind. 2. By an audible voice, sometimes accompanied with emblematical appearances. 3. By visions, which took place either in the night in ordinary sleep, or when the persons were cast into a temporary trance by day-light, or when about their ordinary business. 4. By the ministry of angels appearing in human bodies, and performing certain miracles to accredit their mission. 5. By the powerful agency of the Spirit of God upon the mind, giving it a strong conception and supernatural persuasion of the truth of the things perceived by the understanding. It was probably in the third sense that the revelation in the text was given.

2 And Abram said, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, <sup>e</sup> seeing I go childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus?

3 And Abram said, Behold, to me thou hast

Fear not] Dr. Dodd would read, For Abram had said, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless, &c.

I am thy shield, &c.] Can it be supposed that Abram understood these words as promising him temporal advantages at all corresponding to the magnificence of these promises? If he did, he was disappointed through the whole course of his life, for he never enjoyed such a state of worldly prosperity as could justify the strong language in the text. Shall we lose sight of Abram, and say that his posterity was intended, and Abram understood the promises as relating to them, and not to himself or immediately to his own family? Then the question recurs, Did the Israelites ever enjoy such a state of temporal affluence as seems to be intended by the above promise! To this every man acquainted with their history will without hesitation, say No.

What then is intended? Just what the words state. God was Abram's portion, and he is the portion of every right-given no seed: and lo, *one born in my house is mine heir.

4 And behold, the word of the LORD came unto him saying, This shall not be thine heir; but he that <sup>b</sup>shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir.

5 And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and <sup>c</sup>tell the <sup>d</sup>stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, *So shall thy seed be.

6 And he <sup>e</sup>believed in the LORD; and he <sup>f</sup>counted it to him for righteousness.

7 And he said unto him, I am the LORD that <sup>h</sup>brought thee out of <sup>i</sup>Ur of the Chaldees, <sup>j</sup>to give thee this land to inherit it.

8 And he said, Lord God, <sup>k</sup>whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?

eous soul; for to Abram and the children of his faith he gives not a portion in this life.

I am, says the Almighty, thy shield—thy constant covering and protector, and thy exceeding great reward, sekarcha harbeh meod, "THAT superlatively multiplied reward of thine." It is not the Canaan I promise, but the salvation that is to come through the promised seed. Hence it was that Abram rejoiced to see his day.

Verse 2. What wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless? The anxiety of the Asiatics to have offspring is intense and universal.

And the steward of my house? How can the promise be fulfilled, when, far from a spiritual seed, he has not even a person in his family that has a natural right to his property, and when a stranger is likely to be his heir? This seems to be the general sense of the passage; but who this steward of his house, this Eliczer of Damascus, was, commentators are not agreed.

Verse 5. Look now toward heaven. It appears that this whole transaction took place in the evening. Abram had either two visions, that recorded in ver. 1, and that in ver. 12, &c.; or what is mentioned in the beginning of this chapter is a part of the occurrences which took place after the sacrifice mentioned ver. 9, &c.: but it is more likely that there was a vision of that kind already described, and afterwards a second, in which he received the revelation mentioned ver. 13-16.

Verse 6. And he believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness. This I conceive to be one of the most important passages in the whole Old Testament. It properly contains and specifies that doctrine of justification by faith which engrosses so considerable a share of the epistles of St. Paul, and at the foundation of which is the atonement made by the Son of God: And he (Abram) believed (heemin, he put faith) in Jehovah; yayichshebeha lo, and he counted it—the faith he put in Jehovah.—to HIM for righteousness, tsedakah, or justification; though there was no act in the case but that of the mind and heart, no work of any kind. [Dr. Clarke is here obscure. Jehovah counted the act of faith to Abraham for righteousness.] Hence the doctrine of justification by faith, without any merit of works; for in this case there could be none—no works of Abram which could merit the salvation of the whole human race. It was the promise of God which he credited, and in the blessedness of which he became a partaker through faith.

Verse 8. And he said, Lord (Ged) Adonai Yehovah. Adonai is the word which the Jews in reading always substitute for Jehovah, as they count it impious to pronounce this name. It signifies my director, basis, supporter, prop or stay; and is rendered in our translation Lord; the same term by which the word Jehovah is expressed: but to distinguish between the two, and to show the reader when the original is Yehovah, and when Adonai, the first is always put in capitals, LORD, the latter in plain Roman characters, Lord.

Verse 9. Take me an heifer. It is worthy of remark, that and a ram of three years old, and a turtle-dove, and a young pigeon.

10 And he took unto him all these, and <sup>m</sup>divided them in the midst, and laid each piece one against another: but <sup>n</sup>the birds divided he not.

11 And when the fowls came down upon the carcasses, Abram drove them away.

12 And when the sun was going down, <sup>o</sup>a deep sleep fell upon Abram; and, lo, an horror of great darkness fell upon him.

13 And he said unto Abram, Know of a surety <sup>p</sup>that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and <sup>q</sup>they shall afflict them four hundred years;

14 And also that nation, whom they shall serve, <sup>r</sup>will I judge: and afterward <sup>s</sup>shall they come out with great substance.

every animal allowed or commanded to be sacrificed under the Mosaic law is to be found in this list. And is it not a proof that God was now giving to Abram an epitome of that law and its sacrifices which he intended more fully to reveal to Moses; the essence of which consisted in its sacrifices, which typified the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world?

Verse 10. Divided them in the midst. See chap. vi. 18. The word covenant, from con, together, and venio, I come, signifies an agreement, association, or meeting between two or more parties; for it is impossible that a covenant can be made between an individual and himself, whether God or man. A covenant always supposed one of these four things; 1. That the contracting parties had been hitherto unknown to each other, and were brought by the covenant into a state of acquaintance. 2. That they had been previously in a state of hostility or enmity, and were brought by the covenant into a state of pacification and friendship. 3. Or that, being known to each other, they now agree to unite their counsels, strength, property, &c., for the accomplishment of a particular purpose, mutually subservient to the interests of both. Or 4. It implies an agreement to succour and defend a third party in cases of oppression and distress. For whatever purpose a covenant was made, it was ever ratified by a sacrifice offered to God; and the passing between the divided parts of the victim appears to have signified that each agreed, if they broke their engagements, to submit to the punishment of being cut asunder; which we find from Matt. xxiv. 51, Luke xii. 46, was an ancient mode of punishment. [In this case the act described was rather of the nature of a sign than a covenant, for only one of the contracting parties passed through the sacrificed animals, ver. 17.]

But the birds divided he not.] According to the law, Lev. i. 17, fowls were not to be divided asunder, but only cloven for the purpose of taking out the intestines.

Verse 11. And when the fowls. Birds of prey, came down upon the carcasses to devour them, Abram, who stood by his sacrifice waiting for the manifestation of God, drove them away, that they might neither pollute nor devour what had been thus consecrated to God.

Verse 12. A deep sleep. The same word which is used to express the sleep into which Adam was cast, previous to the formation of Eve; chap. ii. 21.

An horror of great darkness.] Which God designed to be expressive of the affliction and misery into which his posterity should be brought during the four hundred years of their bondage in Egypt; as the next verse particularly states.

Verse 14. And also that nation, &c.] How remarkably was this promise fulfilled, in the redemption of Israel from its bondage, in the plagues and destruction of the Egyptians, and in the immense wealth which the Israelites brought out of Egypt!

Verse 15. Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace. Two things seem to be distinctly marked here: 1. The soul of Abram should be introduced among the assembly of the first-born; Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace. 2. His body should be buried after a long life, one hundred and seventy-five years, chap. xxv. 7.

16 But *in the fourth generation they shall come hither again; for the iniquity <sup>b</sup> of the Amorites <sup>c</sup> is not yet full.

Verse 16. In the fourth generation] In former times most people counted by generations, to each of which was assigned a term of years amounting to 20, 25, 30, 33, 100, 108, or 110; for the generation was of various lengths among various people, at different times. From these words we learn that there is a certain pitch of iniquity to which nations may arrive before they are destroyed, and beyond which divine justice does not permit them to pass.

Verse 17. Smoking furnace, and a burning lamp] Probably the smoking furnace might be designed as an emblem of the sore afflictions of the Israelites in Egypt; but the burning lamp was certainly the symbol of the divine presence, which, passing between the pieces, ratified the covenant with Abram, as the following verse immediately states.

Verse 18. The Lord made a covenant] Carath berith signifies to cut a covenant, or rather the covenant sacrifice; for as no covenant was made without one, and the creature was cut in two that the contracting parties might pass between the pieces, hence cutting the covenant signified making the covenant. The same form of speech obtained among the Romans; and because, in making their covenants they always slew an animal and divided the parts as we have already seen, hence among them percutere fœdus, to smite a covenant, and scindere fœdus, to cleave a covenant, were terms which signified simply to make or enter into a covenant.

From the river of Egypt] Not the Nile, but the river called Sichor, which was before or on the border of Egypt, near to the Isthmus of Suez; though some think that by this a branch of the Nile is meant. [Without doubt the river of Egypt was the Nile.]

Verse 19. The Kenites, &c.] Here are ten nations mentioned, though afterwards reckoned but seven; see Deut. vii. 1; Acts xiii. 19. Probably some of them which existed in Abram's time had been blended with others before the time of Moses, so that seven only out of the ten then remained; see part of these noticed, Gen. x.

In this chapter there are three subjects which must be particularly interesting to the pious reader. 1. The consecration of God in revealing himself to mankind in a variety of ways, so as to render it absolutely evident that he had spoken, that he loved mankind, and that he had made every provision for their eternal welfare. The subject of the discovery also was such as sufficiently attested its truth to all future generations, for it concerned matters yet in futurity, so distinctly marked, so positively promised, and so highly interesting, as to make them objects of attention, memory, desire, and gratitude.

2. The way of salvation by faith in the promised Saviour, which now began to be explicitly declared. God gives the promise of salvation, and by means in which it was impossible, humanly speaking, that it should take place; teaching us, 1. That the whole work was spiritual, supernatural, and divine; and 2. That no human power could suffice to produce it. This Abram believed while he was yet uncircumcised, and his faith was accounted to him for righteousness or justification; God thereby teaching that he would pardon, accept, and receive into favour all who should believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. And this very case has ever since been the standard of justification by faith; and the experience of millions of men, built on this foundation, has sufficiently attested the truth and solidity of the ground on which it was built.

3. The foundation of the doctrine itself is laid in the covenant made between God and Abram in behalf of all the families of the earth, and this covenant is ratified by a sacrifice. By this covenant man is bound to God, and God graciously binds himself to man. As this covenant referred to the incarnation of Christ; and Abram, both as to himself and posterity, was to partake of the benefits of it by faith; hence faith, not works, is the only condition on which God, through Christ, forgives sins, and brings to the promised spiritual inheritance. This covenant still stands open, Jesus is at once the sacrifice and Mediator of it. And every human soul must ratify the covenant for himself. Reader, hast thou done so?

CHAPTER XVI.

Sarai having no child gives Hagar her maid to Abram for wife, 1-3. She conceives and despises her mistress.

4. Sarai is offended, and upbraids Abram, 5. Abram vindicates himself; and Hagar, being hardly used by her mistress, runs away, 6. She is met by an angel, and counselled to return to her mistress, 7-9. God promises greatly to multiply her seed, 10. Gives the name of Ishmael to the child that should be born of her, 11. Shows his disposition and character, 12. Hagar calls the name of the Lord who spoke to her, 'Thou God seest me,' 13. She calls the name of the well at which the angel met her, Beer-lahai-roi, 14. Ishmael is born in the 86th year of Abram's age, 15, 16.

NOW Sarai, Abram's wife, <sup>a</sup>bare him no children: and she had an handmaid, <sup>b</sup>an Egyptian, whose name was <sup>c</sup>Hagar.

Verse 1. She had an handmaid, an Egyptian] As Hagar was an Egyptian, it is very probable that she was one of those female slaves which Pharaoh gave to Abram when he so-

Verse 2. Go in unto my maid] Female slaves constituted

3 And Sarai, Abram's wife, took Hagar her maid, the Egyptian, after Abram <sup>c</sup>had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, and gave her to her husband Abram to be his wife.

4 And he went in unto Hagar, and she conceived: and when she saw that she had conceived, her mistress was <sup>d</sup>despised in her eyes.

5 And Sarai said unto Abram, My wrong <sup>be</sup> upon thee: I have given my maid unto thy bosom; and when she saw that she had conceived, I was despised in her eyes: <sup>e</sup>the Lord judge between me and thee.

7 And the angel of the Lord found her by a fountain of water in the wilderness, <sup>k</sup>by the fountain in the way to <sup>l</sup>Shur.

8 And he said, Hagar, Sarai's maid, whence comest thou? and whither wilt thou go? And she said, I flee from the face of my mistress Sarai.

a part of the private possessions of a wife, and she had a right, according to usage, to dispose of them as she pleased, the husband having no authority in the case.

[I may obtain children by her] The slave's person, her labour, with all her children, were her owner's property. On this ground Sarai gave her slave to Abram.

Verse 5. My wrong be upon thee] This appears to be intended as a reproach to Abram, containing an insinuation that it was his fault that she herself had not been a mother, and that now he carried himself more affectionately towards Hagar than he did to her, in consequence of which conduct the slave became petulant. To remove all suspicion of this kind, and to prevent jealousy, Abram delivers up Hagar into her hand.

Verse 6. Sarai dealt hardly with her] Teanneha, she afflicted her; the term implying stripes and hard usage, to bring down the body and humble the mind.

Verse 7. The angel of the Lord] That Jesus Christ, in a body suited to the dignity of his nature, frequently appeared to the patriarchs, has been already intimated. That the person mentioned here was greater than any created being is sufficiently evident from the following particulars:

1. From his promising to perform what God alone could do, and foretelling what God alone could know, ver. 10, 11, 12.

2. Hagar calls the person who spoke to her El, and addresses him in the way of worship, which had he been a created angel he would have refused.

3. Moses calls this angel expressly JEHOVAH: for says he, she called the NAME of the Lord that spake to her, ver. 13. Now this is a name never given to any created being.

4. The person who is here called the Angel of the Lord, is the same who is called the redeeming Angel, or the Angel the Redeemer, Gen. xlviii. 16; the Angel of God's presence, Isa. lxiii. 9; and the Angel of the Covenant, Mal. iii. 1; and is the same person which the Septuagint, [Isa. ix. 6, terms the Angel of the great Counsel or Design, viz., of redeeming man, and filling the earth with righteousness.

5. These things cannot be spoken of any human or created being; and as in all these cases there is a most evident personal appearance, Jesus Christ alone can be meant: for of God the Father it has been ever true that no man hath at any time seen his shape, nor has he ever limited himself to any definable personal appearance.

Verse 10. I will multiply thy seed exceedingly] Who says this? The person who is called the Angel of the Lord; and he certainly speaks with all that authority which is proper to God.

Verse 11. And shall call his name Ishmael] From shama, he heard, and El, God; for says the Angel, THE LORD

9 And the angel of the Lord said unto her, Return to thy mistress, and <sup>m</sup>submit thyself under her hands.

10 And the angel of the Lord said unto her, <sup>n</sup>I will multiply thy seed exceedingly, that it shall not be numbered for multitude.

11 And the angel of the Lord said unto her, Behold, thou art with child, and shalt bear a son, <sup>o</sup>and shalt call his name <sup>p</sup>Ishmael; because the Lord hath heard thy affliction.

12 <sup>q</sup>And he will be a wild man; his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him; <sup>r</sup>and he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren.

13 And she called the name of the Lord that spake unto her, Thou God seest me: for she said, Have I also here looked after him <sup>s</sup>that seeth me?

14 Wherefore the well was called <sup>t</sup>Beer-lahai-roi; behold, it is <sup>u</sup>between Kadesh and Bered.

15 And <sup>v</sup>Hagar bare Abram a son; and Abram called his son's name, which Hagar bare, <sup>w</sup>Ishmael.

16 And Abram was fourscore and six years old when Hagar bare Ishmael to Abram.

HATH HEARD thy affliction. Thus the name of the child must ever keep the mother in remembrance of God's merciful interposition in her behalf, and remind the child and the man that he was an object of God's gracious and providential goodness. Afflictions and distresses have a voice in the ears of God, even when prayer is restrained: but how much more powerfully do they speak when endured in meekness of spirit, with confidence in and supplication to the Lord!

Verse 12. He will be a wild man] As the root of the original word does not appear in the Hebrew Bible, it is probably found in the Arabic farra, to run away, to run wild; and hence the wild ass, from its fleetness and its unmanageable nature. What is said of the wild ass, Job xxxix. 5-8, affords the very best description that can be given of the Ishmaelites (the Bedouins and wandering Arabs).

His hand will be against every man and every man's hand against him] Many potentates have endeavoured to subjugate the wandering or wild Arabs; but, though they have had temporary triumphs, they have been ultimately unsuccessful. Had the Pontateuch no other argument to evince its divine origin, the account of Ishmael, and the prophecy concerning his descendants, collated with their history and manner of life during a period of nearly four thousand years, would be sufficient.

The country which these free descendants of Ishmael may be properly said to possess, stretches from Aleppo to the Arabian sea, and from Egypt to the Persian gulf. A tract of land not less than 1800 miles in length, by 900 miles in breadth; see chap. xvii. 20.

Verse 13. And she called the name of the Lord] She invoked the name of Jehovah, and her words seem to intimate that she had been seeking the divine help and protection, for she says, Have I also (or have I not also) looked after him that seeth me?

This last clause of the verse is very obscure, and is rendered differently by all the Versions. The general sense taken out of it is this, that Hagar was now convinced that God himself had appeared unto her, and was surprised to find that notwithstanding this, she was still permitted to live; for it was generally supposed that if God appeared to any they must be consumed by his glories.

Verse 14. Wherefore the well was called Beer-lahai-roi] "A well to the Living One who seeth me." It appears, from ver. 7, that Hagar had sat down by a fountain or well of water in the wilderness of Shur, at which the Angel of the Lord found her. Two things seem implied here: 1. A dedication of the well to Him who had appeared to her; and 2. Faith in the promise; for he who is the Living One, existing in all generations, must have it ever in his power to accomplish promises which are to be fulfilled through the whole lapse of time.

Verse 15. And Hagar bore Abram a son, &c.] It appears, therefore, that Hagar returned at the command of the angel, believing the promise that God had made to her.

Called his son's name—Ishmael.] "Ishmael," says Ainsworth, "is the first man in the world whose name was given him of God before he was born."

It is very difficult to believe that a promise which refers to some natural event can possibly be fulfilled but through some natural means. And yet, what is nature but an instrument in God's hands? What we call natural effects are all performed by supernatural agency; for nature, that is the whole system of inanimate things, is as inert as any of the particles of matter of the aggregate of which it is composed, and can be a cause to no effect but as it is excited by a sovereign power. This is a doctrine of sound philosophy, and should be carefully considered by all, that men may see that without an overruling and universally energetic Providence, no effect whatever can be brought about. But besides these general influences of God in nature, which are all exhibited by what men call general laws, he chooses often to act supernaturally, i.e. independently of or against these general laws, that we may see that there is a God who does not confine himself to one way of working, but with means, without means, and even against natural means, accomplishes the gracious purposes of his mercy in the behalf of man.

The omniscience of God is a subject on which we should often reflect, and we can never do it unfruitfully while we connect it, as we ever should, with infinite goodness and mercy. Everything, person, and circumstance, is under its notice; and doth not the eye of God affect his heart? The poor slave, the stranger, the Egyptian, suffering under the severity of her hasty, unbelieving mistress, is seen by the all-wise and merciful God. He permits her to go to the desert, provides the spring to quench her thirst, and sends the Angel of the covenant to instruct and comfort her. How gracious is God! He permits us to get into distressing circumstances that he may give us effectual relief; and in such a way too that the excellence of the power may appear to be of him, and that we may learn to trust in him in all our distresses. God delights to do his creatures good.

In all transactions between God and man, mentioned in the sacred writings, we see one uniform agency; the great Mediator in all, and through all; God ever coming to man by him, and man having access to God through him.

CHAPTER XVII.

In the ninety-ninth year of Abram's life God again appears to him, announces his name as GOD ALMIGHTY, and commands him to walk perfectly before him, 1. Proposes to renew the covenant, 2. Abram's prostration, 3. The covenant specified, 4. Abram's name changed to ABRAHAM, and the reason given, 5. The privileges of the covenant enumerated, 6-8. The conditions of the covenant to be observed, not only by Abraham, but all his posterity, 9. Circumcision appointed as the sign or token of the covenant, 10, 11. The age at which and the persons of whom this was to be performed, 12, 13. The danger of neglecting this rite, 14. Sarai's name changed to SARAH, and a particular promise made to her, 15, 16. Abraham's joy at the prospect of the performance of a matter which, in the course of nature, was impossible, 17. His request for the preservation and prosperity of Ishmael, 18. The birth and blessedness of Isaac foretold, 19. Great prosperity promised to Ishmael, 20. But the covenant to be established not in his but in Isaac's posterity, 21. Abraham, Ishmael, and all the males in the family, circumcised, 23-27.

Verse 1. I am the Almighty God.] El shaddai, God all-sufficient; from shadai, to shed, to pour out. I am that God who pours out blessings, who gives them richly, abundantly, continually.

Walk before me.] Set thyself to walk—be firmly purposed, thoroughly determined to obey, before me: for my eye is ever on thee, therefore ever consider that God seeth thee. Who can imagine a stronger incitement to conscientious, persevering obedience?

Be thou perfect.] And thou shalt be perfect, i.e. altogether perfect. Be just such as the holy God would have thee to be, as the almighty God can make thee, and live as the all-sufficient God shall support thee. Our blessed Lord appears to have had these words pointedly in view, Matt. v. 48: Ye SHALL BE perfect, as your Father who is in heaven is perfect. But what does this imply? Why, to be saved from all the power, the guilt, and the contamination of sin. This is only the negative part of salvation, but it has also a positive part; to be perfect as our Father who is in heaven is perfect, to be filled with the fulness of God, to have Christ dwelling continually in the heart by faith, and to be rooted and grounded in love. This is the state in which man was created, for he was made in the image and likeness of God. This is the state from which man fell, for he broke the command of God. And this is the state into which every human soul must be raised, who would dwell with God in

2 And I will make my covenant between me and thee, and <sup>f</sup>will multiply thee exceedingly.

3 And Abram <sup>g</sup>fell on his face: and God talked with him, saying, glory; for Christ was incarnate and died to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. What a glorious privilege! And who can doubt the possibility of its attainment, who believes in the omnipotent love of God, the infinite merit of the blood of atonement, and the all-pervading and all-purifying energy of the Holy Ghost? But some may say, "You overstrain the meaning of the term; it signifies only, be sincere; for us perfect obedience is impossible, God accepts of sincere obedience." If by sincerity the objector means good desires, and generally good purposes, with an impure heart and spotted life, then I assert that no such thing is implied in the text, nor in the original word; but if the word sincerity be taken in its proper and literal sense, I have no objection to it. Sincere is compounded of sine cera, "without wax;" and, applied to moral subjects, is a metaphor taken from clarified honey, from which every atom of the comb or wax is separated. Then let it be proclaimed from heaven, Walk before me, and be SINCERE! purge out the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump unto God; and thus ye shall be perfect, as your Father who is in heaven is perfect. This is sincerity. Reader, remember that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin. Ten thousand quibbles on insulated texts can never lessen, much less destroy, the merit and efficacy of the Great Atonement.

Verse 3. And Abram fell on his face.] The eastern method of prostration was thus: the person first went down on his 4 As for me, behold, my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be <sup>a</sup>a father of <sup>b</sup>many nations.

5 Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but <sup>c</sup>thy name shall be <sup>d</sup>Abraham; <sup>e</sup>for a father of many nations have I made thee.

6 And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make <sup>f</sup>nations of thee, and <sup>g</sup>kings shall come out of thee.

7 And I will <sup>h</sup>establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, <sup>i</sup>to be a God unto thee, and to <sup>j</sup>thy seed after thee.

8 And <sup>k</sup>I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land <sup>l</sup>wherein <sup>m</sup>thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and <sup>n</sup>I will be their God.

9 And God said unto Abraham, Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou, and thy seed after thee, in their generations.

10 This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you, and thy seed after thee; <sup>o</sup>Every man-child among you shall be circumcised.

knees, and then lowered his head to his knees, and touched the earth with his forehead. A very painful posture, but significative of great humiliation and reverence.

Verse 5. Thy name shall be Abraham] Ab-ram literally signifies a high or exalted father. Ab-ra-ham differs from the preceding in the original only in one letter. Though this may appear very simple and easy, yet the true etymology and meaning of the word are very difficult to be assigned.

The same difficulty occurs, verse 15, on the word Sarah, which signifies my prince or princess, and Serah. This latter might be translated princess in general; and while the former seems to point out her government in her own family alone, the latter appears to indicate her government over the nations of which her husband is termed the father or lord.

Now, as the only change in each name is made by the insertion of a single letter, and that letter the same in both cases, I cannot help concluding that some mystery was designed by its insertion; and therefore the opinion is not to be disregarded, which supposes that God shows he had conferred a peculiar dignity on both, by adding to their names one of the letters of his own; a name by which his eternal power and Godhead are peculiarly pointed out.

Verse 7. An everlasting covenant] Here the word olam is taken in its proper meaning, as the words immediately following prove—to be a God unto thee, and thy seed after thee; for as the soul is to endure for ever, so it shall eternally stand in need of the supporting power and energy of God; and as the reign of the gospel dispensation shall be as long as sun and moon endure, and its consequences eternal, so must the covenant be on which these are founded.

Verse 8. Everlasting possession] Here olam appears to be used in its accommodated meaning, and signifies the completion of the divine counsel in reference to a particular period or dispensation. But as the spiritual and temporal covenants are both blended together, and the former was pointed out and typified by the latter, hence the word even here may be taken in its own proper meaning, that of ever-during, or eternal; because the spiritual blessings pointed out by the temporal covenant shall have no end. And hence it is immediately added, I will be their God, not for a time, certainly, but for ever and ever.

Every man-child—shall be circumcised.] Those who wish to invalidate the evidence of the divine origin of the Mosiac law, roundly assert that the Israelites received the rite of circumcision from the Egyptians. The presumption is that skin; and it shall be <sup>a</sup>a token of the covenant betwixt me and you.

12 And <sup>b</sup>he that is eight days old <sup>c</sup>shall be circumcised among you, every man-child in your generations, he that is born in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed.

13 He that is born in thy house, and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised: and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant.

14 And the uncircumcised man-child whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul <sup>d</sup>shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant.

15 And God said unto Abraham, As for Sarai thy wife, thou shalt not call her name Sarai, but <sup>e</sup>Sarah shall her name be.

16 And I will bless her, <sup>f</sup>and give thee a son also of her: yea, I will bless her, and <sup>g</sup>she shall be a mother <sup>h</sup>of nations; kings of people shall be of her.

17 Then Abraham fell upon his face, <sup>i</sup>and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him the Egyptians received it from the Israelites, for it was impossible the latter could have received it from the former, as they had practised it so long before their ancestors had sojourned in Egypt.

Verse 11. And it shall be a token] For a sign of spiritual things; for the circumcision made in the flesh was designed to signify the purification of the heart from all unrighteousness. And it was a seal of that righteousness or justification that comes by faith, Rom. iv. 11. That some of the Jews had a just notion of its spiritual intention, is plain from many passages in the Chaldee paraphrases and in the Jewish writers.

Verse 12. He that is eight days old] Because previously to this they were considered unclean, Lev. xii. 2, 3, and circumcision was ever understood as a consecration of the person to God. Neither calf, lamb, nor kid, was offered to God till it was eight days old for the same reason, Lev. xxi. 27.

Verse 13. He that is born in thy house] The son of a servant; he that is bought with thy money—a slave on his coming into the family. According to the Jewish writers the father was to circumcise his son; and the master, the servant born in his house, or the slave bought with money. If the father or master neglected to do this, then the magistrates were obliged to see it performed; if the neglect of this ordinance was unknown to the magistrates, then the person himself, when he came of age, was obliged to do it.

Verse 14. The uncircumcised—shall be cut off from his people] By being cut off some have imagined that a sudden temporal death was implied; but the simple meaning seems to be that such should have no right to nor share in the blessings of the covenant, which we have already seen were both of a temporal and spiritual kind; and if so, then eternal death was implied, for it was impossible for a person who had not received the spiritual purification to enter into eternal glory.

Verse 16. I will bless her, &c.] Sarah certainly stands at the head of all the women of the Old Testament, on account of her extraordinary privileges. I am quite of Calmet's opinion that Sarah was a type of the blessed Virgin. St. Paul considers her a type of the New Testament and heavenly Jerusalem; and as all true believers are considered as the children of Abraham, so all faithful holy women are considered the daughters of Sarah, Gal. iv. 22, 24, 26. See also 1 Peter iii. 6.

Verse 17. Then Abraham—laughed] I am astonished to find learned and pious men considering this as a token of Abraham's weakness of faith or unbelief, when they have that is an hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?

18 And Abraham said unto God, O that Ishmael might live before thee!

20 And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and <sup>b</sup> will multiply him exceedingly; * twelve princes shall he beget, <sup>d</sup> and I will make him a great nation.

21 But my covenant will I establish with Isaac, * which Sarah shall bear unto thee at this set time in the next year.

the most positive assurance from the Spirit of God himself that Abraham was not weak but strong in the faith; that he staggered not at the promise through unbelief, but gave glory to God, Rom. iv. 19, 20. It is true the same word is used, chap. xviii. 12, concerning Sarah, in whom it was certainly a sign of doubtfulness, though mixed with pleasure at the thought of the possibility of her becoming a mother; but we know how possible it is to express both faith and unbelief in the same way, and even pleasure and disdain have been expressed by a smile or laugh. By laughing Abraham undoubtedly expressed his joy at the prospect of the fulfilment of so glorious a promise; and from this very circumstance Isaac had his name.

Verse 18. O that Ishmael might live before thee! Abraham, finding that the covenant was to be established in another branch of his family, felt solicitous for his son Ishmael, whom he considered as necessarily excluded.

Verse 20. Twelve princes shall he beget, &c. See the names of these twelve princes, chap. xxv. 12-16. From Ishmael proceeded the various tribes of the Arabs, called also Saracens by Christian writers. They were anciently, and still continue to be, a very numerous and powerful people.

Verse 21. My covenant will I establish with Isaac. All temporal good things are promised to Ishmael and his posterity, but the establishment of the Lord's covenant is to be with Isaac. Hence it is fully evident that this covenant referred chiefly to spiritual things—to the Messiah, and the salvation which should be brought to both Jews and Gentiles by his incarnation, death, and glorification.

Verse 22. God went up from Abraham. Ascended evidently before him, so that he had the fullest proof that it was no human being, no earthly angel or messenger, that talked with him; and the promise of a son in the course of a single year, at this set time in the next year, ver. 21, which had every human probability against it, was to be the sure token of the truth of all that had hitherto taken place, and the proof that all that was farther promised should be fulfilled in its due time.

Verse 23. And Abraham took Ishmael, &c. A rite so painful, so repugnant to every feeling of delicacy, and every way revolting to nature, could never have sprung up in the imagination of man. To this day the Jews practise it as a divine ordinance; and all the Arabians do the same. As a distinction between them and other people it never could have been designed, because it was a sign that was never to appear. The individual alone knew that he bore in his flesh this sign of the covenant, and he bore it by the order of God, and he knew it was a sign and seal of spiritual blessings, and not the blessings themselves, though a proof that these blessings were promised, and that he had a right to them. Those who did not consider it in this spiritual reference are by the apostle denominated the circision, Phil. iii. 2, i.e. persons whose flesh was cut, but whose hearts were not purified.

23 And Abraham took Ishmael his son, and all that were born in his house, and all that were bought with his money, every male among the men of Abraham's house, and circumcised the flesh of their foreskin in the * selfsame day, as God had said unto him.

24 And Abraham was ninety years old and nine, <sup>b</sup> when he was circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin.

25 And Ishmael his son was thirteen years old when he was circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin.

26 In the selfsame day was Abraham circumcised, and Ishmael his son.

27 And 'all the men of his house, born in the house, and bought with money of the stranger, were circumcised with him.

The contents of this chapter may be summed up in a few propositions:

1. God, in renewing his covenant with Abram, makes an important change in his and Sarai's name; a change which should ever act as a help to their faith, that the promises by which God had bound himself should be punctually fulfilled. The full import of the change made in a soul that enters into covenant with God through Christ, is only known to itself; a stranger intermeddled not with its joy. Hence, even men of learning and the world at large have considered experimental religion as enthusiasm, merely because they have not understood its nature; but while they have the sacred writings before them, their prejudices and opposition to that without which they cannot be saved, are as unprincipled as they are absurd.

2. God gives Abraham a precept, which was to be a permanent sign of that covenant which was to endure for ever. Though the sign is now changed from circumcision to baptism, yet the covenant is not changed in any part of its essential meaning. Faith in God through the great sacrifice, remission of sins, and sanctification of the heart, are required by the new covenant as well as by the old.

3. The rite of circumcision was painful and humiliating, to denote that repentance, self-denial, &c., are absolutely necessary to all who wish for redemption in the blood of the covenant; and the putting away this filth of the flesh showed the necessity of a pure heart and a holy life.

4. As eternal life is the free gift of God, he has a right to give it in what way he pleases, and on what terms. Thus repentance and faith are the terms on which he will bestow the blessings of the old and new covenants. And let it be remembered that stretching out the hand to receive an alms can never be considered as meriting the bounty received, neither can repentance or faith merit salvation, although they are the conditions on which it is bestowed.

5. The precepts given under both covenants were accompanied with a promise of the Messiah. God well knows that no religious rite can be properly observed, and no precept obeyed, unless he impart strength from on high; and he teaches us that that strength must ever come through the promised seed.

6. The precept, the promise, and the rite, were prefaced with, "I am God all-sufficient; walk before me, and be thou perfect." God, who is the sole object of religious worship, has the sole authority to prescribe that worship, and the rites and ceremonies which shall be used in it.

7. Those who profess to believe in him must not live as they list, but as he pleases. Without faith and obedience there can be no holiness, and without holiness none can see the Lord. He never gives a precept but he offers sufficient grace for its performance. Believe as he would have thee, and act as he shall strengthen thee, and thou wilt believe all things savingly, and do all things well.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Lord appears unto Abraham in Mamre, 1. Three angels, in human appearance, come toward his tent, 2. He invites them in to wash and refresh themselves, 3-5: prepares a calf, bread, butter, and milk, for their entertainment; and himself serves them, 6-8. They promise that within a year Sarah shall have a son, 9, 10. Sarah, knowing herself and husband to be superannuated, smiles at the promise, 11, 12. One of the three, who is called the Lord or Jehovah, chides her, and asserts the sufficiency of the divine power to accomplish the promise, 13, 14. Sarah, through fear, denies that she had laughed or showed signs of unbelief, 15. Abraham accompanies these divine persons on their way to Sodom, 16; and that one who is called Jehovah informs him of his purpose to destroy Sodom and Gomorrah, because of their great wickedness, 17-21. The two former proceed towards Sodom, while the latter (Jehovah) remains with Abraham, 22. Abraham intercedes for the inhabitants of those cities, entreating the Lord to spare them provided fifty righteous persons should be found in them, 23-25. The Lord grants this request, 26. He pleads for the same mercy should only forty-five be found there; which is also granted, 27, 28. He pleads the same for forty, which is also granted, 29; for thirty, with the same success, 30; for twenty, and receives the same gracious answer, 31; for ten, and the Lord assures him that should ten righteous persons be found there, he will not destroy the place, 32. Jehovah then departs, and Abraham returns to his tent, 33.

AND the Lord appeared unto him in the plains of Mamre: and he sat in the tent door in the heat of the day:

<sup>2</sup> And he lift up his eyes and looked, and, lo, three men stood by him: <sup>c</sup> and when he saw them, he ran to meet them from the tent door, and bowed himself toward the ground,

<sup>6</sup> And Abraham hastened into the tent unto Sarah, and said, Make <sup>j</sup> ready quickly three measures of fine meal; knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth.

Verse 1. *Sat in the tent door. For the purpose of enjoying the refreshing air in the heat of the day, when the sun had most power. A custom still frequent among the Asiatics.

Verse 2. *Three men stood by him. Were standing over against him; for if they had been standing by him, as our translation says, he needed not to have "run from the tent door to meet them."

Verse 3. *And said, My Lord, &c. The word is Adonai, not Jehovah, for as yet Abraham did not know the quality of his guests.

Verse 4. *Let a little water — be fetched, and wash your feet, &c. In these verses we find a delightful picture of primitive hospitality. In those ancient times shoes such as ours were not in use; and the foot was protected only by sandals or soles, which fastened round the foot with straps. It was therefore a great refreshment in so hot a country to get the feet washed at the end of a day's journey; and this is the first thing that Abraham proposes.

Rest yourselves under the tree.] This was the second requisite for the refreshment of a weary traveller, viz., rest in the shade.

Verse 5. *I will fetch a morsel of bread. This was the third requisite, and is introduced in its proper order; as eating immediately after exertion or fatigue is very unwholesome.

For therefore are ye come.] In those ancient days every traveller conceived he had a right to refreshment, when he needed it, at the first tent he met with on his journey.

So do, as thou hast said.] How exceedingly simple is all this! On neither side is there any compliment, but such as a generous heart and sound sense dictate.

<sup>7</sup> And Abraham ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf tender and good, and gave it unto a young man; and he hastened to dress it.

<sup>8</sup> And <sup>k</sup> he took butter, and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them; and he stood by them under the tree, and they did eat.

Verse 6. *Three measures of fine meal. The seah, which is here translated measure, contained, according to Bishop Cumberland, about two gallons and a half; and Mr. Ainsworth translates the word peck. "Abraham, who had so many servants, and was nearly a hundred years old, brought the water himself to wash the feet of his guests, ordered his wife to make the bread quickly, went himself to choose the calf from the herd, and came again to serve them standing." (Abbé Fleury.)

Make cakes upon the hearth.] Or under the ashes. This mode is used in the East to the present day. When the hearth is strongly heated with the fire that has been kindled on it, they remove the coals, sweep off the ashes, lay on the bread, and then cover it with the hot cinders.

Verse 10. *I will certainly return. Abraham was now ninety-nine years of age, and this promise was fulfilled when he was a hundred; so that the phrase according to the time of life must mean either a complete year, or nine months from the present time, the ordinary time of pregnancy. Taken in this latter sense, Abraham was now in the ninety-ninth year of his age, and Isaac was born when he was in his hundredth year.

Verse 11. *It ceased to be with Sarah after the manner of women. And consequently, naturally speaking, conception could not take place; therefore if she have a son it must be in a supernatural or miraculous way.

Verse 12. *Sarah laughed. Partly through pleasure at the bare idea of the possibility of the thing, and partly from a conviction that it was extremely improbable.

Verse 13. *And the Lord (Jehovah) said, &c. So it did Sarah laugh, saying, Shall I of a surety bear a child, which am old?

14 <sup>a</sup>Is any thing too hard for the LORD? <sup>b</sup>At the time appointed I will return unto thee, according to the time of life, and Sarah shall have a son.

15 Then Sarah denied, saying, I laughed not; for she was afraid. And he said, Nay; but thou didst laugh.

16 And the men rose up from thence, and looked toward Sodom: and Abraham went with <sup>c</sup>them to bring them on the way.

17 And the LORD said, <sup>d</sup>Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do;

18 Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be <sup>e</sup>blessed in him?

19 For I know him, <sup>f</sup>that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the LORD, to do justice and judgment; that the LORD may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him.

20 And the LORD said, Because <sup>g</sup>the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous;

21 <sup>h</sup>I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, <sup>i</sup>I will know.

22 And the men turned their faces from thence, and went toward Sodom; but Abraham <sup>k</sup>stood yet before the LORD.

23 And Abraham <sup>l</sup>drew near, and said, <sup>m</sup>Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked?

24 <sup>n</sup>Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city: wilt thou also destroy and not spare the place for the fifty righteous that are therein?

25 That be far from thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked: and <sup>o</sup>that the righteous should be as the wicked, that be far from thee: <sup>p</sup>Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?

26 And the LORD said, <sup>q</sup>If I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the city, then I will spare all the place for their sakes.

27 And Abraham answered and said, <sup>r</sup>Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the LORD, which am <sup>s</sup>but dust and ashes:

28 Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous: wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? And he said, If I find there forty and five, I will not destroy it.

29 And he spake unto him yet again, and said, Peradventure there shall be forty found there. And he said, I will not do it for forty's sake.

30 And he said unto him, Oh let not the LORD be angry, and I will speak: Peradventure there shall thirty be found there. And he said, I will not do it if I find thirty there.

31 And he said, Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the LORD: Peradventure there shall be twenty found there. And he said, I will not destroy it for twenty's sake.

32 And he said, <sup>t</sup>Oh let not the LORD be angry, and I will speak yet but this once: Peradventure ten shall be found there. <sup>u</sup>And he said, I will not destroy it for ten's sake.

33 And the LORD went his way, as soon as he had left communing with Abraham: and Abraham returned unto his place.

appears that one of those three persons was Jehorah, and as this name is never given to any created being, consequently the ever-blessed God is intended; and as he was never seen in any bodily shape, consequently the great Angel of the covenant, Jesus Christ, must be meant.

Verse 14. Is any thing too hard for the Lord? It was to correct Sarah's unbelief, and to strengthen her faith, that God spoke these most important words; words which state that where human wisdom, prudence, and energy fail, and where nature herself ceases to be an agent through lack of energy to act, or laws to direct and regulate energy, there also God has full sway, and by his own omniscient power works all things after the counsel of his own will. Is there an effect to be produced? God can produce it as well without as with means. He produced nature, the whole system of causes and effects, when in the whole compass of his own eternity, there was neither means nor being. He spake, and it was done; HE commanded, and it stood fast. How great and wonderful is God!

Verse 16. Abraham went with them to bring them on the way. This was another piece of primitive hospitality—to direct strangers in the way. Public roads did not then exist, and guides were essentially necessary in countries where villages were seldom to be met with, and where solitary dwellings did not exist.

Verse 17. Shall I hide from Abraham? That is, I will not hide. A common mode of speech in scripture—a question asked when an affirmative is designed.

Verse 19. And they shall keep the way of the Lord. The true religion; God's way; that in which God walks himself, and in which, of course, his followers walk also; to do justice and judgment; not only to preserve the truth in their creed, but maintain it in their practice.

Verse 22. And the men turned their faces. That is, the two angels who accompanied Jehorah were now sent towards Sodom; while the third, who is called the LORD or Jehorah, remained with Abraham for the purpose of teaching him the great usefulness and importance of faith and prayer.

Verse 23. Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked? A form of speech similar to that in verse 17; an invariable principle of justice, that the righteous shall not be punished for the crimes of the impious. And this Abraham lays down as the foundation of his supplications.

Verse 25. Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? God alone is the Judge of all men. Abraham, in thus addressing himself to the person in the text, considers him either as the Supreme Being or his representative.

Verse 27. Which am but dust and ashes. Dust—the lightest particles of earth. Ashes—the residuum of consumed substances. By these expressions he shows how deeply his soul was humbled in the presence of God. He who has high thoughts of himself must have low thoughts of the dignity of the divine nature, of the majesty of God, and the sinfulness of sin.

Verse 32. Peradventure ten shall be found there. Knowing that in the family of his nephew the true religion was professed and practised, he could not suppose there could be less than ten righteous persons in the city; he therefore left off his entreaties and the Lord departed from him. It is highly worthy of observation that while he continued to pray the presence of God was continued; and when Abraham ended, "the glory of the Lord was lifted up," as the Targum expresses it.

This chapter affords us several lessons of useful and important information.

1. The hospitality and humanity of Abraham are worthy, not only of our most serious regard, but also of our imitation. Hospitality is ever becoming in one human being towards another; for every destitute man is a brother in distress, and demands our most prompt and affectionate assistance. From this conduct of Abraham a divine precept is formed: "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares," Heb. xiii. 2.

2. Whatever is given on the ground of humanity and mercy is given unto God, and is sure to meet with his approbation and a suitable reward. It is always difficult to credit God's promises when they relate to supernatural things, and still more so when they have for their object events that are contrary to the course of nature; but as nothing is too hard for God, so "all things are possible to him that believeth."

3. Abraham trusts much in God, and God reposes much confidence in Abraham. He knows that God is faithful, and will fulfil his promises; and God knows that Abraham is faithful, and will command his children and his household after him. No man lives unto himself. He who understands the way of God should carefully instruct his household in that way; and he who is the father of a family should pray to God to teach him, that he may teach his household. Reader, if thy children or servants perish through thy neglect, God will judge thee for it in the great day.

4. The sin of Sodom and the cities of the plain was great and grievous; the measure of their iniquity was full, and God determined to destroy them. Judgment is God's strange work, but though rarely done it must be done sometimes, lest men should suppose that right and wrong, vice and virtue, are alike in the eye of God.

5. Every man who loves God loves his neighbour also; and he who loves his neighbour will do all in his power to promote the well-being both of his soul and his body. Abraham cannot prevent the men of Sodom from sinning against God; but he can make prayer and intercession for their souls, and plead, if not in arrest, yet in mitigation of, judgment.

6. How true is that word, The energetic faithful prayer of a righteous man availeth much! Abraham draws near to God by affection and faith, and in the most devout and humble manner makes prayer and supplication; and every petition is answered on the spot. Nor does God cease to promise to show mercy till Abraham ceases to intercede! What encouragement does this hold out to them that fear God, to make prayer and intercession for their sinful neighbours and ungodly relatives!

CHAPTER XIX.

The two angels, mentioned in the preceding chapter, come in the evening to Sodom, 1. Lot, who was sitting at the gate, invites them to enter his house, take some refreshment, and tarry all night; which they at first refuse, 2; but on being pressingly solicited, they at last comply, 3. The abominable conduct of the men of Sodom, 4, 5. Lot's deep concern for the honour and safety of his guests, which leads him to make a most exceptionable proposal to those wicked men, 6-8. The violent proceedings of the Sodomites, 9. Lot rescued from their barbarity by the angels, who smite them with blindness, 10, 11. The angels exhort Lot and his family to flee from that wicked place, as God was about to destroy it, 12, 13. Lot's fruitless exhortation to his sons-in-law, 14. The angels hasten Lot and his family to depart, 15, 16. Their exhortation, 17. Lot's request, 18-20. He is permitted to escape to Zoar, 21-23. Fire and brimstone are rained down from heaven upon all the cities of the plain, by which they are entirely destroyed, 24-25. Lot's wife, looking behind, becomes a pillar of salt, 26. Abraham, early in the morning, discovers the desolation of those iniquitous cities, 27-29. Lot, fearing to continue in Zoar, went with his two daughters to the mountain, and dwelt in a cave, 30. The strange conduct of his daughters, and his unhappy deception, 31-36. Moab and Ammon born, from whom sprang the Moabites and Ammonites, 37, 38.

AND there came two angels to Sodom at even; and Lot sat in the gate of Sodom: and Lot's seeing them rose up to meet them; and he bowed himself with his face toward the ground;

2 And he said, Behold now, my lords, turn in, I pray you, into your servant's house, and tarry all night, and wash your feet, and ye shall rise up early, and go on your ways. And they said, Nay; but we will abide in the street all night.

3 And he pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in unto him, and entered into his house; and he made them a feast, and did bake unleavened bread, and they did eat.

4 But before they lay down, the men of the city, even the men of Sodom, compassed the house round, both old and young, all the people from every quarter:

5 And they called unto Lot, and said unto him, Where are the men which came in to thee this night? bring them out unto us, that we may know them.

6 And Lot went out at the door unto them, and shut the door after him,

7 And said, I pray you, brethren, do not so wickedly:

8 Behold now, I have two daughters which have not known man; let me, I pray you, bring them out

Verse 1. Sat in the gate] Probably, in order to prevent unwary travellers from being entrapped by his wicked townsmen, he waited at the gate of the city to bring the strangers he might meet with to his own house, as well as to transact his own business. Or, as the gate was the place of judgment, he might have been sitting there as magistrate to hear and determine disputes.

Bowed himself] Not through religious reverence, for he did not know the quality of his guests, but through the customary form of civility.

Verse 2. Nay; but we will abide in the street] Knowing the disposition of the inhabitants, and appearing in the mere character of travellers, they preferred the open street to any house; but as Lot pressed them vehemently, and they knew him to be a righteous man, not yet willing to make themselves known, they consented to take shelter under his hospitable roof.

Verse 5. Where are the men which came in to thee, &c.] This account justifies the character given of this depraved people in the preceding chapter, ver. 20, and in chap. xiii. 13. As their crime was the deepest disgrace to human nature, so it is too bad to be described.

Verse 8. Behold now, I have two daughters] Nothing but that sacred light in which the rights of hospitality were regarded among the eastern nations, could either justify or palliate this proposal of Lot. A man who had taken a unto you, and do ye to them as is good in your eyes: only unto these men do nothing; *for therefore came they under the shadow of my roof.

9 And they said, Stand back. And they said again, This one fellow<sup>b</sup> came in to sojourn, <sup>c</sup>and he will needs be a judge: now will we deal worse with thee than with them. And they pressed sore upon the man, even Lot, and came near to break the door.

10 But the men put forth their hand, and pulled Lot into the house to them, and shut to the door.

11 And they smote the men <sup>a</sup>that were at the door of the house with blindness, both small and great; so that they wearied themselves to find the door.

12 And the men said unto Lot, Hast thou here any besides? son-in-law, and thy sons, and thy daughters, and whatsoever thou hast in the city, <sup>a</sup>bring them out of this place:

13 For we will destroy this place, because the <sup>a</sup>cry of them is waxen great before the face of the LORD; and <sup>a</sup>the LORD hath sent us to destroy it.

14 And Lot went out and spake unto his sons-in-law, <sup>b</sup>which married his daughters, and said, <sup>c</sup>Up, get you out of this place; for the LORD will destroy this city. <sup>d</sup>But he seemed as one that mocked unto his sons-in-law.

15 And when the morning arose, then the angels hastened Lot, saying, <sup>a</sup>Arise, take thy wife, and thy two daughters, which <sup>a</sup>are here; lest thou be consumed in the <sup>a</sup>iniquity of the city.

stranger under his care and protection, was bound to defend him even at the expense of his own life. In this light only can Lot's conduct on this occasion be at all excused; but even then, it was not only the language of anxious solicitude, but of unwarrantable haste.

Verse 9. And he will needs be a judge] So his sitting in the gate is perhaps a further proof of his being there in a magisterial capacity, as some have supposed.

Verse 11. And they smote the men—with blindness] This has been understood two ways: 1. The angels either totally deprived these wicked men of their sight, or rendered it so confused that they could no longer distinguish objects; or 2. They caused such a deep darkness to take place, that they could not find Lot's door.

Verse 12. Hast thou here any besides? son-in-law] Here there appears to be but one meant, as the word chathan is in the singular number; but in ver. 14 the word is plural, his sons-in-law. There were only two in number; as we do not hear that Lot had more than two daughters: and these seem not to have been actually married to those daughters, but only betrothed, ver. 8. But these did not escape the perdition of these wicked men; because they received the solemn warning as a ridiculous tale, and made no provision for their escape.

Verse 16. While he lingered] Probably in affectionate though useless entreaties to prevail on the remaining parts of his family to escape; laid hold upon his hand—pulled them away by more force.

Verse 17. When they had brought them forth, &c.] Every word here is emphatic. Escape for thy life; thy life and thy soul are both at stake. Look not behind thee—one look back may prove fatal to thee, and God commands thee to avoid it. Both the beginning and end of this exhortation are addressed to his personal feelings. "Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life;" and self-preservation is the first law of nature.

Verse 19. I cannot escape to the mountain] He saw the destruction so near, and in the hurry and perturbation of his mind he imagined he should not have time sufficient to reach 16 And <sup>a</sup>while he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters; <sup>a</sup>the LORD being merciful unto him: <sup>a</sup>and they brought him forth, and set him without the city.

17 And it came to pass, when they had brought them forth abroad, that he said, <sup>a</sup>Escape for thy life; <sup>a</sup>look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed.

18 And Lot said unto them, Oh, <sup>a</sup>not so, my Lord:

19 Behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight, and thou hast magnified thy mercy, which thou hast shewed unto me in saving my life; and I cannot escape to the mountain, lest some evil take me, and I die;

20 Behold now, this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one: oh, let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live.

21 And he said unto him, See, <sup>a</sup>I have accepted <sup>a</sup>thee concerning this thing also, that I will not overthrow this city, for the which thou hast spoken.

22 Haste thee, escape thither; for <sup>a</sup>I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither. Therefore <sup>a</sup>the name of the city was called <sup>a</sup>Zoar.

23 The sun was <sup>a</sup>risen upon the earth when Lot entered into Zoar.

24 Then <sup>a</sup>the LORD rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the LORD out of heaven;

the mountain before it arrived. He did not consider that God could give no command to his creatures that it would be impossible for them to fulfil.

Verse 20. It is a little one] Probably Lot wished to have it for an inheritance, and therefore pleaded its being a little one, that his request might be the more readily granted. Or he might suppose that, being a little city, it was less depraved than Sodom and Gomorrah, and therefore not so ripe for punishment.

Verse 21. See, I have accepted thee] How prevalent is prayer with God! Far from refusing to grant a reasonable petition, he shows himself as if under embarrassment to deny any.

Verse 22. I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither] So these heavenly messengers had the strictest commission to take care of Lot and his family; and even the purposes of divine justice could not be accomplished on the rebellious till this righteous man and his family had escaped from the place.

The name of the city was called Zoar.] Tsoar, LITTLE, its former name being Bela.

Verse 24. The Lord rained—brimstone and fire from the Lord] As all judgment is committed to the Son of God, many have supposed that the words vaihorah and meeth Yehovah imply, Jehovah the Son raining brimstone and fire from Jehovah the Father; and that this place affords no mean proof of the proper divinity of our blessed Redeemer. It may be so; but though the point is sufficiently established elsewhere, it does not appear to me to be plainly indicated here.

Brimstone and fire.—The word gophrith, which we translate brimstone, is of very uncertain derivation. It is evidently used metaphorically in Deut. xxix. 23; Job xviii. 15; Ps. xi. 6; Isa. xxxiv. 9; Ezek. xxxviii. 22. And as hell is the utmost punishment that can be inflicted on sinners, hence brimstone and fire are used in scripture to signify the torments in that place of punishment. We find three agents employed in the total ruin of these cities, and all the circumjacent plain: 1. Innumerable nitrous particles precipitated 25 And he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and *that which grew upon the ground.

26 But his wife looked back from behind him, and she became <sup>a</sup> a pillar of salt.

27 And Abraham gat up <sup>c</sup> early in the morning to the place where <sup>d</sup> he stood before the Lord :

28 And he looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain, and beheld, and, lo, <sup>e</sup> the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace.

29 And it came to pass, when God destroyed the cities of the plain, that God <sup>f</sup> remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow, when he overthrew the cities in the which Lot dwelt.

30 And Lot went up out of Zoar, and <sup>g</sup> dwelt in the mountain, and his two daughters with him ; for he feared to dwell in Zoar ; and he dwelt in a cave, he and his two daughters.

31 And the first-born said unto the younger, Our father <sup>h</sup> is old, and <sup>i</sup> there is not a man in the earth <sup>j</sup> to come in unto us after the manner of all the earth :

from the atmosphere. 2. The vast quantity of asphaltus or bitumen which abounded in that country: and 3. Lightning or the electric spark, which ignited the nitre and bitumen, and thus consumed both the cities and the plain in which they were situated. [There was probably a fourth agent, volcanic action, causing a subsidence of the land.]

Verse 25. And he overthrew those cities, and all the plain] This forms what is called the lake Asphaltites, Dead Sea, or Salt Sea, which according to the most authentic accounts, is about seventy miles in length, and eighteen in breadth. [More recent admeasurements fix its length at 46 miles and its breadth at 10; miles.]

Common fame says that the waters of this sea are thick, clammy, and deadly; that no fish can live in them, and that if a bird happen to fly over the lake, it is killed by the poisonous effluvia proceeding from the waters; that scarcely any verdure can grow near the place, and that in the vicinity where there are any trees they bear a most beautiful fruit, but when you come to open it you find nothing but ashes! and that the place was burning long after the apostles' times. These and all similar tales may be safely pronounced exaggerations or fictions.

The truth is, the waters are exceedingly salt, far beyond the usual saltiness of the sea, and hence it is called the Salt Sea. In consequence of this bodies will float in it that would sink in common salt water, and probably it is on this account that few fish can live in it. As to the reports of any noxious quality in the air, the simple fact is, lumps of bitumen often rise from the bottom to its surface, and exhale a fetid odour which does not appear to have any thing poisonous in it. As there are frequent eruptions of a bituminous matter from the bottom of this lake, which seem to argue a subterraneous fire, hence the account that this place was burning even after the days of the apostles.

Verse 26. She became a pillar of salt.] This is all the information the inspired historian has thought proper to give us on this subject. The most probable opinions of commentators are the following: 1. "Lot's wife, by the miraculous power of God, was changed into a mass of rock salt, probably retaining the human figure." 2. "Tarrying too long in the plain, she was struck with lightning and enveloped in the bituminous and sulphuric matter which abounded in that country, and which, not being exposed afterwards to the action of the fire, resisted the air and the wet, and was thus rendered permanent." 3. "She was struck dead and consumed in the burning up of the plain; and this judgment on her disobedience being recorded, is an imperishable memorial of the fact itself, and an everlasting warning to sinners in general, and to backsliders or apostates in particular." That God might in a moment convert this disobedient woman into a pillar or mass of salt, or any other substance, there can be no doubt. Or that, by continuing in the plain till the brimstone and fire descended from heaven, she might be struck dead with lightning, and indurated or petrified on the spot, is as possible. And that the account of her becoming a pillar of salt may be designed to be understood metaphorically, is also highly probable. It is certain that salt is frequently used in the scriptures as an emblem of incorruption, durability, &c. Hence a covenant of salt, Num. xviii. 19, is a perpetual covenant; on this ground a pillar of salt may signify no more in this case than an ever-

Authors of respectability and credit who have since travelled into the Holy Land, and made it their business to inquire into this subject have not been able to meet with any remains of this pillar. Had Lot's wife been still preserved somewhere in the neighbourhood of the Dead Sea, surely we might expect some account of it in after parts of scripture history; but it is never more mentioned in the Bible, and occurs nowhere in the New Testament but in the simple reference of our Lord to the judgment itself, as a warning to the disobedient and backsliding: Remember Lot's wife!

Verse 27. Abraham gat up early in the morning] Anxious to know what was the effect of the prayers which he had offered to God the preceding day.

Verse 29. God remembered Abraham] For Abraham's sake the Lord offered salvation to all the family of Lot, though neither his sons-in-law elect nor his own wife ultimately profited by it.

Verse 30. Lot went up out of Zoar] He feared to dwell in Zoar, lest that also should be consumed; and then went to those very mountains to which God had ordered him at first to make his escape. Foolish man is ever preferring his own wisdom to that of his Maker. It was wrong at first not to betake himself to the mountain; it was wrong in the next place to go to it when God had given him the assurance that Zoar should be spared for his sake. Both these cases argue a strange want of faith, not only in the truth, but also in the providence, of God. Had he still dwelt at Zoar, the shameful transaction afterwards recorded had in all probability not taken place.

Verse 31. Our father is old] And consequently not likely to re-marry; and there is not a man in the earth—none left, according to their opinion, in all the land of Canaan, of their own family and kindred: and they might think it unlawful to match with others, such as the inhabitants of Zoar, who they knew had been devoted to destruction as well as those of Sodom and Gomorrah, and were only saved at the earnest request of their father.

Verse 32. Come, let us make our father drink wine] On their flight from Zoar it is probable they had brought with them certain provisions to serve them for the time being, and the wine here mentioned among the rest.

After considering all that has been said, I cannot help thinking that the transaction itself will bear a more favourable construction than that which has been generally put on it. 1. It does not appear that it was through any base or sensual desire that the daughters of Lot wished to deceive their father. 2. They might have thought that it would have been criminal to have married into any other family, and they knew that their husbands elect, who were probably of the same kindred, had perished in the overthrow of Sodom. 3. They might have supposed that there was no other way left to preserve the family, and the righteousness for which it had been remarkable. 4. They appear to have supposed that their father would not come into the measure; yet, judging it to be expedient and necessary, they endeavoured to sanctify the improper means used, by the goodness of the end at which they aimed; a doctrine which, though resorted to by many, should be reprobated by all.

Verse 33. And he perceived not when she lay down, nor father; and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose.

34 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the first-born said unto the younger, Behold, I lay yesternight with my father: let us make him drink wine this night also; and go thou in, and lie with him, that we may preserve seed of our father.

35 And they made their father drink wine that night also: and the younger arose, and lay with him; when, &c.] That is, he did not perceive the time she came to his bed, nor the time she quitted it; consequently did not know who it was that had lain with him. In this transaction Lot appears to me to be in many respects excusable. 1. He had no accurate knowledge of what took place either on the first or second night, therefore he cannot be supposed to have been drawn away by his own lust, and enticed. He must have been sensible that some person had been in his bed; but he might have judged it to have been some of his female domestics, which he might have brought from Zoar. 2. It is very likely that he was deceived in the wine, as well as in the consequences; either he knew not the strength of the wine, or wine of a superior power had been given to him on this occasion.

Verse 37. Called his name Moab] This name is generally interpreted of the father.

Verse 38. Ben-ammi] The son of my people. Both these names seem to justify the view taken of this subject above, viz., that it was merely to preserve the family that the daughters of Lot made use of the above expedient; and hence we do not find that they ever attempted to repeat it, which, had it been done for any other purpose, they certainly would not have failed to do. A single bad act, though a sin, does not necessarily argue a vicious heart, as in order to be vicious a man must be habituated to sinful acts.

The generation which proceeded from this incestuous connexion, whatever may be said in extenuation of the transaction (its peculiar circumstances being considered), was certainly a bad one. The Moabites soon fell from the faith of God, and became idolaters, the people of Chemosh, and of Baal-peor, Num. xxi. 29, xxv. 1-3; and were enemies to the children of Abraham. See Num. xxii.; Judg. iii. 14, &c. And the Ammonites, who dwelt near to the Moabites, united with them in idolatry, and were also enemies to Israel. See Judg. xi. 4, 24; Deut. xxiii. 3, 4.

and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose.

36 Thus were the two daughters of Lot with child by their father.

37 And the first-born bare a son, and called his name Moab: * the same is the father of the Moabites unto this day.

38 And the younger, she also bare a son, and called his name Ben-ammi: <sup>b</sup> the same is the father of the children of Ammon unto this day.

1. From the commencement of the chapter we find that the example and precepts of Abraham had not been lost on his nephew Lot. Lot was both a hospitable and pious, though a weak, man, but his weakness was such as was not inconsistent with general uprightness and sincerity. How powerful are the effects of a religious education, enforced by pious example! It is one of God's especial means of grace. Let a man only do justice to his family, by bringing them up in the fear of God, and he will crown it with his blessing. How many excuse the profligacy of their family, which is often entirely owing to their own neglect, by saying, "Oh, we cannot give them grace!" No, you cannot, but you can afford them the means of grace. This is your work, that is the Lord's. If, through your neglect of precept and example, they perish, what an awful account must you give to the Judge of quick and dead!

2. What a correspondence between the crime and the punishment of the inhabitants of the cities of the plain! They burned in lust towards each other, and God burned them up with fire and brimstone. Their sin was unnatural, and God punished it by supernatural means. Divine Justice not only observes a proportion between the crime and the degree of punishment, but also between the species of crime and the kind of punishment inflicted.

3. Lot's wife stands as an everlasting monument of admonition and caution to all backsliders. She ran well, she permitted Satan to hinder, and she died in her provocation! While we lament her fate, we should profit by her example. To begin in the good way is well; to continue in the path is better; and to persevere unto the end, best of all. The exhortation of our blessed Lord on this subject should awaken our caution, and strongly excite our diligence: Remember Lot's wife!

CHAPTER XX.

Abraham leaves Mamre, and, after having sojourned at Kadesh and Shur, settles in Gerar. 1. Abimelech takes Sarah, Abraham having acknowledged her only as his sister, 2. Abimelech is warned by God in a dream to restore Sarah, 3. He asserts his innocence, 4, 5. He is further warned, 6, 7. Expostulates with Abraham, 8-10. Abraham vindicates his conduct, 11-13. Abimelech restores Sarah, makes Abraham a present of sheep, oxen, and male and female slaves, 14; offers him a residence in any part of the land, 15; and reproves Sarah, 16. At the intercession of Abraham, the curse of barrenness is removed from Abimelech and his household, 17, 18.

Verse 1. And Abraham journeyed] Gerar was a city of Arabia Petraea, under a king of the Philistines called Abimelech, my father King, who appears to have been not only the father of his people, but also a righteous man.

Verse 2. She is my sister] See the parallel account, chap. xii., and the notes there. Sarah was now about ninety years of age, and probably pregnant with Isaac.

3 But <sup>f</sup> God came to Abimelech <sup>g</sup> in a dream by night, and said to him, <sup>h</sup> Behold, thou art but a

Her beauty, therefore, must have been considerably impaired since the time she was taken in a similar manner by Pharaoh, king of Egypt; but she was probably now chosen by Abimelech more on account of forming an alliance with Abraham, who was very rich, than on account of any personal accomplishments.

Verse 3. But God came to Abimelech] Thus we find that dead man, for the woman which thou hast taken; for she is <sup>a</sup> a man's wife.

4 But Abimelech had not come near her: and he said, Lord, <sup>b</sup> wilt thou slay also a righteous nation?

5 Said he not unto me, She is my sister? and she, even she herself said, He is my brother: <sup>c</sup> in the integrity of my heart and innocence of my hands have I done this.

6 And God said unto him in a dream, Yea, I know that thou didst this in the integrity of thy heart; for <sup>d</sup> I also withheld thee from sinning <sup>e</sup> against me: therefore suffered I thee not to touch her.

7 Now therefore restore the man <sup>f</sup> his wife; <sup>g</sup> for he is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live; and if thou restore <sup>h</sup> her not, <sup>i</sup> know thou that thou shalt surely die, thou, <sup>j</sup> and all that are thine.

8 Therefore Abimelech rose early in the morning, and called all his servants, and told all these things in their ears: and the men were sore afraid.

9 Then Abimelech called Abraham, and said unto him, What hast thou done unto us? and what have I offended thee, <sup>k</sup> that thou hast brought on me and on my kingdom a great sin? thou hast done deeds unto me <sup>l</sup> that ought not to be done.

10 And Abimelech said unto Abraham, What sawest thou, that thou hast done this thing?

11 And Abraham said, Because I thought, Surely, persons who were not of the family of Abraham, had the knowledge of the true God. Indeed, all the Gerarites are termed a righteous nation, ver. 4.

Verse 6. In the integrity of my heart, &c.] Had Abimelech any other than honourable views in taking Sarah, he could not have justified himself thus to his Maker; God himself, to whom the appeal was made, asserts, in the most direct manner, Yea, I know that thou didst this in the integrity of thy heart.

Verse 7. He is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee] The word prophet means, in its general acceptation, one who speaks of things before they happen, i.e. one who foretells future events. But that this was not the original notion of the word, its use in this place sufficiently proves. The meaning of the original word is to pray, entreat, make supplication, &c., as in the case of Saul, mentioned 1 Sam. x., and the case of the priests of Babel, 1 Kings xviii. As those who were in habits of intimacy with God by prayer and faith were found the most proper persons to communicate his mind to man, both with respect to the present and the future, hence nabi, the intercessor, became in process of time the public instructor or preacher, and also the predictor of future events, because to such faithful praying men God revealed the secret of his will. The title was also given to men eminent for eloquence and for literary abilities; hence Aaron, because he was the spokesman of Moses to the Egyptian king, was termed nabi, prophet; Exod. iv. 16, vii. 1. And Epimenides, a heathen poet, is expressly styled προφήτης, a prophet, by St. Paul, Tit. i. 12, just as poets in general were termed vates among the Romans, which properly signifies the persons who professed to interpret the will of the gods to their votaries, after prayers and sacrifices duly performed. In Arabic the word naba has nearly the same meaning as in Hebrew.

Verse 11. And Abraham said] The best excuse he could make for his conduct, which in this instance is far from defensible.

Verse 12. She is my sister] I have not told a lie; I have suppressed only a part of the truth. In this place it may be proper to ask, What is a lie? It is any action done or word spoken, whether true or false in itself, which the doer or speaker wishes the observer or hearer to take in a contrary sense to that which he knows to be true. It is, in a word, any action done or speech delivered with the intention to the fear of God is not in this place, and <sup>m</sup> they will slay me for my wife's sake.

12 And yet indeed <sup>n</sup> she is my sister; she is the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother; and she became my wife.

13 And it came to pass, when <sup>o</sup> God caused me to wander from my father's house, that I said unto her, This is thy kindness which thou shalt shew unto me; at every place whither we shall come, <sup>p</sup> say of me, He is my brother.

14 And Abimelech <sup>q</sup> took sheep, and oxen, and men-servants, and women-servants, and gave them unto Abraham, and restored him Sarah his wife.

15 And Abimelech said, Behold, <sup>r</sup> my land is before thee: dwell <sup>s</sup> where it pleaseth thee.

16 And unto Sarah he said, Behold, I have given <sup>t</sup> thy brother a thousand pieces of silver: <sup>u</sup> behold, he is to thee <sup>v</sup> a covering of the eyes, unto all that are with thee, and with all other: <sup>w</sup> thus she was reproved.

17 So Abraham <sup>x</sup> prayed unto God: and God healed Abimelech, and his wife, and his maid-servants; and they bare children.

18 For the Lord <sup>y</sup> had fast closed up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech, because of Sarah, Abraham's wife.

deceive, though both may be absolutely true and right in themselves.

Verse 13. When God caused me to wander] Here the word Elohim is used with a plural verb, which is not very usual in the Hebrew language, as this plural noun is generally joined with verbs in the singular number. Because there is a departure from the general mode in this instance, some have contended that the word Elohim signifies princes in this place, and suppose it to refer to those in Chaldaea, who expelled Abraham because he would not worship the fire; but the best critics, and with them the Jews, allow that Elohim here signifies the true God. Abraham probably refers to his first call.

Verse 13. And unto Sarah he said] Here the Hebrew is exceedingly obscure, and every interpreter takes it in his own sense.

A thousand pieces of silver] SHEKELS are very probably meant here, and so the Targum understands it.

The shekel of the sanctuary weighed twenty gerahs, Exod. xxx. 13. And according to the Jews, the gerah weighed sixteen grains of barley.

Behold, he is to thee a covering of the eyes] It—the one thousand shekels (not he—Abraham), is to thee for a covering—to procure thee a veil to conceal thy beauty (unto all that are with thee, and with all other) from all thy own kindred and acquaintance, and from all strangers, that none, seeing thou art another man's wife, may covet thee on account of thy comeliness.

Thus she was reproved.] The word is probably the second person preterite, used for the imperative mood, from the root nachah, to make straight, direct, right; and may, in connexion with the rest of the text, be thus paraphrased: Behold, I have given thy BROTHER (Abraham, gently alluding to the equivocation, ver. 2, 5) a thousand shekels of silver; behold, it is (that is, the silver is, or may be, or let it be) to thee a covering of the eyes (to procure a veil; see above) with regard to all those who are with thee, and to all (or and in all) speak thou the truth—not only tell a part of the truth, but tell the whole; say not merely he is my brother, but say also, he is my husband too. I believe the above to be the sense of this difficult passage, and shall not puzzle my readers with criticisms. [The thousand pieces of silver, £131, could not have been intended to purchase a mere veil. Perhaps the "covering of the eyes" is a figura- tive expression for an atoning gift. The clause, "she was reproved," may be rendered "thou art judged,"—that is, justice is done to thee.]

Verse 17. So Abraham prayed] This was the prime office of the nabi.

Verse 18. For the Lord had fast closed up all the wombs] Probably by means of some disease with which he had smitten them, hence it is said they were healed at Abraham's intercession; and this seems necessarily to imply that they had been afflicted by some disease that rendered it impossible for them to have children till it was removed.

1. On the prevarication of Abraham and Sarah, see chap. xii.; and while we pity this weakness, let us take it as a warning.

2. The cause why the patriarch did not acknowledge Sarah as his wife, was a fear lest he should lose his life on her account, for he said, Surely the fear, i.e. the true worship of the true God is not in this place. Such is the natural bigotry and narrowness of the human heart, that we can scarcely allow that any besides ourselves possess the true religion. The true religion is neither confined to one spot nor to one people; it is spread in various forms over the whole earth. He who fills immensity has left a record of himself in every nation and among every people under heaven. Had Abraham possessed more charity for man and confidence in God at this time, he had not fallen into that snare from which he barely escaped.

CHAPTER XXI.

Isaac is born according to the promise, 1-3; and is circumcised when eight days old, 4. Abraham's age, and Sarah's exultation at the birth of their son, 5-7. Isaac is weaned, 8. Ishmael mocking on the occasion, Sarah requires that both he and his mother Hagar shall be dismissed, 9, 10. Abraham, distressed on the account, is ordered by the Lord to comply, 11, 12. The promise renewed to Ishmael, 13. Abraham dismisses Hagar and her son, who go to the wilderness of Beer-sheba, 14. They are greatly distressed for want of water, 15, 16. An angel of God appears to and relieves them, 17-19. Ishmael prospers and is married, 20, 21. Abimelech, and Phicol his chief captain, make a covenant with Abraham, and surrender the well of Beer-sheba for seven ewe lambs, 22-32. Abraham plants a grove, and invokes the name of the everlasting God, 33.

AND the LORD<sup>a</sup> visited Sarah as he had said, and the LORD did unto Sarah<sup>b</sup> as he had spoken.

2 For Sarah<sup>c</sup> conceived, and bare Abraham a son in his old age,<sup>d</sup> at the set time of which God had spoken to him.

3 And Abraham called the name of his son that was born unto him, whom Sarah bare to him, Isaac.

4 And Abraham<sup>e</sup> circumcised his son Isaac, being eight days old,<sup>f</sup> as God had commanded him.

5 And<sup>g</sup> Abraham was an hundred years old, when his son Isaac was born unto him.

6 And Sarah said, 'God hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear will laugh with me.

7 And she said, Who would have said unto Abraham, that Sarah should have given children suck? <sup>h</sup>for I have born him a son in his old age.

8 And the child grew and was weaned; and Abraham made a great feast the same day that Isaac was weaned.

9 And Sarah saw the son of Hagar<sup>i</sup> the Egyptian, which she had born unto Abraham,<sup>j</sup> mocking.

10 Wherefore she said unto Abraham,<sup>k</sup> Cast out this bond-woman and her son: for the son of this bond-woman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac.

11 And the thing was very grievous in Abraham's sight,<sup>l</sup> because of his son.

12 And God said unto Abraham, Let it not be grievous in thy sight because of the lad, and because of thy bond-woman; in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice; for<sup>m</sup> in Isaac shall thy seed be called.

13 And also of the son of the bond-woman will I make<sup>n</sup> a nation, because he is thy seed.

14 And Abraham rose up early in the morning,

Verse 1. The Lord visited Sarah] That is, God fulfilled his promise to Sarah by giving her, at the advanced age of ninety, power to conceive and bring forth a son.

Verse 6. God hath made me to laugh] Sarah alludes here to the circumstance mentioned chap. xviii. 12;—she seems to use the word to laugh in this place, not in the sense of being incredulous, but to express such pleasure or happiness as almost suspends the reasoning faculty for a time.

Verse 8. The child grew and was weaned] We have the verb to wean from the Anglo-Saxon awendan, to convert, turn from one thing to another, which is the exact import of the Hebrew word gumal in the text. At what time children were weaned among the ancients, is a disputed point. Some hold that children were always weaned at five years of age; others, that they were not weaned till they were twelve. It seems likely that among the Jews they were weaned when three years old.

Verse 9. Mocking.] What was implied in this mocking is not known. St. Paul, Gal. iv. 29, calls it persecuting; but it is likely he meant no more than some species of ridicule used by Ishmael on the occasion, and probably with respect to the age of Sarah at Isaac's birth, and her previous barrenness. Whatever it was, it became the occasion of the expulsion of himself and mother. Several authors are of opinion that the Egyptian bondage of four hundred years, mentioned chap. xv. 13, commenced with this persecution of the righteous seed by the son of an Egyptian woman.

Verse 10. Cast out this bond-woman and her son] Garash signifies not only to thrust out, drive away, and expel, but also to divorce (see Lev. xxi. 7); and it is in this latter sense the word should be understood here. Sarah wished Abraham to divorce Hagar, or to perform some sort of legal act by which Ishmael might be excluded from all claim on the inheritance.

Verse 12. In Isaac shall thy seed be called.] Here God shows the propriety of attending to the counsel of Sarah; and, lest Abraham, in whose eyes the thing was grievous, should feel distressed on the occasion, God renews his promises to Ishmael and his posterity.

Verse 14. Took bread, and a bottle] By the word bread and took bread, and a bottle of water, and gave it unto Hagar, (putting it on her shoulder,) and the child, and sent her away: and she departed, and wandered in the wilderness of Beer-sheba.

15 And the water was spent in the bottle, and she cast the child under one of the shrubs.

16 And she went, and sat her down over against him a good way off, as it were a bow-shot: for she said, Let me not see the death of the child. And she sat over against him, and lift up her voice, and wept.

17 And <sup>b</sup> God heard the voice of the lad; and the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, What aileth thee, Hagar? fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is.

18 Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand; for <sup>c</sup> I will make him a great nation.

19 And <sup>d</sup> God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water; and she went, and filled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink.

20 And God <sup>e</sup> was with the lad; and he grew, and dwelt in the wilderness, and became an archer.

21 And he dwelt in the wilderness of Paran; and his mother <sup>f</sup> took him a wife out of the land of Egypt.

22 And it came to pass at that time, that <sup>h</sup> Abimelech, and Phichol the chief captain of his host, spake unto Abraham, saying, <sup>i</sup> God is with thee in all that thou doest:

23 Now therefore, <sup>j</sup> I swear unto me here by God <sup>k</sup> that thou wilt not deal falsely with me, nor with my son, nor with my son's son: but according to the kindness that I have done unto thee, thou shalt do unto me, and to the land wherein thou hast sojourned.

24 And Abraham said, I will swear.

25 And Abraham reproved Abimelech because of a well of water, which Abimelech's servants <sup>l</sup> had violently taken away.

26 And Abimelech said, I wot not who hath done this thing: neither didst thou tell me; neither yet heard I of it, but to-day.

27 And Abraham took sheep and oxen, and gave them unto Abimelech; and both of them <sup>m</sup> made a covenant.

28 And Abraham set seven ewe lambs of the flock by themselves.

29 And Abimelech said unto Abraham, "What mean these seven ewe lambs which thou hast set by themselves?"

30 And he said, For these seven ewe lambs shalt thou take of my hand, that <sup>n</sup> they may be a witness unto me, that I have digged this well.

31 Wherefore he <sup>p</sup> called that place <sup>q</sup> Beer-sheba; because there they sware both of them.

32 Thus they made a covenant at Beer-sheba: then Abimelech rose up, and Phichol the chief captain of his host, and they returned into the land of the Philistines.

33 And Abraham planted a <sup>r</sup> grove in Beer-sheba, and <sup>s</sup> called there on the name of the LORD, <sup>t</sup> the everlasting God.

we are to understand the food or provisions which were necessary for her and Ishmael, till they should come to the place of their destination; which, no doubt, Abraham particularly pointed out. The bottle, which was made of skin, ordinarily a goat's skin, contained water sufficient to last them till they should come to the next well, which, it is likely Abraham particularly specified also. This well, it appears, Hagar missed, and therefore wandered about in the wilderness seeking more water, till all she had brought with her was expended. We may therefore safely presume that she and her son were sufficiently provided for their journey, had they not missed their way. What adds to the appearance of cruelty in this case is, that our translation seems to represent Ishmael as being a young child; and that Hagar was obliged to carry him, the bread, and the bottle of water, on her back or shoulder at the same time, but Ishmael was fourteen years old at the birth of Isaac. Add to this the age of Isaac when he was weaned, which was probably three, and we shall find that Ishmael was at the time of his leaving Abraham not less than seventeen years old; an age at which, in those primitive times, a young man was able to gain his livelihood, either by his bow in the wilderness, or by keeping flocks as Jacob did.

Verse 15. And she cast the child] That is, she sent the lad, under one of the shrubs, viz., to screen him from the intensity of the heat. His helplessness will be easily accounted for on this ground: 1. Young persons can bear much less fatigue than those who are arrived at mature age. 2. They require much more fluid, because from them a much larger quantity is thrown off by sweat and insensible perspiration, than from grown up or aged persons. 3. Their digestion is much more rapid, and hence they cannot bear hunger and thirst as well as the others.

Verse 19. God opened her eyes] These words appear to me to mean no more than that God directed her to a well, which probably was at no great distance.

Verse 21. He dwelt in the wilderness of Paran] This is generally allowed to have been a part of the desert belonging to Arabia Petraea, in the vicinity of Mount Sinai; and this seems to be its uniform meaning in the sacred writings.

Verse 22. At that time] This may either refer to the transactions recorded in the preceding chapter, or to the time of Ishmael's marriage, but most probably to the former.

Verse 23. Now therefore swear unto me] The oath on such occasions probably meant no more than the mutual promise of both the parties, when they slew an animal, poured out the blood as a sacrifice to God, and then passed between the pieces.

According to the kindness that I have done] The simple claims of justice were alone set up among virtuous people in those ancient times, which constitute the basis of the famous lex talionis, or law of like for like, kind office for kind office, and breach for breach.

Verse 25. Abraham reproved Abimelech] Wells were of great consequence in those hot countries, and especially where the flocks were numerous, because the water was scarce, and digging to find it was accompanied with much expense of time and labour.

Verse 26. I wot not who hath done this thing] The servants of Abimelech had committed these depredations without authority from their master, who appears to have been a very amiable man, possessing the fear of God, and regulating his conduct by the principles of righteousness and strict justice.

Verse 27. Took sheep and oxen] Some think that these were the sacrifices which were offered on the occasion, and which Abraham furnished at his own cost, and, in order to do Abimelech the greater honour, gave them to him to offer before the Lord.

Verse 28. Seven ewe lambs] These were either given as a present, or they were intended as the price of the well, and being accepted by Abimelech, they served as a witness that he had acknowledged Abraham's right to the well in question.

Verse 31. He called that place Beer-sheba] Literally, the well of swearing or of the oath, because they both sware there—mutually confirmed the covenant.

Verse 33. Abraham planted a grove] The original word eshel has been variously translated a grove, a plantation, an orchard, a cultivated field, and an oak. [It was probably a tamarisk, and was chosen because of its longevity as a witness of the contract.]

And called there on the name of the Lord] According to Dr. Shuckford the expression kara beshem never signifies to call upon the name, but to invoke in the name, and seems to be used where the true worshippers of God offered their prayers in the name of the true Mediator.

The everlasting God.] Yehovah el olam, JEHOVAH, the STRONG GOD, the ETERNAL ONE. This is the first place in scripture in which olam occurs as an attribute of God, and here it is evidently designed to point out his eternal duration; that it can mean no limited time is self-evident, because nothing of this kind can be attributed to God. No word can more forcibly express the grand characteristics of eternity than this. It is that duration which is concealed, hidden, or kept secret from all created beings; which is always existing, still running on but never running out; an interminable, incessant, and immeasurable duration; it is THAT, in the whole of which God alone can be said to exist, and that which the eternal mind can alone comprehend.

In all languages words have, in process of time, deviated from their original acceptations, and have become accommodated to particular purposes, and limited to particular meanings. This has happened both to the Hebrew alam, and the Greek aiwv; they have been both used to express a limited time, but in general a time the limits of which are unknown; and thus a pointed reference to the original ideal meaning is still kept up. The real grammatical meaning of both words is eternal and all other meanings are only accommodated ones; sound criticism must have recourse to the grammatical meaning, and its use among the earliest and most correct writers in the language, and will determine all accommodated meanings by this alone. Now the first and best writers in both these languages apply alam and aiwv to express eternal, in the proper meaning of that word; and this is their proper meaning in the Old and New Testaments when applied to God, his attributes, his operations taken in connexion with the ends for which he performs them; the counsels and purposes of God are permanent and eternal, and none of them can be frustrated; hence the words, when applied to things which from their nature must have a limited duration, are properly to be understood in this sense because those things, though temporal in themselves, shadow forth things that are eternal. Thus the Jewish dispensation, which in the whole and in its parts is frequently said to be leolam, for ever, and which has terminated in the Christian dispensation, has the word properly applied to it, because it typified and introduced that dispensation which is to continue not only while time shall last, but is to have its incessant accumulating consummation throughout eternity. The word is, with the same strict propriety, applied to the duration of the rewards and punishments in a future state. And the argument that pretends to prove (and it is only pretension) that in the future punishments of the wicked "the worm shall die," and "the fire shall be quenched," will apply as forcibly to the state of happy spirits, and as fully prove that a point in eternity shall arrive when the repose of the righteous shall be interrupted, and the glorification of the children of God have an eternal end!

1. Faithfulness is one of the attributes of God, and none of his promises can fail. According to the promise to Abraham, Isaac is born; and the promise is supernatural. Ishmael is born according to the ordinary course of nature, and cannot inherit, because the inheritance is spiritual, and cannot come by natural birth; hence we see that no man can expect to enter into the kingdom of God by birth, education, profession of the true faith, &c., &c. Reader, art thou born again? Hath God changed thy heart and thy life? If not, canst thou suppose that in thy present state thou canst possibly enter into the paradise of God? I leave thy conscience to answer.

2. The actions of good men may be misrepresented, and their motives suspected, because those motives are not known; and those who are prone to think evil are the last to take any care to inform their minds, so that they may judge righteous judgment. Abraham, in the dismissal of Hagar and Ishmael, has been accused of cruelty. But what he did he did in conformity to a divine command; and this very command was accompanied with a promise that both the child and his mother should be taken under the divine protection.

3. Did we acknowledge God in all our ways, he would direct our steps. Abimelech and Phichol, seeing Abraham a worshipper of the true God, made him swear by the object of his worship that there should be a lasting peace between them and him; for as they saw that God was with Abraham, they well knew that he could not expect the divine blessing any longer than he walked in integrity before God. From this very circumstance we may see the original purpose, design, and spirit of an oath, viz., Let God prosper or curse me in all that I do, as I prove true or false to my engagements! This is still the spirit of all oaths where God is called to witness, whether the form be by the water of the Ganges, the sign of the cross, kissing the Bible, or lifting up the hand to heaven. Hence we may learn that he who falsifies an oath or promise, made in the presence and name of God, thereby forfeits all right and title to the approbation and blessing of his Maker.

But it is highly criminal to make such appeals to God upon trivial occasions. Only the most solemn matters should be thus determined. Legislators who regard the morals of the people should take heed not to multiply oaths in matters of commerce and revenue, if they even use them at all.

CHAPTER XXII.

The faith and obedience of Abraham put to a most extraordinary test, 1. He is commanded to offer his beloved son Isaac for a burnt-offering, 2. He prepares, with the utmost promptitude, to accomplish the will of God, 3-6. Affecting speech of Isaac, 7; and Abraham's answer, 8. Having arrived at mount Moriah he prepares to sacrifice his son, 9, 10; and is prevented by an angel of the Lord, 11, 12. A ram is offered in the stead of Isaac, 13; and the place is named Jehovah-jireh, 14. The angel of the Lord calls to Abraham a second time, 15; and, in the most solemn manner, he is assured of innumerable blessings in the multiplication and prosperity of his seed, 16-18. Abraham returns and dwells at Beer-sheba, 19; hears that his brother Nahor has eight children by his wife Milcah, 20; their names, 21-23; and four by his concubine Reumah, 24.

AND it came to pass after these things, that God did tempt Abraham, and said unto him, Abraham: and he said, Behold, here I am.

2 And he said, Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt-offering, upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of.

* 1 Cor. x. 13. Heb. xi. 17. James i. 12. 1 Pet. i. 7.

Verse 1. God did tempt Abraham] The original here is very emphatic: "And the Elohim he tried this Abraham;" God brought him into such circumstances as exercised and discovered his faith, love, and obedience. Though the word tempt, from tento, signifies no more than to prove or try, yet as it is now generally used to imply a solicitation to evil, in which way God never tempts any man, it would be well to avoid it here.

Verse 2. Take now thy son] "Abraham desired earnestly to be let into the mystery of redemption; and God, to in-

3 And Abraham rose up <sup>a</sup>early in the morning, and saddled his ass, and took two of his young men with him, and Isaac his son, and clave the wood for the burnt-offering, and rose up, and went unto the place of which God had told him.

4 Then on the third day Abraham lifted up his eyes, and saw the place afar off.

5 And Abraham said unto his young men, Abide ye here with the ass; and I and the lad will go yonder and worship, and come again to you.

6 And Abraham took the wood of the burnt-offering, and <sup>b</sup>laid it upon Isaac his son; and he took the fire in his hand, and a knife; and they went both of them together.

7 And Isaac spake unto Abraham his father, and said, my father: and he said, <sup>c</sup>Here am I, my son. And he said, Behold the fire and the wood: but where <sup>d</sup>is the lamb for a burnt-offering?

8 And Abraham said, My son, God will provide himself a lamb <sup>e</sup>for a burnt-offering: so they went both of them together.

9 And they came to the place which God had told him of; and Abraham built an altar there, and laid the wood in order, and bound Isaac his son, and <sup>f</sup>laid him on the altar upon the wood.

10 And Abraham stretched forth his hand, and took the knife to slay his son.

11 And the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven, and said, Abraham, Abraham! and he said, Here am I.

12 And he said, <sup>g</sup>Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou any thing unto him: for <sup>h</sup>now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only <sup>i</sup>son, from me.

13 And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold, behind <sup>j</sup>him a ram caught in a thicket by struct him in the infinite extent of the divine goodness to mankind, who spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, let Abraham feel by experience what it was to lose a beloved son, the son born miraculously when Sarah was past child-bearing, as Jesus was miraculously born of a virgin. The duration, too, of the action, ver. 4, was the same as that between Christ's death and resurrection, both which were designed to be represented in it; and still farther, not only the final archetypal sacrifice of the Son of God was figured in the command to offer Isaac, but the intermediate typical sacrifice in the Mosaic economy was represented by the permitted sacrifice of the ram offered up, ver. 13, instead of Isaac."—Warburton.

[Only son] All that he had by Sarah his legal wife.

The land of Moriah] This is supposed to mean all the mountains of Jerusalem, comprehending Mount Gihon or Calvary, the mount of Sion, and of Aera. Beer-sheba, where Abraham dwelt, is about forty-two miles distant from Jerusalem, and it is not to be wondered at that Abraham, Isaac, the two servants, and the ass laden with wood for the burnt-offering, did not reach this place till the third day.

Verse 3. Two of his young men] Eliezer and Ishmael according to the Targum.

Verse 4. The third day] "As the number SEVEN," says Mr. Ainsworth, "is of especial use in Scripture because of the sabbath day, Gen. ii. 2, so THREE is a mystical number because of Christ's rising from the dead the third day, Matt. xvii. 23, 1 Cor. xv. 4; and Isaac, as he was a figure of Christ, in being the only son of his father, and not spared but offered for a sacrifice, Rom. viii. 32, so in sundry particulars he resembled our Lord: the third day Isaac was to be offered up, so it was the third day in which Christ also was to be perfected, Luke xiii. 32; Isaac carried the wood for the burnt-offering, ver. 6, so Christ carried the tree whereon he died, John xix. 17; the binding of Isaac, ver. 9, was also typical, so Christ was bound, Matt. xxvii. 2."

Verse 5. I and the lad will go—and come again] How could Abraham consistently with truth say this, when he knew he was going to make his son a burnt-offering? The apostle answers for him: By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac—accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead, from whence also he received him in a figure, Heb. xi. 17, 19. He knew that previously to the birth of Isaac both he and his wife were dead to all the purposes of procreation; that his birth was a kind of life from the dead; that the promise of God was most positive. In Isaac shall thy seed be called, chap. xxi. 12; that this promise could not fail; that it was his duty to obey the command of his Maker; and that it was as easy for God to restore him to life after he had been a burnt-offering, as it was for him to give him life in the beginning. Therefore he went fully purposed to offer his son, and yet confidently expecting to have him restored to life again.

Verse 6. Took the wood—and laid it upon Isaac] Probably the mountain-top to which they were going was too difficult to be ascended by the ass; therefore either the father or the son must carry the wood, and it was most becoming in the latter.

Verse 7. Behold the fire and the wood: but where is the lamb] Nothing can be conceived more tender, affectionate, and affecting, than the question of the son and the reply of the father on this occasion.

Verse 8. My son, God will provide himself a lamb] Here we find the same obedient unshaken faith for which this pattern of practical piety was ever remarkable. But we must not suppose that this was the language merely of faith and obedience; the patriarch spake prophetically, and referred to that Lamb of God which HE had provided for himself, who in the fulness of time should take away the sin of the world, and of whom Isaac was a most expressive type. All the other lambs which had been offered from the foundation of the world had been such as MEN chose and MEN offered; but THIS was the Lamb which GOD had provided—emphatically, THE LAMB OF GOD.

Verse 9. And bound Isaac his son] What must Abraham's heart have felt at the questions asked by his innocent and amiable son? What must he have suffered while building the altar, laying on the wood, binding his lovely son, placing him on the wood, taking the knife, and stretching out his hand to slay the child of his hopes? Every view we take of the subject interests the heart, and exalts the character of this father of the faithful. But has the character of Isaac been duly considered? Is not the consideration of his excellence lost in the supposition that he was too young to enter particularly into a sense of his danger, and too feeble to have made any resistance, had he been unwilling to submit? It is probable that he was now about thirty-three, the age at which his great Antitype was offered up; allowing him however to be only twenty-five, he might have easily resisted; for can it be supposed that an old man of at least one hundred and twenty-five years of age could have bound, without his consent, a young man in the very prime and vigour of life? In this case we cannot say the superior strength of the father prevailed, but the piety, filial affection, and obedience of the son yielded. All this was most illustratively typical of Christ. In both cases the father himself offers up his only-begotten son, and the father himself binds him on the wood or to the cross; in neither case is the son forced to yield, but yields of his own accord; in neither case is the life taken away by the hand of violence; Isaac yields himself to the knife, Jesus lays down his life for the sheep.

Verse 11. The angel of the Lord] The very person who was represented by this offering; the Lord Jesus, who calls himself Jehovah, and on his own authority renews the promises of the covenant. HE was ever the great Mediator between God and man.

Verse 12. Lay not thine hand upon the lad] As Isaac was to be the representative of Jesus Christ's real sacrifice, it was sufficient for this purpose that in his own will and the will of his father, the purpose of the immolation was complete. Isaac was now fully offered both by his father and by himself. The father yields up the son, the son gives up his life; on his horns; and Abraham went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt-offering in the stead of his son.

14 And Abraham called the name of that place * Jehovah-jireh: as it is said to this day, in the mount of the Lord it shall be seen.

15 And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time,

16 And said, <sup>b</sup> By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son;

17 That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed <sup>c</sup> as the stars of the heaven, <sup>d</sup> and as the sand which is upon the sea <sup>e</sup> shore; and <sup>f</sup> thy seed shall possess <sup>g</sup> the gate of his enemies;

Verse 14. Jehovah-jireh] The Lord will see; that is, God will take care that every thing shall be done that is necessary for the comfort and support of them who trust in him: hence the words are usually translated, The Lord will provide. But all this seems to have been done under a divine impulse, and the words to have been spoken prophetically: hence some render the words thus: Dominus videbitur, the Lord shall be seen; and this translation the following clause seems to require, As it is said to this day, behar Yehovah yeraeh, ON THIS MOUNT THE LORD SHALL BE SEEN. From this it appears that the sacrifice offered by Abraham was understood to be a representative one, and a tradition was kept up that Jehovah should be seen in a sacrificial way on this mount. And this renders the opinion stated on ver. 1 more than probable, viz., that Abraham offered Isaac on that very mountain on which, in the fulness of time, Jesus suffered.

Verse 16. By myself have I sworn] So we find that the person who was called the angel of the Lord is here called Jehovah. See Heb. vi. 13-18.

Verse 17. Shall possess the gate of his enemies] By the gates may be meant all the strength, whether troops, counsels, or fortified cities, of their enemies.

Verse 18. And in thy seed, &c.] We have the authority of St. Paul, Gal. iii. 8, 16, 18, to restrain this to our blessed Lord, who was the SEED through whom alone all God's blessings of providence, mercy, grace, and glory, should be conveyed to the nations of the earth.

Verse 20. Behold, Milcah, she hath also born children to thy brother] This short history seems introduced solely for the purpose of preparing the reader for the transactions related, chap. xxiv., and to show that the providence of God was preparing, in one of the branches of the family of Abraham, a suitable spouse for his son Isaac.

Verse 21. Huz] He is supposed to have peopled the land of Uz, in Arabia Deserta, the country of Job.

Buz his brother] From this person Elihu the Buzite is thought to have descended.

earth be blessed; <sup>1</sup> because thou hast obeyed my voice.

19 So Abraham returned unto his young men, and they rose up, and went together to <sup>2</sup> Beer-sheba; and Abraham dwelt at Beer-sheba.

20 And it came to pass after these things, that it was told Abraham, saying, Behold, <sup>3</sup> Milcah, she hath also born children unto thy brother Nahor;

21 <sup>4</sup> Huz his first-born, and Buz his brother, and Kemuel the father <sup>5</sup> of Aram.

22 And Chesed, and Hazo, and Phildash, and Jidlaph, and Bethuel.

Rom. ix. 10, Rebecca.—<sup>11</sup> Ch. xvi. 8. <sup>12</sup> xxv. 6.

Kemuel the father of Aram] Probably the Kamiletes, a Syrian tribe to the westward of the Euphrates, are meant.

Verse 23. Bethuel begat Rebekah] Who afterwards became the wife of Isaac.

Verse 24. His concubine] We borrow this word from the Latin compound concubina, from con, together, and cubo, to lie, and apply it solely to a woman cohabiting with a man without being legally married. The Hebrew word pilegess denotes in scripture a kind of secondary wife, not unlawful in the patriarchal times; though the progeny of such could not inherit. The word is not used in the scriptures in that disgraceable sense in which we commonly understand it.

From the trial of Abraham we again see, 1. That God may bring his followers into severe straits and difficulties, that they may have the better opportunity of both knowing and showing their own faith and obedience; and that he may seize on those occasions to show them the abundance of his mercy, and thus confirm them in righteousness all their days. There may be much grace, though God, for good reasons, does not think proper for a time to put it to any severe trial or proof. But grace is certainly not fully known but in being called to trials of severe and painful obedience. 2. The offering up of Isaac is used by several religious people in a sort of metaphorical way, to signify their easily-besetting sins, beloved idols, &c. But this is a most reprehensible abuse of the scripture. It is both insolent and wicked to compare some abominable lust or unholy affection to the amiable and pious youth who, for his purity and excellence, was deemed worthy to prefigure the sacrifice of the Son of God; and to talk of sacrificing such to God is downright blasphemy.

Independently of the typical reference in this transaction, there are two points which seem to be recommended particularly to our notice. 1. The astonishing faith and prompt obedience of the father. 2. The innocence, filial respect, and passive submission of the son. Such a father and such a son were alone worthy of each other.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The age and death of Sarah, 1, 2. Abraham mourns for her, and requests a burial-place from the sons of Heth, 2-4. They freely offer him the choice of all their sepulchres, 5, 6. Abraham refuses to receive any as a free gift, and requests to buy the cave of Machpelah from Ephron, 7-9. Ephron proffers the cave and the field in which it was situated as a free gift unto Abraham, 10, 11. Abraham insists on giving its value in money, 12, 13. Ephron at last consents, and names the sum of four hundred shekels, 14, 15. Abraham weighs him the money in the presence of the people; in consequence of which the cave, the whole field, trees, &c., are made sure to him and his family for a possession, 16-18. The transaction being completed, Sarah is buried in the cave, 19. The sons of Heth ratify the bargain, 20.

AND Sarah was an hundred and seven and twenty years old: these were the years of the life of Sarah.

2 And Sarah died in *Kirjath-arba; the same is <sup>b</sup>Hebron in the land of Canaan: and Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her.

3 And Abraham stood up from before his dead, and spake unto the sons of Heth, saying,

4 I am a stranger and a sojourner with you: give me a possession of a burying-place with you, that I may bury my dead out of my sight.

5 And the children of Heth answered Abraham, saying unto him,

6 Hear us, my lord: thou art <sup>a</sup>a mighty prince among us; in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead; none of us shall withhold from thee his sepulchre, but that thou mayest bury thy dead.

7 And Abraham stood up, and bowed himself to the people of the land, even to the children of Heth.

8 And he communed with them, saying, If it be your mind that I should bury my dead out of my sight; hear me, and intreat for me to Ephron the son of Zohar.

9 That he may give me the cave of Machpelah, which he hath, which is in the end of his field; for <sup>a</sup>as much money as it is worth he shall give it me for a possession of a burying-place amongst you.

10 And Ephron dwelt among the children of Heth: and Ephron the Hittite answered Abraham in the <sup>b</sup>audience of the children of Heth, even of all that went in at the gate of his city, saying,

11 <sup>c</sup>Nay, my lord, hear me: the field give I thee, and the cave that is therein, I give it thee: in the presence of the sons of my people give I it thee: bury thy dead.

12 And Abraham bowed down himself before the people of the land.

13 And he spake unto Ephron in the audience of the people of the land, saying, But if thou will give it, I pray thee, hear me: I will give thee money for the field; take it of me, and I will bury my dead there.

14 And Ephron answered Abraham, saying unto him,

15 My lord, hearken unto me: the land is worth four hundred <sup>d</sup>shekels of silver; what is that betwixt me and thee? bury therefore thy dead.

16 And Abraham hearkened unto Ephron; and Abraham <sup>e</sup>weighed to Ephron the silver, which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth, four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant.

17 And <sup>f</sup>the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah, which was before Mamre, the field, and the cave which was therein, and all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, were made sure

18 Unto Abraham for a possession in the presence of the children of Heth, before all that went in at the gate of his city.

19 And after this Abraham buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah before Mamre: the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan.

20 And the field, and the cave that is therein, <sup>g</sup>were made sure unto Abraham for a possession of a burying-place <sup>h</sup>by the sons of Heth.

Verse 1. And Sarah was an hundred and seven and twenty years old] It is worthy of remark that Sarah is the only woman in the sacred writings, whose age, death, and burial are distinctly noted. And she has been deemed worthy of higher honour, for St. Paul, Gal. iv. 22, 23, makes her a type of the church of Christ; and her faith in the accomplishment of God's promise, that she should have a son, when all natural probabilities were against it, is particularly celebrated in the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. xi. 11. He, by whose almighty power Sarah had strength to conceive and bear a son in her old age, and by whose miraculous interference a virgin conceived, and the man Christ Jesus was born of her, can by the same power transform the sinful soul, and cause it to bear the image of the heavenly as it has borne the image of the earthly.

Verse 2. Sarah died in Kirjath-arba] Literally, in the city of the four. Some suppose this place was so called because it was the burial-place of Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; others, because according to the opinion of the rabbins Eve was buried there, with Sarah, Rebekah, and Leah. But it seems evidently to have had its name from a Canaanite, one of the Anakim, probably called Arba, who was the chief of the four brothers who dwelt there; the names of the others being Sheshai, Ahiman, and Talmai. [It is more likely that Arba was an ancient Canaanite name, representing neither a man nor a numeral, but some local peculiarity.]

Abraham came to mourn for Sarah] Abraham had probably several places of temporary residence, and particularly one at Beer-sheba, and another at Hebron; and it is likely that while he sojourned at Beer-sheba, Sarah died at Hebron; and his coming to mourn and weep for her signifies his coming from the former to the latter place on the news of her death.

Verse 3. Abraham stood up from before his dead] He had probably sat on the ground some days in token of sorrow, as the custom then was; and when this time was finished he arose and began to treat about a burying-place.

Verse 4. I am a stranger and a sojourner] It appears from Heb. xi. 13-16, 1 Pet. ii. 11, that these words refer more to the state of his mind than of his body. He felt that he had no certain dwelling-place, and was seeking by faith a city that had foundations.

Give me a possession of a burying-place] Among different nations it was deemed ignominious to be buried in another's ground; and it may be in reference to a sentiment of this kind that Abraham refuses to accept the offer of the children of Heth to bury in any of their sepulchres, and earnestly requests them to sell him one, that he might bury his wife in a place that he could claim as his own.

Verse 6. Thou art a mighty prince] A prince of God—a person whom we know to be divinely favoured, and whom, in consequence, we deeply respect and reverence.

Verse 8. Intreat for me to Ephron] Abraham came to the gate of Hebron where the elders of the people sat to administer justice, &c., and where bargains and sales were made and witnessed, and begged the elders to use their influence with the owner of the cave and field to sell it to him, that it might serve him and his family for a place of sepulture.

Verse 10. And Ephron dwelt among the children of Heth] Yeshub, was sitting, among the children of Heth, but was personally unknown to Abraham; he therefore answered for himself, making a free tender of the field, &c., to Abraham, in the presence of all the people, which amounted to a legal conveyance of the whole property to the patriarch.

Verse 13. If thou wilt give it] Instead of, If thou wilt give it, we should read, But if thou wilt sell it, I will give thee money for the field; keseph, silver, not coined money, for it is not probable that any such was then in use.

Verse 15. The land is worth four hundred shekels of silver] Though the words is worth are not in the text, yet they are necessarily expressed here to adapt the Hebrew to the idiom of our tongue. Four hundred shekels would be equal to sixty pounds sterling; but it is evident that a certain weight is intended, and not a coin, for Abraham weighed the silver, and hence it appears that this weight itself passed afterwards as a current coin. [The value of the silver was a little over fifty pounds sterling.]

Verse 16. Current with the merchant. Passing to or with the traveller—such as was commonly used by those who travelled about with merchandise of any sort. The word signifies the same as hawker or pedlar among us.

1. In this transaction between Abraham and the sons of Heth concerning the cave and field of Machpelah, we have the earliest account on record of the purchase of land. The simplicity, openness, and candour on both sides cannot be too much admired.

2. Sarah being dead, Abraham wished to purchase a place in which he might have the continual right of sepulture. The conveyance of this place to Abraham is made sure, without the intervention of those puzzlers of civil affairs by whose tricks and chicanery property often becomes insecure, and right and succession precarious and uncertain. In the first ages of mankind, suspicion, deceit, and guile seem to have had a very limited influence. Happy days of primitive simplicity!

8. We often hear of the rudeness and barbarity of the primitive ages, but on what evidence? Every rule of politeness that could be acted upon in such a case as that mentioned here, is brought into full practice. Is it possible to read the simple narration in this place without admiring the amiable, decent, and polite conduct displayed on both sides? There is neither awkward, stiff formality on the one hand, nor frippery or affectation on the other. The religion of the Bible recommends and inculcates orderly behaviour, as well as purity of heart and life. They who, under the sanction of religion, trample under foot the decent forms of civil respect, supposing that because they are religious they have a right to be rude, totally mistake the spirit of Christianity, for love or charity (the soul and essence of that religion) behaveth not itself unseemly. Every attentive reader of the thirteenth chapter of St. Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians, will clearly discern that the description of true religion given in that place applies as forcibly to good breeding as to inward and outward holiness.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Abraham, being solicitous to get his son Isaac properly married, calls his confidential servant, probably Eliezer, and makes him swear that he will not take a wife for Isaac from among the Canaanites, 1-3, but from among his own kindred, 4. The servant proposes certain difficulties, 5, which Abraham removes by giving him the strongest assurances of God's direction in the business, 6, 7, and then specifies the conditions of the oath, 8. The form of the oath itself, 9. The servant makes preparations for his journey, and sets out for Mesopotamia, the residence of Abraham's kindred, 10. Arrives at a well near to the place, 11. His prayer to God, 12-14. Rebekah, the daughter of Bethuel, son of Nahor, Abraham's brother, comes to the well to draw water, 15. She is described, 16. Conversation between her and Abraham's servant, in which every thing took place according to his prayer to God, 17-21. He makes her presents, and learns whose daughter she is, 22-24. She invites him to her father's house, 25. He returns thanks to God for having thus far given him a prosperous journey, 26, 27. Rebekah runs home and informs her family, 28; on which her brother Laban comes out, and invites the servant home, 29-31. His reception, 32, 33. Tells his errand, 34, and how he had proceeded in executing the trust reposed in him, 35-48. Requests an answer, 49. The family of Rebekah consent that she should become the wife of Isaac, 50, 51. The servant worships God, 52, and gives presents to Milcah, Laban, and Rebekah, 53. He requests to be dismissed, 54-56. Rebekah being consulted consents to go, 57, 58. She is accompanied by her nurse, 59; and having received the blessing of her parents and relatives, 60, she departs with the servant of Abraham, 61. They are met by Isaac, who was on an evening walk for the purpose of meditation, 62-65. The servant relates to Isaac all that he had done, 66. Isaac and Rebekah are married, 67.

AND Abraham <sup>a</sup> was old, and <sup>b</sup> well stricken in age: and the LORD <sup>c</sup> had blessed Abraham in all things.

2 And Abraham said <sup>d</sup> unto his eldest servant of his house, that <sup>e</sup> ruled over all that he had, 'Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh:

3 And I will make thee <sup>f</sup> swear by the LORD, the God of heaven, and the God of the earth, that <sup>h</sup> thou shalt not take a wife unto my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, among whom I dwell:

Verse 1. And Abraham was old] He was now about one hundred and forty years of age, and consequently Isaac was forty, being born when his father was one hundred years old.

Verse 2. Eldest servant] As this eldest servant is stated to have been the ruler over all that he had, it is very likely that Eliezer is meant.

Verse 3. Of the Canaanites] Because these had already been devoted to slavery, &c., and it would have been utterly inconsistent as well with prudence as with the design of God to have united the child and heir of the promise with one who was under a curse, though that curse might be considered to be only of a political nature.

4 'But thou shalt go <sup>i</sup> unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac.

5 And the servant said unto him, Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I needs bring thy son again unto the land from whence thou camest?

6 And Abraham said unto him, Beware thou that thou bring not my son thither again.

Verse 4. My country] Mesopotamia, called here Abraham's country, because it was the place where the family of Haran, his brother, had settled; and where himself had remained a considerable time with his father Terah. In this family, as well as in that of Nahor, the true religion had been in some sort preserved, though afterwards considerably corrupted.

Verse 7. The Lord God, &c.] He expresses the strongest confidence in God, that the great designs for which he had brought him from his own kindred to propagate the true religion in the earth would be accomplished; and that therefore, when earthly instruments failed, heavenly ones should be and which spake unto me, and that sware unto me, saying, 'Unto thy seed will I give this land; 'he shall send his angel before thee, and thou shalt take a wife unto my son from thence.

8 And if the woman will not be willing to follow thee, then 'thou shalt be clear from this my oath: only bring not my son thither again.

9 And the servant put his hand under the thigh of Abraham his master, and sware to him concerning that matter.

10 And the servant took ten camels of the camels of his master, and departed; ('for 'all the goods of his master were in his hand :) and he rose, and went to Mesopotamia, unto 'the city of Nahor.

11 And he made his camels to kneel down without the city by a well of water at the time of the evening, even the time 'that women go out to draw water.<sup>b</sup>

12 And he said, 'O Lord God of my master Abraham, I pray thee, 'send me good speed this day and shew kindness unto my master Abraham.

13 Behold, 'I stand here by the well of water; and 'the daughters of the men of the city come out to draw water:

14 And let it come to pass, that the damsel to whom I shall say, Let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink; and she shall say, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also: let the same be she that thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac; and 'thereby shall I know that thou hast showed kindness unto my master.

15 And it came to pass, before he had done speaking, that, behold, Rebekah came out, who was born to Bethuel, son of 'Milah, the wife of Nahor, Abraham's brother, with her pitcher upon her shoulder, 16 And the damsel 'was 'very fair to look upon, a virgin, neither had any man known her: and she went down to the well, and filled her pitcher, and came up.

17 And the servant ran to meet her, and said, Let me, I pray thee, drink a little water of thy pitcher.

18 'And she said, Drink, my lord; and she hastened, and let down her pitcher upon her hand, and gave him drink.

19 And when she had done giving him drink, she said, I will draw water for thy camels also, until they have done drinking.

20 And she hastened, and emptied her pitcher into the trough, and ran again unto the well to draw water, and drew for all his camels.

21 And the man, wondering at her, held his peace, to wit whether 'the Lord had made his journey prosperous or not.

22 And it came to pass, as the camels had done drinking, that the man took a golden 'ear-ring 'of half a shekel weight, and two bracelets for her hands of ten shekels weight of gold;

23 And said, Whose daughter art thou? tell me, I pray thee: is there room in thy father's house for us to lodge in?

24 And she said unto him, 'I am the daughter of Bethuel the son of Milah, which she bare unto Nahor.

employed. He shall send his angel, probably meaning the Angel of the Covenant, of whom see chap. xv. 7.

Verse 9. Put his hand under the thigh of Abraham] When we put the circumstances mentioned in this and the third verse together, we shall find that they fully express the ancient method of binding by oath in such transactions as had a religious tendency. 1. The rite or ceremony used on the occasion: the person binding himself put his hand under the thigh of the person to whom he was to be bound; i.e. he put his hand on the part that bore the mark of circumcision, the sign of God's covenant, which is tantamount to our kissing the book or laying the hand upon the New Testament or covenant of our Lord Jesus Christ. 2. The form of the oath itself: the person swore by Jehovah, the God of heaven and the God of the earth. Three essential attributes of God are here mentioned: 1. His self-existence and eternity in the name Jehovah. 2. His dominion of glory and blessedness in the kingdom of heaven. 3. His providence and bounty in the earth. An oath of this kind, taken at such a time, and on such an occasion, can never be deemed irreligious or profane. The person binding himself proposes for a pattern the unchangeable and just God; and as HE is the avenger of wrong and the punisher of falsehood, and has all power in the heaven and in the earth, so he can punish perjury by privation of spiritual and temporal blessings, by the loss of life, and by inflicting the perdition due to ungodly men, among whom liars and perjured persons occupy the most distinguished rank. Our ideas of delicacy may revolt from the rite used on this occasion; but when the nature of the covenant is considered, of which circumcision was the sign, we shall at once perceive that this rite could not be used without producing sentiments of reverence and godly fear, as the contracting party must know that the God of this covenant was a consuming fire.

Verse 10. Took ten camels] It was customary to give a dowry for a wife, and not to receive one with her.

Verse 11. He made his camels to kneel down] To rest themselves, or lie down.

Verse 12. And he said, O Lord God, &c.] In all things the assistance and blessing of God are necessary, even where human strength and wisdom have the fullest and freest sphere of action; but there are numberless cases, of infinite consequence to man, where his strength and prudence can be of little or no avail, and where the God of all grace must work all things according to the counsel of his own will. To expect the accomplishment of any good end, without a proper use of the means, is the most reprehensible enthusiasm; and to suppose that any good can be done or procured without the blessing and mercy of God, merely because proper means are used, is not less reprehensible. Plan, scheme, and labour, like Eliezer, and then, by earnest faith and prayer, commit the whole to the direction and blessing of God.

Verse 15. Behold, Rebekah came out] How admirably had the providence of God adapted every circumstance to the necessity of the case, and so as in the most punctual manner to answer the prayer which his servant had offered up!

Verse 19. I will draw water for thy camels also] Had Rebekah done no more than Eliezer had prayed for, we might have supposed that she acted not as a free agent, but was impelled to it by the absolutely controlling power of God; but as she exceeds all that was requested, we see that it sprang from her native benevolence, and sets her conduct in the most amiable point of view.

Verse 21. The man, wondering at her] And he was so lost in wonder and astonishment at her simplicity, innocence, and benevolence, that he permitted this delicate female to draw water for ten camels, without ever attempting to afford her any kind of assistance! I know not which to wonder at most, the benevolence and condescension of Rebekah, or the cold and apparently stupid indifference of the servant of Abraham.

Verse 22. The man took a golden ear-ring] That this could not be an ear-ring is very probable from its being in the singular number. The margin calls it a jewel for the straw and provender enough, and room to lodge in.

26 And the man <sup>a</sup> bowed down his head, and worshipped the Lord.

27 And he said, <sup>b</sup> Blessed be the Lord God of my master Abraham, who hath not left destitute my master of <sup>c</sup> his mercy and his truth: I being in the way, the Lord <sup>d</sup> led me to the house of my master's brethren.

28 And the damsel ran, and told them of her mother's house these things.

29 And Rebekah had a brother, and his name was <sup>e</sup> Laban: and Laban ran out unto the man, unto the well.

30 And it came to pass, when he saw the ear-ring and bracelets upon his sister's hands, and when he heard the words of Rebekah his sister, saying, Thus spake the man unto me, that he came unto the man; and, behold, he stood by the camels at the well.

31 And he said, Come in, <sup>f</sup> thou blessed of the Lord; wherefore standest thou without? for I have prepared the house, and room for the camels.

32 And the man came unto the house; and he ungirded his camels, and <sup>g</sup> gave straw and provender for the camels, and water to wash his feet, and the men's feet that were with him.

33 And there was set meat before him to eat: but he said, <sup>h</sup> I will not eat until I have told mine errand. And he said, Speak on.

34 And he said, I am Abraham's servant.

forehead; but it most likely means a jewel for the nose, or nose-ring, which is in universal use through all parts of Arabia and Persia, particularly among young women. They are generally worn in the left nostril.

And two bracelets] The small part of the leg is generally decorated in this way, and so is the whole arm from the shoulder to the wrist. As these tsemidin were given to Rebekah for her hands, it sufficiently distinguishes them from a similar ornament used for the ankles.

In different parts of the sacred writings there are allusions to ornaments of various kinds still in use in different Asiatic countries. They are of seven different sorts: for the forehead; for the nose; for the ears; for the arms; for the fingers; for the neck and breast; for the ankles.

Verse 26. Bowed down his head, and worshipped] Two acts of adoration are mentioned here: 1. Bowing the head; and 2. Prostration upon the earth. The bowing of the head was to Rebekah, to return her thanks for her kind invitation. The prostration was to Jehovah in gratitude for the success with which he had favoured him.

Verse 28. Her mother's house] Some have conjectured from this that her father Bethuel was dead; and the person called Bethuel, verse 50, was a younger brother. This is possible, but the mother's house might be mentioned even were the father alive; for in Asiatic countries the women have apartments entirely separate from those of the men, in which their little children and grown up daughters reside with them.

Verse 31. Thou blessed of the Lord] Probably a usual mode of wishing prosperity, as he that is blessed of the Lord 39 <sup>n</sup> And I said unto my master, Peradventure the woman will not follow me.

45 <sup>t</sup> And before I had done <sup>u</sup> speaking in mine heart, behold, Rebekah came forth, with her pitcher on her shoulder: and she went down unto the well, and drew water: and I said unto her, Let me drink, I pray thee.

46 And she made haste, and let down her pitcher from her shoulder, and said, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also; so I drank, and she made the camels drink also.

47 And I asked her, and said, Whose daughter art thou? And she said, The daughter of Bethuel, Nahor's son, whom Milcah bare unto him: and I <sup>v</sup> put the ear-ring upon her face, and the bracelets upon her hands.

is worthy of all respect; for, enjoying the divine favour, he is in possession of the sum of happiness.

Verse 32. Provender for the camels] These were the first objects of his care; for a good man is merciful to his beast.

Water to wash his feet] Thus it appears that he had servants with him; and as the fatigues of the journey must have fallen as heavily upon them as upon himself, water is provided to wash their feet also.

Verse 33. I will not eat until I have told] Here is a servant who had his master's interest more at heart than his own. He refuses to take even necessary refreshment till he knows whether he is likely to accomplish the object of his journey.

Verse 36. Unto him hath he given all that he hath.] He has made Isaac his sole heir. These things appear to be spoken to show the relatives of Rebekah that his master's son was a proper match for her; for even in those primitive times there was regard had to the suitability of station and rank in life, as well as of education, in order to render a match comfortable.

Verse 42. O Lord God of my master] As Abraham was the friend of God, Eliezer makes use of this to give weight and consequence to his petitions.

Verse 43. When the virgin] Haalmah, from alam, to hide, cover, or conceal; a pure virgin, a woman uncovered, and in this respect still concealed from man.

Verse 45. Before I had done speaking in mine heart] So we find that the whole of this prayer, so circumstantially related verses 12-14, and again 42-44, was mental, and heard only by that God to whom it was directed.

52 And it came to pass, that, when Abraham's servant heard their words, he <sup>c</sup> worshipped the Lord, bowing himself to the earth.

53 And the servant brought forth <sup>a</sup> jewels of silver, <sup>b</sup> and jewels of gold, and raiment, and gave them to Rebekah: he gave also to her brother and to her mother <sup>c</sup> precious things.

54 And they did eat and drink, he and the men that were with him, and tarried all night; and they rose up in morning, and he said, <sup>d</sup> Send me away unto my master.

55 And her brother and her mother said, Let the damsel abide with us <sup>a</sup> a few days, at the least ten; after that she shall go.

56 And he said unto them, Hinder me not, seeing the Lord hath prospered my way; send me away that I may go to my master.

57 And they said, We will call the damsel, and inquire at her mouth.

Verse 49. That I may turn to the right hand or to the left. That is, That I may go elsewhere and seek a proper match for the son of my master.

Verse 50. Laban and Bethuel These seem both to be brothers, of whom Laban was the eldest and chief; for the opinion of Josephus appears to be very correct, viz. that Bethuel, the father, had been some time dead.

Bad or good. We can neither speak for nor against; it seems to be entirely the work of God, and we cordially submit; consult Rebekah; if she be willing, take her and go.

Verse 53. Jewels of silver, and jewels of gold. The word keley, which we here translate jewels, signifies properly vessels or instruments; and those presented by Eliezer might have been of various kinds. What he had given before, ver. 22, was in token of respect, what he gave now appears to have been in the way of dowry.

Precious things. This word is used to express exquisite fruits or delicacies, Deut. xxxiii. 18-16; precious plants or flowers, Cant. iv. 16, vii. 13. But it may mean gifts in general, though rather of an inferior kind to those mentioned above.

Verse 54. And they did eat and drink. When Eliezer had got a favourable answer, then he and his servants sat down to meat; this he had refused to do till he had told his message, ver. 38.

Verse 55. Let the damsel abide with us a few days, at the least ten. The original is very abrupt and obscure, because we are not acquainted with the precise meaning of the form of speech which is here used; DAYS or TEN, probably meaning a year or ten months, as the margin reads it, or a week or ten days. This latter is the most likely sense, as there would be no propriety, after having given their consent that she should go, in detaining her for a year or ten months.

Verse 58. Wilt thou go with this man? So it appears it was left ultimately to the choice of Rebekah whether she would accept the proposals now made to her, unless we suppose that the question meant, Wilt thou go immediately, or stay with us a month longer?

She said, I will go. It fully appears to be the will of God that it should be so, and I consent. This at once determined the whole business.

Verse 59. And her nurse Whose name, we learn from chap. xxiv. 8, was Deborah, and who, as a second mother, 58 And they called Rebekah, and said unto her, Wilt thou go with this man? and she said, I will go.

59 And they sent away Rebekah their sister, and her nurse, and Abraham's servant, and his men.

60 And they blessed Rebekah, and said unto her, Thou art our sister, be thou " the mother of thousands of millions, and " let thy seed possess the gate of those which hate them.

61 And Rebekah arose, and her damsels, and they rode upon the camels, and followed the man: and the servant took Rebekah, and went his way.

62 And Isaac came from the way of the " well Lahai-roi; for he dwelt in the south country.

63 And Isaac went out " to meditate in the field at the eventide " : and he lifted up his eyes, and saw, and behold, the camels were coming.

64 And Rebekah lifted up her eyes, and when she saw Isaac, " she lighted off the camel.

65 For she had said unto the servant, What man is this that walketh in the field to meet us? And the servant had said, it is my master: therefore she took " a veil, and covered herself.

66 And the servant told Isaac all things that he had done.

67 And Isaac brought her into his mother " Sarah's tent, and took Rebekah, and she became his wife; and he loved her: and Isaac " was comforted after his mother's death.

was deemed proper to accompany Rebekah. This was a measure dictated by good sense and prudence.

Verse 60. Be thou the mother of thousands of millions Or for myriads of thousands, a large family being ever considered, in ancient times, as a proof of the peculiar blessing and favour of God.

Verse 62. And Isaac came As it appears from chapter xxv. 11 that Isaac dwelt at the well Lahai-roi, it has been conjectured that he had now come on a visit to his aged father at Beer-sheba, where he waited in expectation of his bride.

Verse 63. Isaac went out to meditate He was probably in deep thought, with his eyes fixed upon the ground. What the subject of his meditation was it is useless to inquire; he was a pious man, and could not be triflingly employed.

Verse 65. She took a veil This is the first time this word occurs, and it is of doubtful signification; but most agree to render it a veil or a cloak. The former is the most likely, as it was generally used by women in the East as a sign of chastity, modesty, and subjection. [The veil in question was a large wrapper, which covered the whole person.]

Verse 67. Sarah's tent Sarah, being dead, her tent became now appropriated to the use of Rebekah.

And took Rebekah, &c. After what form this was done we are not told; or whether there was any form used on the occasion more than solemnly receiving her as the person whom God had chosen to be his wife.

The particular or especial providence by which God governs the affairs of the universe is not confined to work by general laws; it steps out of common ways, and takes particular directions, as endlessly varied human necessities may need, or the establishment and maintenance of godliness in the earth may require.

See with what simplicity and confidence the servant of Abraham prays to God! He even prescribes the way in which the divine choice and approbation shall be made known; and God honours the purity of his motives and his pious faith, by giving him precisely the answer he wished. How honourable in the sight of God is simplicity of heart!

It has nothing to fear, and all good to hope for; whereas a spirit warped by self-interest and worldly views is always uncertain and agitated, as it is ever seeking that from its own counsels, projects, and schemes, which should be sought in God alone. In every place the upright man meets with his God; for such an one the whole economy of providence and grace is ever at work.

How careful should parents be to procure alliances for their children with those who fear God. But alas! how many sacrifice the comfort and salvation of their offspring at the shrine of Mammon! If they can procure rich husbands and wives for their daughters and sons, then all, in their apprehension, is well. Marriages of this kind may be considered as mere bargain and sale; the divine institution of marriage is left out of sight; and the persons are united, not properly to each other, in the love, fear, and according to the ordinance of God, but they are wedded to so many thousand pounds sterling, and to so many houses, fields, &c. Thus like goes to like, metal to metal, earth to earth. Marriages formed on such principles are mere licensed adulteries. Let such contractors hear these awful words of God: "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God?" James iv. 4.

Although under the patriarchal dispensation parents had a kind of absolute authority over their children, and might dispose of them as they pleased in general cases, yet it appears that in matrimonial connexions they were under no compulsion. Wilt thou go with this man? was, in all likelihood, deemed essential to the completion of the contract; and by the answer, I will go, was the contract fully ratified. Thus the persons were ultimately left to their own choice, though the most prudent and proper means were no doubt used in order to direct and fix it.

In all cases of this kind the child should invariably consult the experience and wisdom of the parents; and the parents should ever pay much respect to the feelings of the child, nor oppose an alliance which may be in all other respects suitable because there may be a lack of property on one side of the intended match. If parents would proceed in this way, God would pour his blessing on their seed, and his Spirit upon their offspring.

THEN again <sup>a</sup> Abraham took a wife, and her name was Keturah.

2 And <sup>b</sup> she bare him Zimran, and Jokshan, and Medan, and <sup>c</sup> Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah.

3 And Jokshan begat Sheba, and Dedan. And the sons of Dedan were Asshurim, and Letushim, and Leummim.

4 And the sons of Midian; Ephah, and Ephher, and Hanoah, and Abidah, and Eldaah. All these were the children of Keturah.

Verse 1. Then again Abraham took a wife] When we are not informed; it might have been in the lifetime of Sarah; and the original and he added, &c., seems to give some countenance to this opinion. Indeed it is not very likely that he had the children mentioned here after the death of Sarah; and from the circumstances of his age, feebleness, &c., at the birth of Isaac, it is very improbable that he had any child after the birth of Isaac; and therefore we may well suppose that Moses had related this transaction out of its chronological order. Perhaps we may be justified in reading the verse: "And Abraham had added, and had taken a wife (besides Hagar) whose name was Keturah," &c.

Verse 2. Zimran] Pliny mentions a people in Arabia Deserta called Zamarenians, who were probably the descendants of this person.

Jokshan] Several learned men have been of opinion that this Jokshan was the same as Kachtan, the father of the Arabs. [Though there are abundant conjectures as to the descendants of Abraham here named, there is no certainty as to their identity with any known tribe or locality.]

Verse 5. Gave all that he had unto Isaac.] His principal flocks, and especially his right to the land of Canaan, including a confirmation to him and his posterity of whatever was contained in the promises of God.

5 And <sup>d</sup> Abraham gave all that he had unto Isaac.

6 But unto the sons of the concubines, which Abraham had, Abraham gave gifts, and <sup>e</sup> sent them away from Isaac his son, while he yet lived, eastward, unto <sup>f</sup> the east country.

7 And these <sup>g</sup> are the days of the years of Abraham's life which he lived, an hundred threescore and fifteen years.

8 Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and <sup>h</sup> died in a good old age, an old man, and full of years; and <sup>i</sup> was gathered to his people.

Verse 6. Unto the sons of the concubines] Cattle for breed, seed to sow the land, and implements for husbandry, may be what is here intended.

And sent them away—while he yet lived] Lest after his death they should dispute a settlement in the Land of Promise with Isaac. From this circumstance arose that law which has prevailed in almost all countries, of giving the estates to the eldest son by a lawful wife; for though concubines, or wives of the second rank, were perfectly legitimate in those ancient times, yet their children did not inherit, except in case of the failure of legal issue, and with the consent of the lawful wife.

Eastward, unto the east country.] Arabia Deserta, which was eastward of Beer-sheba, where Abraham lived.

Verse 7. The days of the years, &c.] There is a beauty in this expression which is not sufficiently regarded. Good men do not live by centuries, though many such have lived several hundred years, nor do they count their lives even by years, but by days, living as if they were the creatures only of a day.

Verse 8. Then Abraham gave up the ghost] Highly as I value our translation for general accuracy, fidelity, and elegance, I must beg leave to dissent from this version. The original word signifies to pant for breath, to expire, to cease

9 And *his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the cave of Machpelah, in the field of Ephron the son of Zohar the Hittite, which is before Mamre;

10 <sup>b</sup>The field which Abraham purchased of the sons of Heth: <sup>c</sup>there was Abraham buried, and Sarah his wife.

11 And it came to pass after the death of Abraham, that God blessed his son Isaac; and Isaac dwelt by the <sup>d</sup>well Lahai-roi.

12 Now these are the generations of Ishmael, Abraham's son, <sup>e</sup>whom Hagar the Egyptian, Sarah's handmaid, bare unto Abraham:

13 And <sup>f</sup>these are the names of the sons of Ishmael, by their names, according to their generations; the firstborn of Ishmael, Nebajoth: and Kedar, and Adbeel, and Mibsam, from breathing, or to breathe one's last; and here, and wherever the original word is used, the simple term expired would be the proper expression. Now as our English word ghost, from the Anglo-Saxon gast, an inmate, inhabitant, guest (a casual visitant), also a spirit, is now restricted among us to the latter meaning, always signifying the immortal spirit or soul of man, the quest of the body; and as giving up the spirit, ghost, or soul, is an act not proper to man, though commending it to God, in our last moments, is both an act of faith and piety; and as giving up the ghost, i.e. dismissing his spirit from his body, is attributed to Jesus Christ, to whom alone it is proper inasmuch as being born immaculate, and having never sinned, he had not forfeited his life; I therefore object against its use in every other case.

An old man] Viz., one hundred and seventy-five, the youngest of all the patriarchs; and full of years. The word years is not in the text; but as our translators saw that some word was necessary to fill up the text, they added this in italics. It is probable that the true word is yamin, days, as in Gen. xxxv. 29; and this reading is found in several MSS. and Versions.

Being full of days, or full of years]—To be satiated with days or life, has been in use among different nations to express the termination of life, and especially life ended without reluctance. It seems to be a metaphor taken from a guest regaled by a plentiful banquet, and is thus used by the Roman poets.

It was the opinion of Aristotle that a man should depart from life as he should rise from a banquet. Thus Abraham died FULL of days, and SATISFIED with life, but in a widely different spirit from that recommended by pagan writers—HE left life with a hope full of immortality, which they could never boast; for HE saw the day of Christ, and was glad; and his hope was crowned, for here it is expressly said, HE was gathered to his fathers; surely not to the bodies of his sleeping ancestors, who were buried in Chaldaea and not in Canaan, nor with his fathers in any sense, for he was deposited in the cave where his wife alone slept; but he was gathered to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to the church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven.

Verse 9. His sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him] Though Ishmael and his mother had been expelled from Abraham's family on the account of Isaac, yet, they agreed to join in doing the last offices to a parent who was an honour to them and to human nature: and, considering the rejection of Ishmael from the inheritance, this transaction shows his character in an amiable point of view.

Verse 11. God blessed his son Isaac] The peculiar blessings and influences by which Abraham had been distinguished now rested upon Isaac; but how little do we hear in him of the work of faith, the patience of hope, and the labour of love!

Verse 12. These are the generations of Ishmael] The object of the inspired writer seems to be to show how the promises of God were fulfilled to both the branches of Abraham's family.

Verse 13. Nebajoth] From whom came the Nabatheans, who dwelt in Arabia Petrea, and extended themselves on the east towards Arabia Deserta.

14 And Mishma, and Dumah, and Massa,
15 <sup>a</sup>Hadad, and Tema, Jetur, Naphish, and Kedemah:

17 And these are the years of the life of Ishmael, an hundred and thirty and seven years: and <sup>c</sup>he gave up the ghost and died; and was gathered unto his people.

18 <sup>d</sup>And they dwelt from Havilah unto Shur, that is before Egypt, as thou goest toward Assyria: and he <sup>e</sup>died <sup>f</sup>in the presence of all his brethren.

19 And these are the generations of Isaac, Abraham's son: <sup>g</sup>Abraham begat Isaac;

Kedar] The founder of the Cedreans, who dwelt near to the Nabatheans. The descendants of Kedar form a part of the Saracens. [There is yet, in the north of Hadjaz, a town called Kedeyre.]

Adbeel and Mibsam] Where these were situated is not known.

Verse 14. Mishma, and Dumah, and Massa] Where the first and last of these settled is not known; but it is probable that Dumah gave his name to a place called Dumah in Arabia.

These three names have passed into a proverb among the Hebrews because of their signification. Mishma signifies HEARING; dumah, SILENCE; and massa, PATIENCE. Hence "Hear much, say little, and bear much;" tantamount to the famous maxim of the Stoics, "Sustain and Abstain."

Verse 15. Hadar] This name should be read Hadad, as in 1 Chron. i. 30.

Tema] Supposed to be a place in Arabia Deserta, the same of which Job speaks, chap. vi. 19.

Jetur] From whom came the Itureans, who occupied a small tract of country beyond Jordan, which was afterwards possessed by the half-tribe of Manasseh.

Naphish] These are evidently the same people mentioned 1 Chron. v. 19, who, with the Itureans and the people of Nadab, assisted the Hagarenes against the Israelites, but were overcome by the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh.

Kedemah] Probably the descendants of this person dwelt at Kedemoth, a place mentioned Deut. ii. 26.

Verse 16. These are their names] By which their descendants were called. Their towns—places of encampment in the wilderness, such as have been used by the Arabs from the remotest times. Their castles, their towers, probably mountain-tops, fortified rocks, and fastnesses of various kinds in woods and hilly countries.

Verse 18. They dwelt from Havilah unto Shur] The descendants of Ishmael possessed all that country which extends from east to west, from Havilah on the Euphrates, near its junction with the Tigris, to the desert of Shur eastward of Egypt; and which extends along the Isthmus of Suez, which separates the Red Sea from the Mediterranean.

He died in the presence of all his brethren.] The original will not well bear this translation. In ver. 17 it is said, He gave up the ghost and died, and was gathered to his people. Then follows the account of the district occupied by the Ishmaelites, at the conclusion of which it is added, "In (the lot or district) FELL (or was divided to him) in the presence of all his brethren:" and this was exactly agreeable to the promise of God, chap. xvi. 12, He shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren; and to show that this promise had been strictly fulfilled, it is here remarked that his lot, or inheritance, was assigned him by Divine Providence, contiguous to that of the other branches of the family.

Verse 19. These are the generations of Isaac] This is the history of Isaac and his family. Here the sixth section of the law begins, called toledoth Yitshak; as the fifth called chaitz Sarah, which begins with chapter xxiii., ends at the preceding verse.

Rebekah to wife, 'the daughter of Bethuel the Syrian, of Padan-aram, 'the sister to Laban the Syrian.

21 And Isaac entreated the LORD for his wife, because she was barren : 'and the LORD was intreated of him, and 'Rebekah his wife conceived.

22 And the children struggled together within her; and she said, If it be so, why am I thus? 'And she went to inquire of the LORD.

23 And the LORD said unto her, 'Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels: and 'the one people shall be stronger than the other people; and 'the elder shall serve the younger.

24 And when her days to be delivered were fulfilled, behold, there were twins in her womb.

Verse 21. Isaac entreated the Lord for his wife] Isaac and Rebekah had now lived nineteen years together without having a child.

The form of the original in this place is worthy of notice: Isaac entreated Jehovah directly, purposely, especially, for his wife. Ainsworth thinks the words imply their praying together for this thing; and the rabbins say that "Isaac and Rebekah went on purpose to Mount Moriah, where he had been bound, and prayed together there that they might have a son." God was pleased to exercise the faith of Isaac previous to the birth of Jacob, as he had exercised that of Abraham previous to his own birth.

Verse 22. The children struggled together] So that the mother was apprehensive both of her own and her children's safety; and, supposing this was an uncommon case, she went to inquire of the Lord, as the good women in the present day would go to consult a surgeon or physician; for intercourse with God is not so common now, as it was in those times of great primitive simplicity. There are different opinions concerning the manner in which Rebekah inquired of the Lord. Some think it was by faith and prayer simply; others, that she went to Shem or Melchizedek; but Shem is supposed to have been dead ten years before this time; but as Abraham was yet alive, she might have gone to him, and consulted the Lord through his means. It is most likely that a prophet or priest was applied to on this occasion. It appears she was in considerable perplexity, hence that imperfect speech, If so, why am I thus? the simple meaning of which is probably this: If I must suffer such things, why did I ever wish to have a child?

Verse 23. Two nations are in thy womb] The Edomites and Israelites have been from the beginning two such different people in their manners, customs, and religion, as to be at perpetual variance among themselves. The children struggled together in the womb, which was an omen of their future disagreement; and when they grew up to manhood, they manifested very different inclinations. The religion of the Jews is well known; but whatever the Edomites were at first, in process of time they became idolaters.

For some time the family of Esau was the more powerful of the two, there having been dukes and kings in Edom before there was any king in Israel; but David and his captains made an entire conquest of the Edomites, slew several thousands of them, and compelled the rest to become tributaries, and planted garrisons among them to secure their obedience. In this state of servitude they continued about one hundred and fifty years, without a king of their own, being governed by deputies or viceroys appointed by the kings of Judah; but in the days of Jehoram they revolted, recovered their liberties, and set up a king of their own. Afterwards Amaziah, king of Judah, gave them a total overthrow in the valley of Salt; and Azariah took Elath, a commodious harbour on the Red Sea, from them. Judas Maccabeus also attacked and defeated them with the loss of more than twenty thousand at two different times, and took their chief city Hebron. At last Hyrcanus his nephew took other cities from them, and reduced them to the necessity of leaving their country, or embracing the 26 And after that came his brother out, and 'his hand took hold on Esau's heel; and 'his name was called Jacob: and Isaac was threescore years old when she bare them.

27 And the boys grew: and Esau was 'a cunning hunter, a man of the field; and Jacob was 'a plain man, "dwelling in tents.

28 And Isaac loved Esau, because 'he did 'eat of his venison: 'but Rebekah loved Jacob.

29 And Jacob sod pottage: and Esau came from the field, and he was faint.

30 And Esau said to Jacob, Feed me, I pray thee, 'with that same red pottage: for I am faint: therefore was his name called 'Edom.

Jewish religion; on which they submitted to be circumcised and became proselytes to the Jewish religion, and were ever after incorporated into the Jewish church and nation. Bishop Newton.

The elder shall serve the younger.] The doctrine of unconditional predestination to eternal life and eternal death cannot be supported by the example of God's dealings with Esau and Jacob, or with the Edomites and Israelites. After long reprobation the Edomites were incorporated among the Jews, and have ever since been undistinguishable members in the Jewish church. The Jews, on the contrary, the elect of God, have been cut off and reprobated, and continue so to this day. If a time should ever come when the Jews shall all believe in Christ Jesus, which is a general opinion, then the Edomites which are now absorbed among them shall also become the elect. And even now Isaac finds both his children within the pale of the Jewish church, equally entitled to the promises of salvation by Christ Jesus, of whom he was the most expressive and the most illustrious type.

Verse 24. There were twins] Thomim, from which comes Thomas, which signifies a twin.

Verse 25. Red, all over like an hairy garment] This simply means that he was covered all over with red hair or down; and that this must be intended here is sufficiently evident from another part of his history, where Rebekah, in order to make her favourite son Jacob pass for his brother Esau, was obliged to take the skins of kids, and put them upon his hands and on the smooth part of his neck.

They called his name Esau.] It is difficult to assign the proper meaning of the original esau or esav; if we derive it from asah it must signify made, performed, and, according to some, perfected. Probably he had this name from his appearing to be more perfect, robust, &c., than his brother.

Verse 26. His name was called Jacob] Yaacob, from akab, to defraud, deceive, to supplant, i.e. to overthrow a person by tripping up his heels. Hence this name was given to Jacob, because it was found he had laid hold on his brother's heel, which was emblematical of his supplanting Esau, and defrauding him of his birth-right.

Verse 27. A man of the field] One who supported himself and family by hunting and by agriculture.

Jacob was a plain man] A perfect or upright man; dwelling in tents—subsisting by breeding and tending cattle, which was considered in those early times the most perfect employment; and in this sense the original word should be here understood, as in its moral meaning it certainly could not be applied to Jacob till after his name was changed, after which time only his character stands fair and unblemished.

Verse 28. Isaac loved Esau—but Rebekah loved Jacob.] This is an early proof of unwarrantable parental attachment to one child in preference to another. The fruits of this unreasonable and foolish attachment were afterwards seen in a long catalogue of both natural and moral evils, among the descendants of both families.

Verse 29. Sod pottage] Yased nasid, he boiled a boiling; and this we are informed, ver. 34, was of adashim—lentiles, a sort of pulse.

Verse 30. I am faint] He had been either hunting or 31 And Jacob said, Sell me this day thy birth-right.

32 And Esau said, Behold, I am <sup>a</sup>at the point to die; and what profit shall this birth-right do to me?

33 And Jacob said, Swear to me this day; and labouring in the field, and was now returning for the purpose of getting some food, but had been so exhausted that his strength utterly failed before he had time to make the necessary preparations.

Verse 31. Sell me this day thy birth-right.] It is generally supposed that the following rights were attached to the primogeniture: 1. Authority and superiority over the rest of the family. 2. A double portion of the paternal inheritance. 3. The peculiar benediction of the father. 4. The priesthood, previous to its establishment in the family of Aaron. However this may be, it appears, 1. That the first-born were peculiarly consecrated to God, Exod. xxii. 29. 2. Were next in honour to their parents, Gen. xlix. 8. 3. Had a double portion of their father's goods, Deut. xxi. 17. 4. Succeeded him in the government of the family or kingdom. 2 Chron. xxi. 3. 5. Had the sole right of conducting the service of God, both at the tabernacle and temple; and hence the tribe of Levi, which was taken in lieu of the first-born, had the sole right of administration in the service of God, Numb. viii. 14-18; and hence, we may presume, had originally a right to the priesthood previous to the giving of the law; but however this might have been, afterwards the priesthood is never reckoned among the privileges of the first-born.

That the birth-right was a matter of very great importance, there can be no room to doubt; and that it was a transferable property, the transaction here sufficiently proves.

Verse 34. Thus Esau despised his birth-right.] On this account the apostle, Heb. xii. 16, calls Esau a profane person, because he had, by this act, alienated from himself and family those spiritual offices connected with the rights of primogeniture. While we condemn Esau for this bad action, what shall we say of his most unnatural brother Jacob, who refused to let him have a morsel of food to preserve him from death, unless he gave him up his birth-right? Surely he who bought it, in such circumstances, was as bad as he who sold it. Thus Jacob verified his right to the name of supplanter, a name which in its first imposition appears to have had no other object in view than the circumstance of his catching his brother by the heel; but all his subsequent conduct proved that it was truly descriptive of the qualities of his mind, as his whole life, till the time his name was changed (and then he had a change of nature), was a tissue of cunning and deception, the principles of which had been very early instilled he swore unto him: and <sup>b</sup>he sold his birth-right unto Jacob.

34 Then Jacob gave Esau bread and pottage of lentiles; and <sup>c</sup>he did eat and drink, and rose up, and went his way: thus Esau despised his birth-right.

into him by a mother whose regard for truth and righteousness appears to have been very superficial.

The death of Abraham, recorded in this chapter, naturally calls to mind the virtue and excellence of this extraordinary man. His obedience to the call of God and faith in his promises stand supereminent. No wonders, signs, or miraculous displays of the great and terrible God, as Israel required in Egypt, were used or were necessary to cause Abraham to believe and obey. The authority of God was always sufficient for Abraham; he did not weary himself to find reasons for any line of conduct which he knew God had prescribed; it was his duty to obey; the success and event he left with God. His obedience was as prompt as it was complete. As soon as he hears the voice of God, he girds himself to his work! Not a moment is lost! How rare is such conduct! But should not we do likewise? The present moment and its duties are ours; every past moment was once present; every future will be present; and, while we are thinking on the subject, the present is past, for life is made up of the past and the present. Are our past moments the cause of deep regret and humiliation? Then let us use the present so as not to increase this lamentable cause of our distresses. In other words, let us now believe—love—obey. Regardless of all consequences, let us, like Abraham, follow the divertions of God's word, and the openings of his providence, and leave all events to Him who doth all things well.

Abraham walked before God, and Abraham was perfect. Perhaps no human being ever exhibited a fairer, fuller portrait of the perfect man than Abraham.

As a son, as a husband, as a father, as a neighbour, as a sovereign, and above all as a man of God, he stands unrivalled; so that under the most exalted and perfect of all dispensations, the gospel of Jesus Christ, he is proposed and recommended as the model and pattern according to which the faith, obedience, and perseverance of the followers of the Messiah are to be formed. Reader, while you admire the man, do not forget the God that made him so great, so good, and so useful. Even Abraham had nothing but what he had received; from the free unmerited mercy of God proceeded all his excellences; but he was a worker together with God, and therefore did not receive the grace of God in vain. Go thou, believe, love, obey, and persevere, in like manner.

CHAPTER XXVI.

A famine in the land obliges Isaac to leave Beer-sheba and go to Gerar, 1. God appears to him, and warns him not to go to Egypt, 2. Renews the promises to him which he had made to his father Abraham, 3-5. Isaac dwells at Gerar, 6. Being questioned concerning Rebekah, and fearing to lose his life on her account, he calls her his sister, 7. Abimelech the king discovers, by certain familiarities which he had noticed between Isaac and Rebekah, that she was his wife, 8. Calls Isaac, and reproaches him for his insincerity, 9, 10. He gives a strict command to all his people not to molest either Isaac or his wife, 11. Isaac applies himself to husbandry and breeding of cattle, and has a great increase, 12-14. Is envied by the Philistines, who stop up the wells he had dugged, 15. Is desired by Abimelech to remove, 16. He obeys, and fixes his tent in the valley of Gerar, 17. Opens the wells dug in the days of Abraham, which the Philistines had stopped up, 18. Digs the well Esek, 19, 20; and the well Sitnah, 21; and the well Rehoboth, 22. Returns to Beer-sheba, 23. God appears to him, and renews his promises, 24. He builds an altar there, pitches his tent, and digs a well, 25. Abimelech, Ahuzzath, and Phichol, visit him, 26. Isaac accuses them of unkindness, 27. They beg him to make a covenant with them, 28, 29. He makes them a feast, and they bind themselves to each other by an oath, 30, 31. The well dug by Isaac's servants (ver. 25) called Shebah, 33. Esau, at forty years of age, marries two wives of the Hittites, 34; at which Isaac and Rebekah are grieved, 35.

AND there was a famine in the land, beside <sup>a</sup>the first famine that was in the days of Abraham. And Isaac went unto <sup>b</sup>Abimelech, king of the Philistines, unto Gerar.

2 And the LORD appeared unto him, and said, Go not down into Egypt; dwell in <sup>c</sup>the land which I shall tell thee of:

3 <sup>d</sup>Sojourn in this land, and <sup>e</sup>I will be with thee, and <sup>f</sup>will bless thee; for unto thee, and unto thy seed, <sup>g</sup>I will give all these countries; and I will perform <sup>h</sup>the oath which I swore unto Abraham thy father:

4 And <sup>i</sup>I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries; <sup>j</sup>and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed;

5 <sup>k</sup>Because that Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws.

6 And Isaac dwelt in Gerar.

7 And the men of the place asked him of his wife; and <sup>l</sup>he said, She is my sister: for <sup>m</sup>he feared to say, She is my wife; lest, said he, the men of the place should kill me for Rebekah; because she <sup>n</sup>was fair to look upon.

8 And it came to pass, when he had been there a long time, that Abimelech king of the Philistines looked out at a window, and saw, and behold, Isaac was sporting with Rebekah his wife.

9 And Abimelech called Isaac, and said, Behold, of a surety she is thy wife; and how saidst thou, She is my sister? And Isaac said unto him, Because I said, Lest I die for her.

10 And Abimelech said, what is this thou hast done unto us? <sup>o</sup>One of the people might lightly have lien with thy wife, and <sup>p</sup>thou shouldest have brought guiltiness upon us.

11 And Abimelech charged all his people, saying, He that <sup>q</sup>toucheth this man or his wife shall surely be put to death.

12 Then Isaac sowed in that land, and <sup>r</sup>received in the same year <sup>s</sup>an hundredfold: and the LORD <sup>t</sup>blessed him:

13 And the man <sup>u</sup>waxed great, and <sup>v</sup>went forward, and grew until he became very great;

14 For he had possession of flocks, and possession of herds, and great store of <sup>w</sup>servants: and the Philistines <sup>x</sup>envied him.

15 For all the wells <sup>y</sup>which his father's servants had digged in the days of Abraham his father, the Philistines had stopped them, and filled them with earth.

16 And Abimelech said unto Isaac, Go from us; for <sup>z</sup>thou art much mightier than we.

Verse 1. There was a famine] When this happened we cannot tell; it appears to have been after the death of Abraham.

Abimelech] As we know not the time when the famine happened, so we cannot tell whether this was the same Abimelech, Phicol, &c., which are mentioned chap. xx. 1, &c., or the sons or other descendants of those persons.

Verse 2. Go not down into Egypt] As Abraham had taken refuge in that country, it is probable that Isaac was preparing to go thither also; and God, foreseeing that he would there meet with trials, &c., which might prove fatal to his peace or to his piety, warns him not to fulfil his intention.

Verse 3. Sojourn in this land] In Gerar, whither he had gone, ver. 1, and where we find he settled, ver. 6, though the land of Canaan in general might be here intended. While a man acknowledges God in all his ways, he will direct all his steps, though he may not choose to give him the reasons of the workings of his providence. Abraham might go safely to Egypt, Isaac might not; in firmness and decision of character there was a wide difference between the two men.

Verse 4. I will make thy seed—as the stars of heaven] A promise often repeated to Abraham, and which has been most amply fulfilled both in its literal and spiritual sense.

Verse 5. My charge] The ordinances or appointments of God were always of two kinds: 1. Such as tended to promote moral improvement, the increase of piety, the improvement of the age, &c. And, 2. Such as were typical of the promised seed and the salvation which was to come by him.

Verse 7. He said, She is my sister] It is very strange that in the same place, and in similar circumstances, Isaac should have denied his wife, precisely as his father had done before him! It is natural to ask, Did Abraham never mention this circumstance to his son? Probably he did not; the son therefore, not being forewarned, was not armed against the temptation. It may not be well in general for parents to tell their children of their former failings or vices; but there are certain cases which, from the nature of their circumstances, may often occur, where a candid acknowledgment, with suitable advice, may prevent those children from repeating the evil; but this should be done with great delicacy and caution, lest even the advice itself should serve as an incentive to the evil. Isaac could not say of Rebekah as Abraham had done of Sarah, she is my sister: in the case of Abraham this was literally true; it was not so in the case of Isaac, for Rebekah was only his cousin. Besides, though relatives, in the Jewish forms of speaking, are often called brothers and sisters, and the thing may be perfectly proper when this use of the terms is generally known and allowed, yet nothing of this kind can be pleaded here in behalf of Isaac; for he intended that the Gerarites should understand him in the proper sense of the term, and consequently have no suspicion that she was his wife. We have already seen that the proper definition of a lie is any word spoken with the intention to deceive.

Verse 8. Isaac was sporting with Rebekah his wife] Whatever may be the precise meaning of the word, it evidently implies that there were liberties taken and freedoms used on the occasion, which were not lawful but between man and wife.

Verse 10. Thou shouldest have brought guiltiness upon us] It is likely that Abimelech might have had some knowledge of God's intentions concerning the family of Abraham, and that it must be kept free from all impure and alien mixtures; and that consequently, had he or any of his people taken Rebekah, the divine judgments might have fallen upon the land. Abimelech was a good and holy man; and he appears to have considered adultery as a grievous and destructive crime.

Verse 11. He that toucheth] Death was the punishment for adultery among the Canaanites, Philistines, and Hebrews.

Verse 12. Isaac sowed in that land] Being now perfectly free from the fear of evil, he betakes himself to agricultural and pastoral pursuits, in which he has the especial blessing of God, so that his property becomes greatly increased.

An hundredfold] The words, however, may be taken in a general way, as signifying a very great increase; so they are used by our Lord in the parable of the sower.

Verse 13. The man waxed great] There is a strange and observable recurrence of the same term in the original: And the man was GREAT; and he went, going on, and was GREAT, until that he was exceeding GREAT. How simple is this language, and yet how forcible!

Verse 15. For all the wells—the Philistines had stopped them] In predatory wars it was usual for either party to fill the wells with earth or sand, in order to distress the enemy. The filling up the wells in this case was the most unprincipled transaction, as they had pledged themselves to Abraham, by a solemn oath, not to injure each other in this or any other respect.

Verse 16. Go from us; for thou art much mightier than 17 And Isaac departed thence, and pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar, and dwelt there.

18 And Isaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father; for the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham: *and he called their names after the names by which his father had called them.

19 And Isaac's servants digged in the valley, and found there a well of <sup>b</sup>springing water.

20 And the herdmen of Gerar <sup>c</sup>did strive with Isaac's herdmen, saying, The water is ours: and he called the name of the well <sup>d</sup>Esek; because they strove with him.

21 And they digged another well, and strove for that also: and he called the name of it <sup>e</sup>Sitnah.

22 And he removed from thence, and digged another well; and for that they strove not: and he called the name of it <sup>f</sup>Rehoboth; and he said, For now the LORD hath made room for us and we shall <sup>g</sup>be fruitful in the land.

23 And he went up from thence to Beer-sheba.

24 And the LORD appeared unto him the same night, and said, <sup>h</sup>I am the God of Abraham thy father: <sup>i</sup>fear not, for <sup>j</sup>I am with thee, and will bless thee, and multiply thy seed for my servant Abraham's sake.

we.] This is the first instance on record of what was termed among the Greeks ostracism; i.e. the banishment of a person from the state, of whose power, influence, or riches, the people were jealous. The Philistines appear to have been jealous of Isaac's growing prosperity; therefore they compelled Abimelech to dismiss him, who gave this reason for it, Thou hast obtained much wealth among us, and my people are envious of thee. Is not this the better translation? for it can hardly be supposed that Isaac was "mightier" than the king of whole tribes.

Verse 19. A well of springing water.] A well of living waters. This is the oriental phrase for a spring, and this is its meaning both in the Old and New Testaments. And an unfailing spring was an emblem of the graces and influences of the Spirit of God.

Verse 21. They digged another well] Never did any man more implicitly follow the divine command, Resist not evil, than Isaac; whenever he found that his work was likely to be a subject of strife and contention, he gave place, and rather chose to suffer wrong than to have his own peace of mind disturbed. Thus he overcame evil with good.

Verse 24. The Lord appeared unto him] He needed especial encouragement when insulted and outraged by the Philistines; for, having returned to the place where his noble father had lately died, the remembrance of his wrongs, and the remembrance of his loss, could not fail to afflict his mind.

Verse 25. Builded an altar there] That he might have a place for God's worship, as well as a place for himself and family to dwell in.

Verse 26. Abimelech went to him] When a man's ways please God, he makes even his enemies to be at peace with him; so Isaac experienced on this occasion.

Ahuzzath] The Targum translates this word a company, not considering it as a proper name: "Abimelech and Phichol came with a company of their friends." [More probably the noun is a proper name, and refers to the chief counsellor of Abimelech.]

Verse 27. Seeing ye hate me] He was justified in thinking thus, because, if they did not injure him, they had convinced at their servants doing it.

26 Then Abimelech went to him from Gerar, and Ahuzzath one of his friends, <sup>m</sup>and Phichol the chief captain of his army.

27 And Isaac said unto them, Wherefore come ye to me, seeing <sup>n</sup>ye hate me, and have <sup>o</sup>sent me away from you?

28 And they said, <sup>p</sup>We saw certainly that the LORD <sup>q</sup>was with thee: and we said, Let there be now an oath betwixt us, even bewixt us and thee, and let us make a covenant with thee;

29 <sup>r</sup>That thou wilt do us no hurt, as we have not touched thee, and as we have done unto thee nothing but good, and have sent thee away in peace: <sup>s</sup>thou art now the blessed of the LORD.

30 <sup>t</sup>And he made them a feast, and they did eat and drink.

31 And they rose up betimes in the morning, and <sup>u</sup>swore one to another: and Isaac sent them away, and they departed from him in peace.

32 And it came to pass the same day, that Isaac's servants came, and told him concerning the well which they had digged, and said unto him, We have found water.

33 And he called it <sup>v</sup>Shebah: <sup>w</sup>therefore the name of the city <sup>x</sup>is Beer-sheba unto this day.

34 <sup>y</sup>And Esau was forty years old when he took to wife Judith the daughter of Beeri the Hittite, and Bashemath the daughter of Elon the Hittite;

35 Which <sup>z</sup>were <sup>aa</sup>a grief of mind unto Isaac and to Rebekah.

Verse 28. Let there be now an oath betwixt us] Let us make a covenant, by which we shall be mutually bound, and let it be ratified in the most solemn manner.

Verse 30. He made them a feast] Probably on the sacrifice that was offered on the occasion of making this covenant.

Verse 31. They rose up betimes] Early rising was general among the primitive inhabitants of the world, and this was one cause which contributed greatly to their health and longevity.

Verse 33. He called it Shebah] This was probably the same well which was called Beer-sheba in the time of Abraham, which the Philistines had filled up, and which the servants of Isaac had re-opened. The same name is therefore given to it which it had before, with the addition of the emphatic letter h, by which its signification became extended, so that now it signified not merely an oath or full, but satisfaction and abundance.

Verse 34. He took to wife—the daughter, &c.] It is very likely that the wives taken by Esau were daughters of chiefs among the Hittites, and by this union he sought to increase and strengthen his secular power and influence.

Verse 35. Which were a grief of mind] Not the marriage, though that was improper, but the persons; they, by their perverse and evil ways, brought bitterness into the hearts of Isaac and Rebekah.

1. A good man has a right to expect God's blessing on his honest industry. Isaac sowed, and received a hundred-fold, and he had possession of flocks, &c., for the Lord blessed him. Worldly men, if they pray at all, ask for temporal things. Religious people go into another extreme; they forget the body, and ask only for the soul! and yet there are "things requisite and necessary as well for the body as the soul," and things which are only at God's disposal. Ye have not because ye ask not, may be said to many poor, afflicted religious people; and they are afraid to ask lest it should appear mercenary, or that they sought their portion in this life. They should be better taught. Surely to none of these will God give a stone if they ask bread; he who is so liberal of his heavenly blessings will not withhold earthly ones. Reader, expect God's blessing on thy honest industry; pray for it, and believe that God does not love thee less, who hast taken refuge in the same hope, than he loved Isaac. Be diligent in business, and fervent in spirit, and God will withhold from thee no manner of thing that is good.

2. From many examples we find that the wealth of the primitive inhabitants of the world did not consist in gold, silver, or precious stones, but principally in flocks of useful cattle, and the produce of the field. Commerce, by which nations and individuals so suddenly rise, and as suddenly fall, had not been then invented; every man was obliged to acquire property by honest and persevering labour, or be destitute. Lucky hits, fortunate speculations, and adventurous risks, could then have no place; the field must be tilled, the herds watched and fed, and the proper seasons for ploughing, sowing, reaping, and laying up, be carefully regarded and improved. No man, therefore, could grow rich by accident. Speculation was of no use, for it could have no object; and consequently many incitements to knavery, and to idleness, could not show themselves. Happy times! when every man wrought with his hands, and God particularly blessed his honest industry. As he had no luxuries, he had no unnatural and fictitious wants; few diseases, and a long life.

But has not what is termed commerce produced the reverse of all this? Bad as the world and the times are, men have made them much worse by their unnatural methods of providing for the support of life. When shall men learn that even this is but a subordinate pursuit; and that the cultivation of the soul in the knowledge, love, and obedience of God is essentially necessary, not only to future glory, but to present happiness?

CHAPTER XXVII.

Isaac, grown old and feeble, and apprehending the approach of death, desires his son Esau to provide some savoury meat for him, that having eaten of it he might convey to him the blessing connected with the right of primogeniture, 1-4. Rebekah, hearing of it, relates the matter to Jacob, and directs him how to personate his brother, and, by deceiving his father, obtain the blessing, 5-10. Jacob hesitates, 11, 12; but being counselled and encouraged by his mother, he at last consents to use the means she prescribed, 13, 14. Rebekah disguises Jacob, and sends him to personate his brother, 15-17. Jacob comes to his father, and professes himself to be Esau, 18, 19. Isaac doubts, questions, and examines him closely, but does not discover the deception, 20-24. He eats of the savoury meal, and confers the blessing upon Jacob, 25-27. In what the blessing consisted, 28, 29. Esau arrives from the field with the meat he had gone to provide, and presents himself before his father, 30, 31. Isaac discovers the fraud of Jacob, and is much affected, 32, 33. Esau is greatly distressed on hearing that the blessing had been received by another, 34. Isaac accuses Jacob of deceit, 35. Esau expostulates, and prays for a blessing, 36. Isaac describes the blessing which he has already conveyed, 37. Esau weeps, and earnestly implores a blessing, 38. Isaac pronounces a blessing on Esau, and prophesies that his posterity should, in process of time, cease to be tributary to the posterity of Jacob, 39, 40. Esau purposes to kill his brother, 41. Rebekah hears of it, and counsels Jacob to take refuge with her brother Laban in Padan-aram, 42-45. She professes to be greatly alarmed, lest Jacob should take any of the Canaanites to wife, 46.

AND it came to pass, that when Isaac was old, and his eyes were dim, so that he could not see, he called Esau his eldest son, and said unto him, My son: and he said unto him, Behold, here am I.

2 And he said, Behold now, I am old, I know not the day of my death:

3 Now therefore take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver and thy bow, and go out to the field, and take me some venison;

4 And make me savoury meat, such as I love, and bring it to me, that I may eat; that my soul may bless thee before I die.

5 And Rebekah heard when Isaac spake to Esau his son. And Esau went to the field to hunt for venison, and to bring it.

6 And Rebekah spake unto Jacob her son, saying, Behold, I heard thy father speak unto Esau thy brother, saying,

7 Bring me venison, and make me savoury meat, that I may eat, and bless thee before the LORD, before my death.

Deut. xxxiii. 1.

Verse 1. Isaac was old] It is conjectured on good grounds that Isaac was now about one hundred and seventeen years of age, and Jacob about fifty-seven. [Later criticism makes him one hundred and thirty-seven.]

And his eyes were dim] This was probably the effect of that affliction, of what kind we know not, under which Isaac now laboured; and from which, as well as from the affliction, he probably recovered, as it is certain he lived forty if not forty-three years after this time, for he lived till the return of Jacob from Padan-aram.

Verse 2. I know not the day of my death] From his present weakness he had reason to suppose that his death could not be at any great distance, and therefore would leave no act undone which he believed it his duty to perform. He who lives not in reference to eternity, lives not at all.

Verse 3. Thy weapons] The original word keley signifies vessels and instruments of any kind; and is probably used here for a hunting-spear, javelin, sword, &c.

Verse 4. Savoury meat] From taam, to taste, or relish; how drossed we know not, but its name declares its nature.

That I may eat] The blessing which Isaac was to confer on his son was a species of divine right, and must be communicated with appropriate ceremonies. When we consider, 1. That no covenant was deemed binding unless the parties had eaten together; 2. That to convey this blessing some rite of this kind was necessary; and 3. That Isaac's strength was now greatly exhausted, insomuch that he supposed himself to be dying; we shall at once see why meat was required on this occasion, and why that meat was to be prepared so as to deserve the epithet of savoury.

Verse 5. And Rebekah heard] And was determined, if possible, to frustrate the design of Isaac, and procure the blessing for her favourite son. Some pretend that she received a divine inspiration to this purpose; but if she had she needed not to have recourse to deceit, to help forward the accomplishment. Isaac, on being informed, would have had too much piety not to prefer the will of his Maker to his 8 Now therefore, my son, "obey my voice according to that which I command thee.

12 My father peradventure will "feel me, and I shall seem to him as a deceiver; and I shall bring 'a curse upon me, and not a blessing.

13 And his mother said unto him, "Upon me be thy curse, my son: only obey my voice, and go fetch me them.

15 And Rebekah took 'goodly raiment of her eldest son Esau<sup>d</sup>, which were with her in the house, and put them upon Jacob her younger son:

16 And she put the skins of the kids of the goats upon his hands, and upon the smooth of his neck:

17 And she gave the savoury meat and the bread, which she had prepared, into the hand of her son Jacob.

18 And he came unto his father, and said, My father: and he said, Here am I: who art thou, my son?

19 And Jacob said unto his father, I am Esau thy first-born; I have done according as thou badest me: arise, I pray thee, sit and eat of my venison, <sup>k</sup> that thy soul may bless me.

20 And Isaac said unto his son, How is it that thou hast found it so quickly, my son? And he said, Because the LORD thy God brought it <sup>l</sup> to me.

21 And Isaac said unto Jacob, Come near, I pray thee, that I "may feel thee, my son, whether thou be my very son Esau or not.

22 And Jacob went near unto Isaac his father; and he felt him, and said, The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau.

23 And he discerned him not, because "his hands were hairy, as his brother Esau's hands: so he blessed him.

24 And he said, Art thou my very son Esau? And he said, I am.

25 And he said, Bring it near to me, and I will eat of my son's venison, "that my soul may bless thee. And he brought it near to him, and he did eat: and he brought him wine, and he drank.

26 And his father Isaac said unto him, Come near now, and kiss me, my son.

27 And he came near, and kissed him: and he smelled the smell of his raiment, and blessed him, and said, See, "the smell of my son is as the smell of a field which the LORD hath blessed:

29 "Let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee; be lord over thy brethren, and "let thy mother's sons bow down to thee: "cursed be every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that bleseth thee.

30 And it came to pass as soon as Isaac had made an end of blessing Jacob, and Jacob was yet scarce gone out from the presence of Isaac his father, that Esau his brother came in from his hunting.

31 And he also had made savoury meat, and own partiality for his eldest son; but Rebekah had nothing of the kind to plead, and therefore had recourse to the most exceptionable means to accomplish her ends.

Verse 12. I shall bring a curse upon me] For even in those early times the spirit of that law was understood, Deut. xxvii. 18: Cursed is he that maketh the blind to wander out of the way; and Jacob seems to have possessed at this time a more tender conscience than his mother.

Verse 13. Upon me be thy curse, my son] What a dreadful responsibility did this woman take upon her at this time! The sacred writer states the facts as they were, and we may depend on the truth of the statement; but he no where says that God would have any man to copy this conduct.

Verse 15. Goodly raiment] Mr. Ainsworth has a sensible note on this place. "The priest in the law had holy garments to minister in, Exod. xxviii. 2-4. Whether the first-born, before the law, had such to minister in is not certain, but it is probable by this example; for had they been common garments, why did not Esau himself, or his wives, keep them? But being, in all likelihood, holy robes, received from their ancestors, the mother of the family kept them in sweet chests from moths and the like, whereupon it is said, ver. 27, Isaac smelled the smell of his garments." [The text does not warrant this opinion.]

Verse 10. I am Esau thy first-born] Jacob imposes on his father in three different ways—by his words, by his actions, and by his clothing. Men have laboured, not only to excuse all this conduct of Rebekah and Jacob, but even to show that it was consistent, and that the whole was according to the mind and will of God! The cause of God and truth is under no obligation to such defenders; their hands are more unhallowed than those of Uzzah; and, however the bearers may stumble, the ark of God requires not their support. It was the design of God that the elder should serve the younger, and he would have brought it about in the way of his own wise and just providence; but means such as here used he could neither sanction nor recommend.

Verse 23. And he discerned him not, because his hands were hairy] From this circumstance we may learn that Isaac's sense of feeling was much impaired by his present malady.

Verse 27. The smell of my son is as the smell of a field] The smell of these garments was probably occasioned by some aromatic herbs, which we may naturally suppose were laid up with the clothes—a custom which prevails in many countries to the present day. Such a smell would lead Isaac's recollection to the fields, where aromatic plants grew in abundance, and where he had often been regaled by the scent.

Verse 28. God give thee of the dew of heaven] As there was but little rain in Judea, except what was termed the early rain, which fell about the beginning of spring, and the latter rain, which fell about September, the lack of this was supplied by the copious dews which fell both morning and evening, or rather through the whole of the night. And we may judge, says Calmet, of the abundance of these dews by what fell on Gideon's fleece, Judges vi. 38, which, being wrung, filled a bowl. And Hushai compares an army ready to fall upon its enemies to a dew falling on the ground, 2 Sam. xvii. 12, which gives us the idea that this fluid fell in great profusion, so as to saturate everything. Travellers in these countries assure us that the dews fall there in an extraordinary abundance.

The fatness of the earth] Under this and the former expressions, Isaac wishes his son all the blessings which a plentiful country can produce; for, if the dews and seasonable rains of heaven fall upon a fruitful soil, nothing but brought it unto his father, and said unto his father, Let my father arise, *and eat of his son's venison, that thy soul may bless me.

32 And Isaac his father said unto him, Who art thou? And he said, I am thy son, thy first-born, Esau.

33 And Isaac trembled very exceedingly, and said, Who? where is he that hath taken venison, and brought it me, and I have eaten of all before thou camest, and have blessed him? yea, and he shall be blessed.

34 And when Esau heard the words of his father, he cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry, and said unto his father, Bless me, even me also, O my father.

35 And he said, Thy brother came with subtilty, and hath taken away thy blessing.

36 And he said, Is not he rightly named Jacob? for he hath supplanted me these two times: he took away my birth-right; and behold, now he hath taken away my blessing. And he said, Hast thou not reserved a blessing for me?

37 And Isaac answered and said unto Esau, Behold, I have made him thy lord, and all his brethren have I given to him for servants: and with corn and wine have I sustained him: and what shall I do now unto thee, my son?

38 And Esau said unto his father, Hast thou but one blessing, my father? bless me, even me also, O my father. And Esau lifted up his voice, and wept.

Verse 33. And Isaac trembled] The marginal reading is very literal and proper, And Isaac trembled with a great trembling greatly. And this shows the deep concern he felt for his own deception, and the iniquity of the means by which it had been brought about. Though Isaac must have heard of that which God had spoken to Rebekah, The elder shall serve the younger, and could never have wished to reverse this divine purpose, yet he might certainly think that the spiritual blessing might be conveyed to Esau, and by him to all the nations of the earth, notwithstanding the superiority of secular dominion on the other side.

Yea, and he shall be blessed.] From what is said in this verse, collated with Heb. xii. 17, we see how binding the conveyance of the birth-right was, when communicated with the rites already mentioned. When Isaac found that he had been deceived by Jacob, he certainly would have reversed the blessing if he could; but, as it had been conveyed in the sacramental way, this was impossible. Hence it is said by the apostle, Esau found no place for repentance, no place for change of mind or purpose in his father, though he sought it carefully with tears. But this had nothing to do with the final salvation of poor outwitted Esau, nor, indeed, with that of his unnatural brother.

Verse 35. Hast taken away thy blessing.] This blessing, which was a different thing from the birth-right, seems to consist of two parts: 1. The dominion, generally and finally, over the other part of the family; and 2. Being the progenitor of the Messiah. But the former is more explicitly declared than the latter.

Verse 36. He took away my birth-right] So he might say with considerable propriety: for, though he sold it to Jacob, yet, as Jacob had taken advantage of his perishing situation, he considered the act as a species of robbery.

Verse 40. By thy sword shalt thou live] This does not absolutely mean that the Edomites should have constant wars, but that they should be of a fierce and warlike disposition, gaining their sustenance by hunting, and by predatory excursions upon the possessions of others.

39 And Isaac his father answered and said unto him, Behold, thy dwelling shall be the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above:

40 And by thy sword shalt thou live, and shalt serve thy brother; and it shall come to pass, when thou shalt have the dominion, that thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck.

41 And Esau hated Jacob because of the blessing wherewith his father blessed him: and Esau said in his heart, The days of mourning for my father are at hand; then will I slay my brother Jacob.

42 And these words of Esau her elder son were told to Rebekah: and she sent and called Jacob her younger son, and said unto him, Behold, thy brother Esau, as touching thee, doth comfort himself, purposing to kill thee.

43 Now therefore, my son, obey my voice; and arise, flee thou to Laban my brother, to Haran;

44 And tarry with him a few days, until thy brother's fury turn away;

45 Until thy brother's anger turn away from thee, and he forget that which thou hast done to him: then I will send, and fetch thee from thence: why should I be deprived also of you both in one day?

46 And Rebekah said to Isaac, I am weary of my life because of the daughters of Heth: if Jacob take a wife of the daughters of Heth, such as these which are of the daughters of the land, what good shall my life do me?

And—when thou shalt have the dominion] It is here foretold that there was to be a time when the elder was to have dominion and shake off the yoke of the younger. The word tarid, which we translate have dominion, is rather of doubtful meaning, as it may be deduced from three different roots—yarad, to descend, to be brought down or brought low; radah, to obtain rule or have dominion; and rud, to complain—meaning either that, when reduced very low, God would magnify his power in their behalf, and deliver them from the yoke of their brethren; or, when they should be increased so as to venture to set up a king over them, or when they mourned for their transgressions, God would turn their captivity.

Verse 41. The days of mourning for my father are at hand] Such was the state of Isaac's health at that time, though he lived more than forty years afterwards, that his death was expected by all; and Esau thought that would be a favourable time for him to avenge himself on his brother Jacob, as, according to the custom of the times, the sons were always present at the burial of the father. Jacob and Esau assisted in burying their father Isaac, but the enmity between them had happily subsided long before that time.

Verse 42. Doth comfort himself, purposing to kill thee.] Houbigant renders capitat super te, he thinks or meditates to kill thee. This sense is natural enough here, but it does not appear to be the meaning of the original. There is no doubt that Esau, in his hatred to his brother, felt himself pleased with the thought that he should soon have the opportunity of avenging his wrongs.

Verse 44. Tarry with him a few days] It was probably forty years before he returned, and it is likely Rebekah saw him no more; for it is the general opinion of the Jewish rabbins that she died before Jacob's return from Padanaram, whether the period of his stay be considered twenty or forty years.

Verse 45. Why should I be deprived also of you both?] If Esau should kill Jacob, then the nearest akin to Jacob, who was, by the patriarchal law, Gen. ix. 6, the avenger of blood, would kill Esau; and both these deaths might possibly take place in the same day. Those who are ever endeavouring to sanctify the means by the end are full of perplexity and distress. God will not give his blessing to even a divine service, if not done in his own way, on principles of truth and righteousness. He needed not the cunning craftiness or deceits of men to accomplish his purposes. Yet, in his mercy, he overruled all these circumstances, and produced good, where things, if left to their own operations and issues, would have produced nothing but evil. However, after this reprehensible transaction, we hear no more of Rebekah, her burial excepted, chap. xlix. 31.

Verse 46. I am weary of my life] It is very likely that Rebekah kept many of the circumstances related above from the knowledge of Isaac; but, as Jacob could not go to Padan-aram without his knowledge, she appears here quite in her own character, framing an excuse for his departure, and concealing the true cause. She pretends to be afraid that her son Jacob will marry among the Hittites, as Esau had done, and therefore makes this to Isaac the ostensible reason why Jacob should immediately go to Padan-aram, that he might get a wife there. Isaac, not knowing the true cause of sending him away, readily falls in with Rebekah's proposal, and immediately calls Jacob, gives him suitable directions and his blessing, and sends him away.

1. I consider the whole of the conduct both of Rebekah and Jacob in some respects deeply criminal, and in all highly exceptionable. And the impartial relation of the facts contained in this and the xxvth chapter, gives me the fullest evidence of the truth and authenticity of the sacred original. How impartial is the history that God writes! The history given by God details as well the vices as the virtues of those who are its subjects. The inference which a reflecting mind, acquainted with human nature, draws from a comparison of the biography of the scriptures with that of uninspired writers is this—the scripture history is natural, is probable, bears all the characteristics of veracity, narrates circumstances which seem to make against its own honour—dwells on them, and often seeks occasion to REPEAT them. It is true! infallibly true! On the other hand, of biography in general we must say that it is often unnatural, improbable; is destitute of many of the essential characteristics of truth; studiously avoids mentioning those circumstances which are dishonourable to its subject; ardently endeavours either to cast those which it cannot wholly hide into deep shades, or sublime them into virtues. From these facts a reflecting mind will draw this general conclusion—an impartial history, in every respect true, can be expected only from God himself.

2. No pious man can read the chapter before him without emotions of grief and pain. A mother teaches her favourite son to cheat and defraud his brother, deceive his father, and tell the most execrable lies! And God, the just, the impartial God, relates all the circumstances in the most ample and minute detail! Had the Bible been the work of an impostor, a single trait of this history had never appeared. God, it is true, had purposed that the elder should serve the younger, but never designed that the supremacy should be brought about in this way. Had Jacob's unprincipled mother left the matter in the hands of God's providence, her favourite son would have had the precedency in such a way as would not only have manifested the justice and holiness of God, but would have been both honourable and lasting to HIMSELF. He got the birth-right, and he got the blessing; and how little benefit did he personally derive from either! What was his life from this time till his return from Padan-aram? A mere tissue of vexations, disappointments, and calamities. Men may endeavour to palliate the iniquity of these transactions, but this must proceed either from weakness or mistaken zeal. God has sufficiently marked the whole with his disapprobation.

3. The enmity which Esau felt against his brother Jacob seems to have been transmitted to all his posterity; and, doubtless, the matters of the birth-right and the blessing were the grounds on which that perpetual enmity was kept up between the descendants of both families, the Edomites and the Israelites.

4. On the blessings pronounced on Jacob and Esau, these questions may naturally be asked. 1. Was there anything in those blessings of such a spiritual nature as to affect the eternal interests of either? Certainly there was not, at least as far as might absolutely involve the salvation of the one, or the perdition of the other. 2. Was not the blessing pronounced on Esau as good as that pronounced on Jacob, the mere temporary lordship, and being the progenitor of the Messiah, excepted? So it evidently appears. 3. If the blessings had referred to their eternal states, had not Esau as fair a prospect for endless glory as his unfeeling brother? Justice and mercy both say—Yes. The truth is, it was their posterity, and not themselves, that were the objects of these blessings. Jacob, personally, gained no benefit; Esau, personally, sustained no loss.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Isaac directs Jacob to take a wife from the family of Laban, 1, 2; blesses and sends him away, 3, 4. Jacob begins his journey, 5. Esau, perceiving that the daughters of Canaan were not pleasing to his parents, and that Jacob obeyed them in going to get a wife of his own kindred, 6-8, went and took to wife Mahalath, the daughter of Ishmael, his father's brother, 9. Jacob, in his journey towards Haran, came to a certain place (Luz, ver. 19), where he lodged all night, 10, 11. He sees in a dream a ladder reaching from earth to heaven, on which he beholds the angels of God ascending and descending, 12. God appears above this ladder, and renews those promises which he had made to Abraham and to Isaac, 13, 14; promises Jacob personal protection and a safe return to his own country, 15. Jacob awakes, and makes reflections upon his dream, 16, 17. Sets up one of the stones he had had for his pillow, and pours oil on it, and calls the place Beth-el, 18, 19. Makes a vow, that if God will preserve him in his journey, and bring him back in safety, the stone should be God's house, and that he would give him the tenths of all that he should have, 20-22.

Verse 1. And blessed him] Now voluntarily and cheerfully confirmed to him the blessing, which he had before obtained through subtlety. It was necessary that he should have this confirmation previously to his departure; else, considering the way in which he had obtained both the birth-right and the blessing, he might be doubtful, according to his own words, whether he might not have got a curse instead of a blessing. As the blessing now pronounced on Jacob was obtained without any deception on his part, it is likely that it produced a salutary effect upon his mind, might have led him to confession of his sin, and prepared his heart for those discoveries of God's goodness with which he was favoured at Luz.

Verse 2. Go to Padan-aram] There have been several ingenious conjectures concerning the retinue which Jacob had, or might have had, for his journey ; and by some he has been supposed to have been well attended. The reverse seems to be intimated elsewhere. It appears that he lodged in the open air, with a stone for his pillow ; and that he went on foot with his staff in his hand ; nor is there even the most indirect mention of any attendants, nor is it probable there were any. He no doubt took provisions with him sufficient to carry him to the nearest encampment or village on the way. The oil that he poured on the pillar might be a little of that which he had brought for his own use. He had God alone with him.

Verse 3. That thou mayest be a multitude of people] There is something very remarkable in the original words ; they signify literally for an assembly, congregation, or church of peoples ; referring no doubt to the Jewish church in the wilderness, but more particularly to the Christian church, composed of every kindred, and nation, and people, and tongue.

Verse 4. Give thee the blessing of Abraham] May he confirm the inheritance with all its attendant blessings to thee, to the exclusion of Esau ; as he did to me, to the exclusion of Ishmael. But, according to St. Paul, much more than this is certainly intended here, for it appears, from Gal. iii. 6-14, that the blessing of Abraham, which is to come upon the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, comprises the whole doctrine of justification by faith, and its attendant privileges—viz., redemption from the curse of the law, remission of sins, and the promise of the Holy Spirit, including the constitution and establishment of the Christian church.

Verse 5. Bethuel the Syrian] Literally the Aramean, so called, not because he was of the race of Aram, the son of Shem, but because he dwelt in that country which had been formerly possessed by the descendants of Aram.

Verse 9. Then went Esau unto Ishmael] Those who think it was utterly impossible for Esau to do any right action, have classed his taking a daughter of Ishmael among his crimes ; whereas there is nothing more plain than that he did this with a sincere desire to obey and please his parents. Having heard the pious advice which Isaac gave to Jacob, he therefore went and took a wife from the family of his grandfather Abraham, as Jacob was desired to do out of the family of his maternal uncle Laban. Mahalath, whom he took to wife, stood in the same degree of relationship to Isaac his father as Rachel did to his mother Rebekah. Esau married his father's niece ; Jacob married his mother's niece. It was therefore most obviously to please his parents that Esau took this additional wife.

Verse 11. A certain place, and tarried there] Jacob had probably intended to reach Luz ; but, the sun being set, he either could not reach the city, or he might suspect the inhabitants, and rather prefer the open field, as he must

11 And he lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night, because the sun was set ; and he took of the stones of that place, and put them for his pillows, and lay down in that place to sleep.

12 And he <sup>a</sup> dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven : and behold <sup>a</sup> the angels of God ascending and descending on it.

13 <sup>a</sup> And, behold, the Lord stood above it, and said, <sup>a</sup> I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac ; <sup>a</sup> the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed ;

14 And <sup>a</sup> thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt <sup>a</sup> spread abroad <sup>a</sup> to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south : and in thee and <sup>a</sup> in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.

have heard of the character and conduct of the men of Sodom and Gomorrah. Or the gates might be shut by the time he reached it, which would prevent his admission ; for it frequently happens, to the present day, that travellers not reaching a city in the eastern countries previously to the shutting of the gates, are obliged to lodge under the walls all night, as when once shut they refuse to open them until the next day.

He took of the stones] He took one of the stones that were in that place for his pillow. Luz was about forty-eight miles distant from Beer-sheba ; too great a journey for one day, through what we may conceive very unready roads.

Verse 12. He dreamed, and behold a ladder] It is very likely that the primary design of this ladder was to point out the providence of God, by which he watches over and regulates all terrestrial things ; for nothing is left to merely natural causes—a heavenly agency pervades, actuates, and directs all. It might be intended also to point out the intercourse between heaven and earth, and the connexion of both worlds by the means of angelic ministry. That this is fact we learn from many passages in the Old Testament ; and it is a doctrine that is unequivocally taught in the New : Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation ? It was probably a type of CHRIST, in whom both worlds meet, and in whom the divine and human nature are conjoined. The LADDER was set up on the EARTH, and the TOP of it reached to HEAVEN ; for GOD was manifested in the FLESH, and in him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. Nothing could be a more expressive emblem of the incarnation and its effects ; Jesus Christ is the grand connecting medium between heaven and earth, and between God and man. By him God comes down to man ; through him man ascends to God. It appears that our Lord applies the vision in this way himself—1st, In that remarkable speech to Nathanael, Hereafter ye shall see the heaven opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending on the Son of Man, John i. 51 ; 2dly, In his speech to Thomas, John xiv. 6 : I am the way, and the truth, and the life ; no man cometh unto the Father but by me.

Verse 13. I am the Lord God of Abraham] Here God confirms to him the blessing of Abraham, for which Isaac had prayed, ver. 8, 4.

Verse 14. Thy seed shall be as the dust] The people that shall descend from thee shall be extremely numerous, and in thee and thy seed—the Lord JESUS descending from thee, according to the flesh, shall all the families of the earth—not only all of thy race, but all the other families or tribes of mankind which have not proceeded from any branch of the Abrahamic family, be blessed ; for Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death FOR EVERY MAN, Heb. ii. 9.

15 And, behold, * I am with thee, and will <sup>b</sup> keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will <sup>c</sup> bring thee again into this land; for <sup>d</sup> I will not leave thee, <sup>e</sup> until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of.

16 And Jacob awakened out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the LORD is in <sup>f</sup> this place; and I knew it not.

17 And he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place! this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven.

18 And Jacob rose up early in the morning, and took the stone that he had put for his pillows, and <sup>g</sup> set it up for a pillar, <sup>h</sup> and poured oil upon the top of it.

Verse 15. And, behold I am with thee] For I fill the heavens and the earth. I shall direct, help, and support thee in a peculiar manner, in thy present journey, so that in all thy concerns thou mayest consider thyself under my especial providence, for I will not leave thee. Thy descendants also shall be my peculiar people, whom I shall continue to preserve as such until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of—until the Messiah shall be born of thy race, and all the families of the earth—the Gentiles, be blessed through thee; the gospel being preached to them, and they, with the believing Jews, made ONE FOLD under ONE SHEPHERD, and one Bishop or Overseer of souls.

Verse 16. The Lord is in this place; and I knew it not.] That is, God has made this place his peculiar residence; it is a place in which he meets with and reveals himself to his followers. Jacob might have supposed that this place had been consecrated to God. And it has already been supposed that, his mind having been brought into a humble frame, he was prepared to hold communion with his Maker.

Verse 17. How dreadful is this place!] The appearance of the ladder, the angels, and the divine glory at the top of the ladder, must have left deep, solemn, and even awful impressions on the mind of Jacob; and hence the exclamation in the text, How dreadful is this place!

This is none other but the house of God] Onkelos seems to suppose that the gate or entrance into heaven was actually above this spot, and that when the angels of God descended to earth, they came through that opening into this place, and returned by the same way. And it really appears that Jacob himself had a similar notion.

Verse 18. And Jacob—took the stone—and set it up for a pillar] He placed the stone in an erect posture, that it might stand as a monument of the extraordinary vision which he had in this place; and he poured oil upon it, thereby consecrating it to God, so that it might be considered an altar on which libations might be poured, and sacrifices offered unto God.

Stones, images, and altars, dedicated to divine worship, were always anointed with oil. This appears to have been considered as a consecration of them to the object of the worship, and a means of inducing the god or goddess to take up their residence there, and answer the petitions of their votaries. Anointing stones, images, &c., is used in idolatrous countries to the present day, and the whole idol is generally smeared over with oil. Theodore asserts that many pious women in his time were accustomed to anoint the coffins of the martyrs, &c. And in Catholic countries when a church is consecrated they anoint the door-posts, pillars, altars, &c. So under the law there was a holy anointing oil to sanctify the tabernacle, laver, and all other things used in God's service, Exod. xl. 9, &c.

Verse 19. He called the name of that place Beth-el] That is, the house of God; for in consequence of his having anointed the stone, and thus consecrated it to God, he considered it as becoming henceforth his peculiar residence; see on the preceding verse.

Was called Luz at the first.] The Hebrew has Ulam Luz; ulam is sometimes a particle signifying as, just as; hence it may signify that the place was called Beth-el, as it was formerly called Luz. As Luz signifies an almond, almond or hazel tree, this place probably had its name from a number of such trees growing in that region.

19 And he called the name of <sup>i</sup> that place <sup>j</sup> Beth-el; but the name of that city was called Luz at the first.

20 * And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If <sup>k</sup> God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me <sup>l</sup> bread to eat, and raiment to put on,

21 So that * I come again to my father's house in peace; * then shall the LORD be my God:

22 And this stone, which I have set for a pillar, <sup>m</sup> shall be God's house: <sup>n</sup> and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.

xxx. 13. Judg. xi. 30. 2 Sam. xv. 8.—<sup>1</sup> Ver. 15.—<sup>m</sup> 1 Tim. vi. 8.—<sup>n</sup> Judg. xi. 31. 2 Sam. xix. 24, 30.—<sup>o</sup> Exod. xv. 2. Deut. xxvi. 17. 2 Sam. xv. 8. 2 Kings v. 17.—<sup>p</sup> Ver. 17. Ch. xiv. 20. xxxv. 7, 14.—<sup>q</sup> Lev. xxvii. 30-33. Deut. xiv. 22, 23.

From Beth-el came the Baetylia, or animated stones, so celebrated in antiquity, and to which divine honours were paid. These became abused to idolatrous purposes, and hence God strongly prohibits them, Lev. xxvi. 1; and it is very likely that stones of this kind were the most ancient objects of idolatrous worship; these were afterwards formed into beautiful human figures, male and female, when the art of sculpture became tolerably perfected; and hence the origin of idolatry as far as it refers to the worshipping of images; for these being consecrated by anointing, &c., were supposed immediately to become instinct with the power and energy of some divinity. Hence, then, the Baetylia or living stones of the ancient Phœnicians, &c. As oil is an emblem of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, so those who receive this anointing are considered as being alive unto God, and are expressly called by St. Peter living stones, 1 Pet. ii. 4, 5. May not the apostle have reference to those living stones or Baetylia of antiquity, and thus correct the notion by showing that these rather represented the true worshippers of God, who were consecrated to his service and made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and that these alone could be properly called the living stones out of which the true spiritual temple is composed?

Verse 20. Vowed a vow] A vow is a solemn, holy promise, by which a man bound himself to do certain things in a particular way, time, &c., and for power to accomplish which he depended on God; hence all vows were made with prayer.

If God will be with me, &c.] Jacob seems to make this vow rather for his posterity than for himself; for he particularly refers to the promises which God had made to him, which concerned the multiplication of his offspring, and their establishment in that land. If, then, God shall fulfil those promises, he binds his posterity to build God a house, and to devote for the maintenance of his worship the tenth of all their earthly goods. This mode of interpretation removes that appearance of self-interest which almost any other view of the subject presents.

Verse 22. This stone—shall be God's house] That is (as far as this matter refers to Jacob alone), Should I be preserved to return in safety, I shall worship God in this place. And this purpose he fulfilled, for there he built an altar, anointed it with oil, and poured a drink-offering thereon.

Tithes in their origin appear to have been a sort of eucharistic offering made unto God, and probably were something similar to the minchah, which we learn from Gen. iv. was in use almost from the foundation of the world. When God established a regular, and we may add an expensive worship, it was necessary that proper provision should be made for the support of those who were obliged to devote their whole time to it, and consequently were deprived of the opportunity of providing for themselves in any secular way. It was soon found that a tenth part of the produce of the whole land was necessary for this purpose, as a whole tribe, that of Levi, was devoted to the public service of God; and when the land was divided, this tribe received no inheritance among their brethren. Hence, for their support, the law of tithes was enacted; and by these the priests and Levites were not only supported as the ministers of God, but as the teachers and intercessors of the people, performing a great variety of religious duties for them, which otherwise they themselves were bound to perform. As this mode of supporting the ministers of God was instituted by himself, so we may rest assured it was rational and just. Nothing can be more reasonable than to devote a portion of the earthly good which we receive from the free mercy of God, to his own service; especially when by doing it we are essentially serving ourselves. If the ministers of God give up their whole time, talents, and strength, to watch over, labour for, and instruct the people in spiritual things, justice requires that they shall receive their support from the work. How worthless and wicked must that man be, who is continually receiving good from the Lord's hands without restoring any part for the support of true religion, and for charitable purposes! To such God says, Their table shall become a snare to them, and that he will curse their blessings. God expects returns of gratitude in this way from every man; he that has much should give plentifully, he that has little should do his diligence to give of that little.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Jacob proceeds on his journey, 1. Comes to a well where the flocks of his uncle Laban, as well as those of several others, were usually watered, 2, 3. Inquires from the shepherds concerning Laban and his family, 4-6. While they are conversing about watering the sheep, 7, 8, Rachel arrives, 9. He assists her to water her flock, 10; makes himself known unto her, 11, 12. She hastens home, and communicates the tidings of Jacob's arrival to her father, 12. Laban hastens to the well, embraces Jacob, and brings him home, 13. After a month's stay, Laban proposes to give Jacob wages, 14, 15. Leah and Rachel described, 16, 17. Jacob proposes to serve seven years for Rachel, 18; Laban consents, 19. When the seven years were fulfilled, Jacob demands his wife, 20, 21. Laban makes a marriage feast, 22; and in the evening substitutes Leah for Rachel, to whom he gives Zilpah for handmaid, 23, 24. Jacob discovers the fraud, and upbraids Laban, 25. He excuses himself, 26; and promises to give him Rachel for another seven years of service, 27. After abiding a week with Leah, he receives Rachel for wife, to whom Laban gives Bilhah for handmaid, 28, 29. Jacob loves Rachel more than Leah, and serves seven years for her, 30. Leah being despised, the Lord makes her fruitful, while Rachel continues barren, 31. Leah bears Reuben, 32, and Simeon, 33, and Levi, 34, and Judah; after which she leaves off bearing, 35.

THEN Jacob <sup>a</sup>went on his journey, <sup>b</sup>and came into the land of the <sup>c</sup>people of the east.

2 And he looked, and behold a well in the field, and, lo, there were three flocks of sheep lying by it; for out of that well they watered the flocks: and a great stone was upon the well's mouth,

3 And thither were all the flocks gathered: and they rolled the stone from the well's mouth, and watered the sheep, and put the stone again upon the well's mouth in his place.

Verse 1. Then Jacob went on his journey] The original is very remarkable: And Jacob lifted up his feet, and he travelled unto the land of the children of the east. There is a certain cheerfulness marked in the original which comports well with the state of mind into which he had been brought by the vision of the ladder and the promises of God. He now saw that, having God for his protector, he had nothing to fear, and therefore he went on his way rejoicing.

People of the east.] The inhabitants of Mesopotamia, and the whole country beyond the Euphrates, are called kedem, or easterns, in the sacred writings.

Verse 2. Three flocks of sheep] Sheep, in a healthy state, seldom drink in cold and comparatively cold countries; but it was probably different in hot climates. The three flocks, if flocks and not shepherds be meant, which were lying now at the well, did not belong to Laban, but to three other chiefs; for Laban's flock was yet to come, under the care of Rachel, ver. 6.

Verse 3. All the flocks. Instead of flocks, the Samaritan reads shepherds. It certainly cannot be said that all the flocks rolled the stone from the well's mouth, and watered the sheep; and yet so it appears to read, if we prefer the common Hebrew text to the Samaritan.

And put the stone again upon the well's mouth] It is very likely that the stone was a large one, which was necessary to prevent ill-minded individuals from either disturbing the water or filling up the well.

4 And Jacob said unto them, My brethren, whence be ye? And they said, Of Haran are we.

5 And he said unto them, Know ye Laban the son of Nahor? And they said, We know him.

6 And he said unto them, Is he well? And they said, He is well: and behold, Rachel his daughter cometh with the sheep.

7 And he said, Lo, it is yet high day: neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered together: water ye the sheep, and go and feed them.

8 And they said, We cannot, until all the flocks

Verse 4. My brethren, whence be ye?] The language of Laban and his family was Chaldee, and not Hebrew; but, from the names which Leah gave to her children, we see that the two languages had many words in common, and therefore Jacob and the shepherds might understand each other with little difficulty. It is possible, also, that Jacob might have learned the Chaldee or Aramitish language from his mother, as this was his mother's tongue.

Verse 5. Laban the son of Nahor?] Son is here put for grandson, for Laban was the son of Bethuel the son of Nahor.

Verse 6. Is he well?] Is there peace to him? Peace among the Hebrews signified all kinds of prosperity. And they said, He is well; shalom, he prospers.

Rachel—cometh with the sheep.] Rachel signifies a sheep or ewe; and she probably had her name from her fondness for these animals.

Verse 7. It is yet high day] The day is but about half run; neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered together—it is surely not time yet to put them into the folds; give them therefore water, and take them again to pasture.

Verse 8. We cannot, until all the flocks be gathered together] It is a rule that the stone shall not be removed till all the shepherds and the flocks which have a right to this well be gathered together; then, and not before, we may water the sheep.

be gathered together, and till they roll the stone from the well's mouth; then we water the sheep.

9 And while he yet spake with them, <sup>a</sup>Rachel came with her father's sheep: for she kept them.

10 And it came to pass, when Jacob saw Rachel the daughter of Laban his mother's brother, and the sheep of Laban his mother's brother, that Jacob went near, and rolled <sup>b</sup>the stone from the well's mouth, and watered the flock of Laban his mother's brother.

11 And Jacob <sup>c</sup>kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice, and wept.

12 And Jacob told Rachel that he was <sup>d</sup>her father's brother, and that he was Rebekah's son: <sup>e</sup>and she ran and told her father.

13 And it came to pass, when Laban heard the <sup>f</sup>'tidings of Jacob his sister's son, that <sup>g</sup>he ran to meet him, and embraced him, and kissed him, and brought him to his house. And he told Laban all these things.

14 And Laban said to him, <sup>h</sup>Surely thou art my bone and my flesh. And he abode with him <sup>i</sup>'the space of a month.

15 And Laban said unto Jacob, Because thou art my brother, shouldest thou therefore serve me for nought? tell me, what shall thy wages be?

16 And Laban had two daughters: the name of the elder was Leah, and the name of the younger was Rachel.

Verse 9. Rachel came with her father's sheep] So we find that young women were not kept concealed in the house till the time they were married, which is the common gloss put on almah, a virgin, one concealed. Nor was it beneath the dignity of the daughters of the most opulent chiefs to carry water from the well, as in the case of Rebekah; or tend sheep, as in the case of Rachel. The chief property in those times consisted in flocks; and who so proper to take care of them as those who were interested in their safety and increase? Honest labour, far from being a discredit, is an honour both to high and low. The king himself is served by the field; and without it, and the labour necessary for its cultivation, all ranks must perish. Let every son, let every daughter, learn that it is no discredit to be employed, whenever it may be necessary, in the meanest offices, by which the interests of the family may be honestly promoted.

Verse 10. Jacob went near, and rolled the stone] Probably the flock of Laban was the last of those which had a right to the well; that flock being now come, Jacob assisted the shepherds to roll off the stone (for it is not likely he did it by himself), and so helped his cousin, to whom he was as yet unknown, to water her flock.

Verse 11. Jacob kissed Rachel] A simple and pure method by which the primitive inhabitants of the earth testified their friendship to each other.

And lifted up his voice] It may be, in thanksgiving to God for the favour he had shown him in conducting him thus far in peace and safety.

And wept.] From a sense of the goodness of his heavenly Father, and his own unworthiness of the success with which he had been favoured.

Verse 15. Because thou art my brother, &c.] As Laban, who was of a very saving, if not covetous, disposition, saw that Jacob was likely to be of great use to him in his secular concerns, he wished to secure his services, and therefore asks him what wages he wished to have.

Verse 17. Leah was tender eyed] I believe the word means just the reverse of the signification generally given to it. The design of the inspired writer is to compare both the sisters together, that the balance may appear to be greatly in favour of Rachel. The chief recommendation of Leah was her soft and beautiful eyes, but Rachel was beautiful in her shape, person, mien, and gait, and beautiful in her countenance. Therefore Jacob loved her, and was willing 17 Leah was tender eyed; but Rachel was <sup>a</sup>beautiful and well favoured.

18 And Jacob loved Rachel; and said, <sup>b</sup>I will serve thee seven years for Rachel thy younger daughter.

19 And Laban said, <sup>c</sup>It is better that I give her to thee, than that I should give her to another man: abide with me.

20 And Jacob <sup>d</sup>served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her.

21 And Jacob said unto Laban, Give me my wife, for my days are fulfilled, that I may <sup>e</sup>go in unto her.

22 And Laban gathered together all the men of the place, and <sup>f</sup>made a feast.

23 And it came to pass in the evening, that he took Leah his daughter, and brought her to him: and he went in unto her.

24 And Laban gave unto his daughter Leah Zilpah his maid for an handmaid.

25 And it came to pass, that in the morning, behold, it was Leah: and he said to Laban, What is this thou hast done unto me? did not I serve with thee for Rachel? wherefore then hast thou beguiled me?

26 And Laban said, It must not be so done in our country, <sup>g</sup>to give the younger before the first-born.

to become a bond servant for seven years, that he might get her to wife; for in his destitute state he could produce no dowry, and it was the custom of those times for the father to receive a portion for his daughter, and not to give one with her.

Verse 20. And Jacob served seven years for Rachel] In accordance with the above-named custom among all nations that men should give dowries for their wives; in many countries this custom still prevails.

And they seemed unto him but a few days] If Jacob had been obliged to wait seven years before he married Rachel, could it possibly be said that they could appear to him as a few days? Though the letter of the text seems to say the contrary, yet there are eminent men who strongly contend that he received Rachel soon after the month was finished, and then served seven years for her, which might really appear but a few days to him, because of his increasing love to her; but others think this quite incompatible with all the circumstances marked down in the text.

Verse 21. My days are fulfilled] My seven years are now completed; let me have my wife, for whom I have given this service as a dowry.

Verse 22. Laban—made a feast.] As marriage was a very solemn contract, there is much reason to believe that sacrifices were offered on the occasion, and libations poured out; and we know that on festival occasions a cup of wine was offered to every guest; and as this was drunk with particular ceremonies, the feast might derive its name from this circumstance, which was the most prominent and observable on such occasions.

Verse 23. In the evening—he took Leah his daughter] As the bride was always veiled, and the bride chamber generally dark, or nearly so, and as Leah was brought to Jacob in the evening, the imposition here practised might easily pass undetected by Jacob, till the ensuing day discovered the fraud.

Verse 24. And Laban gave—Zilpah his maid] Slaves given in this way to a daughter on her marriage were the peculiar property of the daughter; and over them the husband had neither right nor power.

Verse 26. It must not be so done in our country] It was an early custom to give daughters in marriage according to their seniority; and it is worthy of remark that the oldest people now existing, next to the Jews—the *Hindoo*s—have 27 * Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also, for the service which thou shalt serve with me yet seven other years.

28 And Jacob did so, and fulfilled her week : and he gave him Rachel his daughter to wife also.

29 And Laban gave to Rachel his daughter <sup>b</sup> Bilhah his handmaid to be her maid.

30 And he went in also unto Rachel, and he <sup>c</sup> loved also Rachel more than Leah, and served with him <sup>d</sup> yet seven other years.

31 And when the LORD <sup>e</sup> saw that Leah was hated, he <sup>f</sup> opened her womb : but Rachel was barren.

32 And Leah conceived, and bare a son, and she this not merely as a custom, but as a positive law ; and they deem it criminal to give a younger daughter in marriage while an elder daughter remains unmarried. This was a custom at Mesopotamia ; but Laban took care to conceal it from Jacob till after he had given him Leah.

Verse 27. Fulfil her week] The marriage feast, it appears, lasted seven days ; it would not, therefore, have been proper to break off the solemnities, to which all the men of the place had been invited, ver. 22 ; and probably Laban wished to keep his fraud from the public eye. Therefore he informs Jacob that, if he will fulfil the marriage week for Leah, he will give him Rachel at the end of it, on condition of his serving seven other years. To this the necessity of the case caused Jacob to agree ; and thus Laban had fourteen years' service instead of seven ; for it is not likely that Jacob would have served even seven days for Leah, as his affection was wholly set on Rachel, the wife of his own choice. By this stratagem Laban gained a settlement for both his daughters. What a man soweth, that shall he reap. Jacob had before practised deceit, and is now deceived ; and Laban, the instrument of it, was afterwards deceived himself.

Verse 28. And Jacob did so—and he gave him Rachel] It is perfectly plain that Jacob did not serve seven years more before he got Rachel to wife ; but, having spent a week with Leah, and in keeping the marriage feast, he then got Rachel, and served afterwards seven years for her. Connexions of this kind were allowable in those ancient times. In taking both sisters, it does not appear that any blame attached to Jacob, though in consequence of it he was vexed by their jealousies.

Verse 31. The Lord saw that Leah was hated] From this and the preceding verse we get the genuine meaning of the word sane, to hate, in certain disputed places in the scriptures. The word simply signifies a less degree of love ; so it is said, ver. 30 : " Jacob loved Rachel more than Leah "—i.e. he loved Leah less than Rachel ; and this is called hating in ver. 31 : When the Lord saw that Leah was hated—that she had less affection shown to her than was her due, as one of the legitimate wives of Jacob—he opened her womb, he blessed her with children. Now the frequent intercourse of Jacob with Leah sufficiently proves that he called his name * Reuben : for she said, Surely the LORD hath <sup>b</sup> looked upon my affliction ; now therefore my husband will love me.

33 And she conceived again, and bare a son ; and said, Because the LORD hath heard that I was hated, he hath therefore given me this son also : and she called his name <sup>c</sup> Simeon.

34 And she conceived again, and bare a son ; and said, Now this time will my husband be joined unto me, because I have born him three sons : therefore was his name called <sup>d</sup> Levi.

did not hate her, in the sense in which this term is used among us ; but he felt and showed less affection for her than for her sister. So, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated, simply means, I have shown a greater degree of affection for Jacob and his posterity than I have done for Esau and his descendants. But not one word of all this relates to the eternal states of either of the two nations. Those who endeavour to support certain peculiarities of their creed by such scriptures as these, do greatly err, not knowing the scripture, and not properly considering either the sovereignty or the mercy of God.

Verse 34. Therefore was his name called Levi] From Levi sprang the tribe of Levites, who, instead of the first-born, were joined unto the priests in the service of the sanctuary.

Verse 35. She called his name Judah] From this patriarch the Jews have their name, and could it be now rightly applied to them, it would intimate that they were a people that confess God, acknowledge his bounty, and praise him for his grace.

Left bearing.] That is, for a time ; for she had several children afterwards.

The intelligent and pious care of the original inhabitants of the world to call their children by those names which were descriptive of some remarkable event in providence, circumstance of their birth, or domestic occurrence, is worthy, not only of respect, but of imitation. As the name itself continually called to the mind, both of the parents and the child, the circumstance from which it originated, it could not fail to be a lasting blessing to both. How widely different is our custom ! Unthinking and ungodly, we impose names upon our offspring as we do upon our cattle ; and often the dog, the horse, the monkey, and the parrot, share in common with our children the names which are called Christian ! Some of our Christian names, so called, are absurd, others are ridiculous, and a third class impious ; these last being taken from the demon gods and goddesses of heathenism. May we hope that the rational and pious custom recommended in the scriptures shall ever be restored, even among those who profess to believe in, fear and love God !

AND when Rachel saw that <sup>a</sup>she bare Jacob no children, Rachel <sup>b</sup>envied her sister; and said unto Jacob, Give me children, <sup>c</sup>or else I die.

2 And Jacob's anger was kindled against Rachel: and he said, <sup>d</sup>Am I in God's stead, who hath withheld from thee the fruit of the womb?

3 And she said, Behold <sup>e</sup>my maid Bilhah, go in unto her; <sup>f</sup>and she shall bear upon my knees, <sup>g</sup>that I may also <sup>h</sup>have children by her.

4 And she gave him Bilhah her handmaid <sup>i</sup>to wife: and Jacob went in unto her.

5 And Bilhah conceived and bare Jacob a son.

6 And Rachel said, God hath <sup>j</sup>judged me, and hath also heard my voice, and hath given me a son: therefore called she his name <sup>k</sup>Dan.

7 And Bilhah Rachel's maid conceived again, and bare Jacob a second son.

8 And Rachel said, With <sup>l</sup>great wrestlings have I wrestled with my sister, and I have prevailed; and she called his name <sup>m</sup>Naphtali.

9 When Leah saw that she had left bearing, she took Zilpah her maid, and <sup>n</sup>gave her Jacob to wife.

10 And Zilpah Leah's maid bare Jacob a son.

11 And Leah said, A troop cometh: and she called his name <sup>o</sup>Gad.

12 And Zilpah Leah's maid bare Jacob a second son.

13 And Leah said, <sup>p</sup>Happy am I, for the daughters <sup>q</sup>will call me blessed: and she called his name <sup>r</sup>Asher.

14 And Reuben being in the days of wheat harvest, and found <sup>s</sup>mandrakes in the field, and brought them to his mother Leah. Then Rachel said to Leah, <sup>t</sup>Give me, I pray thee, of thy son's mandrakes.

15 And she said unto her, <sup>u</sup>Is it a small matter that thou hast taken my husband? and wouldest thou take away my son's mandrakes also? And Rachel said, Therefore he shall lie with thee to-night for thy son's mandrakes.

16 And Jacob came out of the field in the evening, and Leah went out to meet him, and said, Thou must come in unto me; for surely I have hired thee with my son's mandrakes. And he lay with her that night.

17 And God hearkened unto Leah, and she conceived, and bare Jacob the fifth son.

18 And Leah said, God hath given me my hire, because I have given my maiden to my husband: and she called his name <sup>v</sup>Issachar.

19 And Leah conceived again, and bare Jacob the sixth son.

20 And Leah said, God hath endued me <sup>w</sup>with a good dowry; now will my husband dwell with me, because I have born him six sons: and she called his name <sup>x</sup>Zebulun.

21 And afterwards she bare a daughter, and called her name <sup>y</sup>Dinah.

22 And God <sup>z</sup>remembered Rachel, and God hearkened to her, and <sup>aa</sup>opened her womb.

23 And she conceived, and bare a son; and said, God hath taken away <sup>ab</sup>my reproach:

24 And she called his name <sup>ac</sup>Joseph; <sup>ad</sup>and said, <sup>ae</sup>The Lord shall add to me another son.

Verse 1. Give me children, or else I die.] This is a most reprehensible speech, and argues not only envy and jealousy, but also a total want of dependance on God. She had the greatest share of her husband's affection, and yet was not satisfied unless she could engross all the privileges which her sister enjoyed! How true are those sayings, Envy is as rottenness of the bones! and, Jealousy is as cruel as the grave!

Verse 2. Am I in God's stead? Am I greater than God, to give thee what he has refused?

Verse 3. She shall bear upon my knees.] The handmaid was the sole property of the mistress, as has already been remarked in the case of Hagar; and therefore not only all her labour, but even the children born by her, were the property of the mistress. These female slaves, therefore, bore children vicariously for their mistresses; and this appears to be the import of the term, she shall bear upon my knees.

Verse 6. Called she his name Dan.] Because she found God had judged for her, and decided she should have a son by her handmaid; hence she called his name dan, judging.

Verse 8. She called his name Naphtali.] My wrestling, according to the common mode of interpretation; but it is more likely that the root signifies to twist or entwine.

Verse 11. She called his name Gad.] The Septuagint translate it, with good fortune; the Vulgate, felicitas, happily; but our own translation appears as probable as any. In the Bible published by Becke, 1649, the word is translated as an exclamation, Good luck! [This seems nearer the truth.]

Verse 13. And Leah said, Happy am I] Asher, that is, blessedness or happiness.

Verse 14. Reuben—found mandrakes.] What these were is utterly unknown, and learned men have wasted much time and pains in endeavouring to guess out a probable meaning. Probably the plant commonly called mandrake is intended. Both among the Greeks and Orientals this plant was held in high repute, as being of a prolific virtue, and helping conception; and from it philtres were made, and this is favoured by the meaning of the original, loves—i.e. incentives to matrimonial connexions—and it was probably on this account that Rachel desired them. [The Mandragora vernalis, which grows in Palestine, is still supposed to possess this property.]

Verse 15. Thou hast taken my husband.] It appears probable that Rachel had found means to engross the whole of Jacob's affection and company, and that she now agreed to let him visit the tent of Leah, on account of receiving some of the fruits or plants which Reuben had found.

Verse 16. I have hired thee.] We may remark among the Jewish women an intense desire of having children; and it seems to have been produced, not from any peculiar affection for children, but through the hope of having a share in the blessing of Abraham, by bringing forth him in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed.

Verse 18. And she called his name Issachar.] This word comes from the root sachar, to content, satisfy, saturate; hence, a satisfaction or compensation for work done, &c.

Joseph, that Jacob said unto Laban, * Send me away, that I may go unto <sup>b</sup> mine own place, and to my country.

26 Give me my wives and my children, <sup>c</sup> for whom I have served thee, and let me go: for thou knowest my service which I have done thee.

27 And Laban said unto him, I pray thee, if I have found favour in thine eyes, tarry: for <sup>d</sup> I have learned by experience that the LORD hath blessed me <sup>e</sup> for thy sake.

28 And he said, <sup>f</sup> Appoint me thy wages, and I will give it.

29 And he said unto him, <sup>g</sup> Thou knowest how I have served thee, and how thy cattle was with me.

30 For it was little which thou hadst before I came, and it is now <sup>h</sup> increased unto a multitude; and the LORD hath blessed thee <sup>i</sup> since my coming: and now when shall I <sup>j</sup> provide for mine own house also?

31 And he said, What shall I give thee? And Jacob said, Thou shalt not give me any thing: if thou wilt do this thing for me, I will again feed and keep thy flock:

32 I will pass through all thy flocks to-day, removing from thence all the speckled and spotted cattle, and all the brown cattle among the sheep, and the spotted and speckled among the goats: and <sup>k</sup> of such shall be my hire.

33 So shall my <sup>l</sup> righteousness answer for me <sup>m</sup> in time to come, when it shall come for my hire before thy face: every one that is not speckled and spotted among the goats, and brown among the sheep, that shall be counted stolen with me.

34 And Laban said, Behold, I would it might be according to thy word.

Verse 20. Now will my husband dwell with me] She called his name Zebulun, a dwelling or cohabitation, as she now expected that Jacob would dwell with her, as he had before dwelt with Rachel.

Verse 21. And called her name Dinah] As Rachel had called her son by Bilhah DAN, so Leah calls her daughter DINAH, God having judged and determined for her, as well as for her sister in the preceding instance.

Verse 22. And God hearkened to her] Her prayer and faith obtained what her impatience and unbelief had prevented.

Verse 24. She called his name Joseph] Adding, or he who adds; thereby prophetically declaring that God would add unto her another son, which was accomplished in the birth of Benjamin, chap. xxxv. 18.

Verse 25. Jacob said unto Laban, Send me away] Having now, as is generally conjectured, fulfilled the fourteen years which he had engaged to serve for Leah and Rachel.

Verse 27. I have learned by experience] I have diligently considered the whole of thy conduct, and marked the increase of my property, and find that the LORD hath blessed me for thy sake. [Or rather, I have consulted the auguries: Laban was an idolater.]

Verse 30. For it was little which thou hadst before I came] Jacob takes advantage of the concession made by his father-in-law, and asserts that it was for his sake that the LORD had blessed him.

Verse 32. All the speckled and spotted cattle] Seh, which we translate cattle, signifies the young either of sheep or goats, what we call a lamb or a kid. Speckled signifies interspersed with variously coloured spots.

Spotted] From tala, to patch, to make party-coloured, or patch-work.

Verse 35. The he-goats that were ring-straked] It is extremely difficult to find out, from the 82nd and 85th verses, in what the bargain of Jacob with his father-in-law properly consisted. It appears from verse 32 that Jacob was to have for his wages all the speckled, spotted, and 35 And he removed that day the he-goats that were ring-straked and spotted, and all the she-goats that were speckled and spotted, and every one that had some white in it, and all the brown among the sheep, and gave them into the <sup>n</sup> hand of his sons.

36 And he set three days' journey betwixt himself and Jacob: and Jacob fed the rest of Laban's flocks.

37 And <sup>o</sup> Jacob took him rods of green poplar, and of the hazel and chesnut tree; and pilled white strakes in them, and made the white appear which was in the rods.

38 And he set the rods which he had pilled before the flocks in the gutters in the watering troughs when the flocks came to drink, that they should conceive when they came to drink.

39 And the flocks conceived before the rods, and brought <sup>p</sup> forth cattle ring-straked, speckled, and spotted.

40 And Jacob did separate the lambs, and set the faces of the flocks toward the ring-straked, and all the brown in the flock of Laban: and he put his own flocks by themselves, and put them not unto Laban's cattle.

41 And it came to pass, whensoever the stronger cattle did conceive, that Jacob laid the rods before the eyes of the cattle in the gutters, that they might conceive among the rods.

42 But when the cattle were feeble, he put them not in: so the feebler were Laban's, and the stronger Jacob's.

brown among the sheep and the goats; and of course that all those which were not party-coloured should be considered as the property of Laban. But in verse 35<sup>n</sup> it appears that Laban separated all the party-coloured cattle, and delivered them into the hands of his own sons; which seems as if he had taken these for his own property, and left the others to Jacob. The true meaning appears to be this:—Jacob had agreed to take all the party-coloured for his wages. As he was now only beginning to act upon this agreement, consequently none of the cattle as yet belonged to him; therefore Laban separated from the flock all such cattle as Jacob might afterwards claim in consequence of his bargain (for as yet he had no right). Therefore Jacob commenced his service to Laban with a flock that did not contain a single animal of the description of those to which he might be entitled; and the others were sent away, under the care of Laban's sons, three days' journey from those of which Jacob had the care. The bargain, therefore, seemed to be wholly in favour of Laban; and to turn it to his own advantage, Jacob made use of the stratagems afterwards mentioned. From the whole account, we learn that Laban acted with great prudence and caution, and Jacob with great judgment. Jacob had already served fourteen years, and had got no patrimony whatever, though he had now a family of twelve children—eleven sons and one daughter—besides his two wives, and their two maids, and several servants. It was high time that he should get some property for these; and as his father-in-law was excessively parsimonious, and would scarcely allow him to live, he was in some sort obliged to make use of stratagem to get an equivalent for his services.

Verse 37. Rods of green poplar] The libneh is generally understood to mean the white poplar; and the word lach, which is here joined to it, does not so much imply greenness of colour as being fresh, in opposition to witheredness. Had they not been fresh, just cut off, he could not have pilled the bark from them.

And of the hazel.] The nut or the almond tree.

And chesnut tree.] The plane tree is properly called by this name, because of the outer bark naturally peeling off, and leaving the tree bare in various places, having smooth places where it has fallen off. A portion of this bark the plane tree loses every year.

Pilled white strokes in them.] Probably cutting the bark through in a spiral line, and taking it off in a certain breadth all round the rods, so that the rods would appear party-coloured, the white of the wood showing itself where the bark was stripped off.

Verse 38. And he set the rods which he had pilled before the flocks.] It has long been an opinion, that whatever makes a strong impression on the mind of a female in the time of conception and gestation, will have a corresponding influence on the mind or body of the fetus. It is not necessary to look for a miracle here; for though the fact has not been accounted for, it is nevertheless sufficiently plain that the effect does not exceed the powers of nature; and I have no doubt that the same modes of trial used by Jacob would produce the same results in similar cases.

Verse 40. Jacob did separate the lambs, &c.] When Jacob undertook the care of Laban's flock there were no party-coloured sheep or goats among them, therefore the ring-straked, &c., mentioned in this verse must have been born since the agreement was made; and Jacob makes use of them precisely as he used the pilled rods, that, having these before their eyes during conception, the impression might be made upon their imagination which would lead to the results already mentioned.

Verse 41. Whensoever the stronger cattle did conceive.] The word which we translate stronger, is understood by several of the ancient interpreters as signifying the early, first-born, or early spring cattle; and hence it is opposed to atuphim, which we translate feeble, cattle of the second birth. Jacob therefore took good heed not to try his experiments with those late produced cattle, because he knew they would produce a degenerate breed, but with the early cattle, which were strong and vigorous, by which his breed must be improved. All this proves a consummate knowledge in Jacob of his pastoral office.

Jacob certainly manifested much address in the whole of his conduct with Laban; but though nothing can excuse over-reaching or insincerity, yet no doubt he supposed himself justified in taking these advantages of a man who had greatly injured and defrauded him. Had Jacob got Rachel at first, for whom he had honestly and faithfully served seven years, there is no evidence whatever that he would have taken a second wife. Laban, by having imposed his eldest daughter upon him, and by obliging him to serve seven years for her who never was an object of his affection, acted a part wholly foreign to every dictate of justice and honesty; therefore, speaking after the manner of men, he had reason to expect that Jacob should repay him in his own coin, and right himself by whatever means came into his power; and many think that he did the bounds of justice, even in the business of the party-coloured cattle.

The talent possessed by Jacob was a most dangerous one; he was what may be truly called a scheming man; as fruitful in expedients as he was in plans. His mother was evidently a woman who paid little respect to what is called moral principle, and sanctified all kinds of means by the goodness of the end at which she aimed; which in social, civil, and religious life, is the most dangerous principle on which a person can possibly act. In this art she appears to have instructed her son; and, unfortunately for himself, he was in some instances but too apt a proficient. Early habits are not easily rooted out, especially those of a bad kind. Next to the influence and grace of the Spirit of God is a good and religious education. Parents should teach their children to despise and abhor low cunning, to fear a lie, and tremble at an oath; and in order to be successful, they should illustrate their precepts by their own regular and conscientious example. How far God approved of the whole of Jacob's conduct I shall not inquire; it is certain that he attributes his success to divine interposition, and God himself censures Laban's conduct towards him; see chap. xxxi. 7-12. But still he appears to have proceeded farther than this interposition authorised him to go. The whole account, with all its lights and shades, I consider as another proof of the impartiality of the divine historian, and a strong evidence of the authenticity of the Pentateuch. Neither the spirit of deceit, nor the partiality of friendship, could ever pen such an account.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Laban and his sons envy Jacob, 1, 2; on which he is commanded by the Lord to return to his own country, 3. Having called his wives together, he lays before them a detailed statement of his situation in reference to their father, 4, 5; the services he had rendered him, 6; the various attempts made by Laban to defraud him of his hire, 7; how, by God's providence, his evil designs had been counteracted, 8-12; and then informs them that he is now called to return to his own country, 13. To the proposal of an immediate departure, Leah and Rachel agree; and strengthen the propriety of the measure by additional reasons, 14-16; on which Jacob collects all his family, his flocks, and his goods, and prepares for his departure, 17, 18. Laban having gone to shear his sheep, Rachel secretes his images, 19. Jacob and his family, unknown to Laban, take their departure, 20, 21. On the third day Laban is informed of their flight, 22; and pursues them to Mount Gilead, 23. God appears to Laban in a dream, and warns him not to molest Jacob, 24. He comes up with Jacob at Mount Gilead, 25; reproaches him with his clandestine departure, 26-29; and charges him with having stolen his gods, 30. Jacob vindicates himself, and protests his innocence in the matter of the theft, 31, 32. Laban makes a general search for his images in Jacob's, Leah's, Bilhah's and Zilpah's tents; and not finding them, proceeds to examine Rachel's, 33. Rachel, having hidden them among the camel's furniture, sat upon them, 34; and making a delicate excuse for not rising up, Laban desists from farther search, 35. Jacob, ignorant of Rachel's theft, reproaches Laban for his suspicions, 36, 37; enumerates his long and faithful services, his fatigues, and Laban's injustice, 38-41; and shows that it was owing to God's goodness alone that he had any property, 42. Laban is moderated, and proposes a covenant, 43, 44. Jacob sets up a stone, and the rest brings stones and make a heap, which Laban calls Jegar-Sahadutha, and Jacob Gilead, 45-47. They make a covenant, and confirm it by an oath, 48-53. Jacob offers a sacrifice; they eat together; and Laban and his companions, having lodged in the mount all night, take a friendly leave of Jacob and his family next morning, and depart, 54, 55.

AND he heard the words of Laban's sons, saying, Jacob hath taken away all that was our father's; and of that which was our father's hath he gotten all this 'glory.

2 And Jacob beheld 'the countenance of Laban, and, behold, it was not 'toward him 'as before.

3 And the Lord said unto Jacob, 'Return unto the land of thy fathers, and to thy kindred; and I will be with thee.

4 And Jacob sent and called Rachel and Leah to the field unto his flock,

5 And said unto them, 'I see your father's countenance, that it is not toward me as before; but the God of my father 'hath been with me.

6 And 'ye know that with all my power I have served your father.

7 And your father hath deceived me, and 'changed my wages 'ten times; but God 'suffered him not to hurt me.

8 If he said thus, 'The speckled shall be thy wages; then all the cattle bare speckled: and if he said thus, The ring-straked shall be thy hire; then bare all the cattle ring-straked.

9 Thus God hath 'taken away the cattle of your father, and given them to me.

10 And it came to pass at the time that the cattle conceived, that I lifted up mine eyes, and saw in a dream, and, behold, the 'rams which leaped upon the cattle were ring-straked, speckled, and grised.

11 And 'the angel of God spake unto me in a dream, saying, Jacob: and I said, Here am I.

12 And he said, Lift up thine eyes, and see, all

Verse 1. And he heard the words of Laban's sons] The multiplication of Jacob's cattle, and the decrease and degeneracy of those of Laban, were sufficient to rouse the jealousy of Laban's sons. This, with Laban's unfair treatment, and the direction he received from God, determined him to return to his own country.

Hath he gotten all this glory.] The original word signifies both to be rich and to be heavy; and perhaps for this simple reason, that riches ever bring with them heavy weight and burden of cares and anxieties.

Verse 3. And the Lord said unto Jacob, Return—and I will be with thee.] A promise of this kind was essentially necessary for the encouragement of Jacob, especially at this time; and no doubt it was a powerful means of support to him through the whole journey; and it was particularly so when he heard that his brother was coming to meet him, with four hundred men in his retinue, chap. xxxii. 6. At that time he went and pleaded the very words of this promise with God, chap. xxxii. 9.

Verse 4. Jacob sent and called Rachel and Leah] He had probably been at some considerable distance with the flocks; and for the greater secrecy, he rather sends for them to the field, to consult them on this most momentous affair, than to visit them in their tents, where probably some of the family of Laban might overhear their conversation, though Laban himself was at the time three days' journey off.

Verse 7. Changed my wages ten times] There is a strange diversity among the ancient Versions, and ancient and modern interpreters, on the meaning of these words. It is most natural to suppose that Jacob uses the word ten times for an indefinite number, which we might safely translate frequently: for it evidently means an indefinite number in other parts of the sacred writings.

Verse 11. The angel of God spake unto me in a dream.] It is strange that we had not heard of this dream before; and yet it seems to have taken place before the cattle brought forth, immediately after the bargain between him and Laban. The Samaritan gives us the whole of this dream after verse 86 of the preceding chapter.

the rams which leap upon the cattle are ring-straked, speckled, and grised: for 'I have seen all that Laban doeth unto thee.

13 I am the God of Beth-el: 'where thou anointedst the pillar, and where thou vowedst a vow unto me: now 'arise, get thee out from this land, and return unto the land of thy kindred.

14 And Rachel and Leah answered and said unto him, 'Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house?

15 Are we not counted of him strangers? for 'he hath sold us, and hath quite devoured also our money.

16 For all the riches which God hath taken from our father, that is our's and our children's; now then, whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do.

17 Then Jacob rose up, and set his sons and his wives upon camels;

18 And he carried away all his cattle, and all his goods which he had gotten, (the cattle of his getting, which he had gotten in Padan-aram,) for to go to Isaac his father in the land of Canaan.

19 And Laban went to shear his sheep: and Rachel had stolen the 'images 'that were her father's.

20 And Jacob stole away 'unawares to Laban the Syrian, in that he told him not that he fled.

21 So he fled with all that he had; and he rose up, and passed over the river, and 'set his face toward the mount Gilead.

22 And it was told Laban on the third day that Jacob was fled.

23 And he took 'his brethren with him, and Verse 12. Grised] Our word grised comes from the old French greslé, hail, now written grêle; hence greslé, grised, spotted with white upon a dark ground.

Verse 15. Are we not counted of him strangers?] He has treated us as strangers—as slaves whom he had a right to dispose of as he pleased; in consequence, he hath sold us—disposed of us, on the mere principle of gaining by the sale.

And hath quite devoured also our money.] Has applied to his own use the profits of the sale, and has allowed us neither portion nor inheritance.

Verse 19. Laban went to shear his sheep] Laban had gone; and this was a favourable time, not only to take his images, but to return to Canaan without being perceived.

Rachel had stolen the images] What these teraphim were is utterly unknown. In ver. 30 they are termed elohai, gods; and to some it appears very likely that they were a sort of images devoted to superstitious purposes, not considered as gods, but as representatives of certain divine attributes.

If the word be derived from rapha, to heal or restore, then the teraphim may be considered as a sort of talismans, kept for the purpose of averting and curing diseases; and probably were kept by Laban for the same purpose that the Romans kept their Lares and Penates. It is however possible that teraphim is the same as seraphim, the tau and sin being changed; which is very frequent in the Syrian or Chaldee language; and we know that Laban was an Aramean or Syrian.

Verse 21. Passed over the river] The Euphrates, as the Targum properly notices. But how could he pass such a river with his flocks, &c.? This difficulty does not seem to have struck critics in general. The rabbins felt it, and assert that God wrought a miracle for Jacob on this occasion, and that he passed over dry-shod. As we know not in what other way he could pass, it is prudent to refer it to the power of God, which accompanied him through the whole of his journey. There might, however, have been fords well known to both Jacob and Laban, by which they might readily pass.

pursued after him seven days' journey; and they overtook him in the mount Gilead.

24 And God came to Laban the Syrian in a dream by night, and said unto him, Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad.

25 Then Laban overtook Jacob. Now Jacob had pitched his tent in the mount: and Laban with his brethren pitched in the mount of Gilead.

26 And Laban said to Jacob, What hast thou done, that thou hast stolen away unawares to me, and carried away my daughters, as captives taken with the sword.

27 Wherefore didst thou flee secretly, and steal away from me; and didst not tell me, that I might have sent thee away with mirth, and with songs, with tabret, and with harp?

28 And hast not suffered me to kiss my sons and my daughters? thou hast now done foolishly in so doing.

29 It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt: but the God of your father spake unto me yesternight, saying, Take thou heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad.

30 And now, though thou wouldest needs be gone, because thou sore longedst after thy father's house, yet wherefore hast thou stolen my gods?

31 And Jacob answered and said to Laban, Because I was afraid: for I said, Peradventure thou wouldest take by force thy daughters from me.

32 With whomsoever thou findest thy gods, let him not live: before our brethren discern thou what is thine with me, and take it to thee. For Jacob knew not that Rachel had stolen them.

33 And Laban went into Jacob's tent, and into Leah's tent, and into the two maid-servants' tents; but he found them not. Then went he out of Leah's tent, and entered into Rachel's tent.

34 Now Rachel had taken the images, and put them in the camel's furniture, and sat upon them. And Laban searched all the tent, but found them not.

35 And she said to her father, Let it not displease my lord that I cannot rise up before thee; for the custom of women is upon me. And he searched, but found not the images.

36 And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban: and Jacob answered and said to Laban, What is my trespass? what is my sin, that thou hast so hotly pursued after me?

37 Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household stuff? set it here before my brethren and thy brethren, that they may judge betwixt us both.

38 This twenty years have I been with thee; thy ewes and thy she-goats have not cast their young, and the rams of thy flock have I not eaten.

39 That which was torn of beasts I brought not unto thee; I bare the loss of it; of my hand didst thou require it, whether stolen by day, or stolen by night.

40 Thus I was; in the day the drought consumed me, and the frost by night; and my sleep departed from mine eyes.

The mount Gilead.] What the ancient name of this mountain was, we know not; but it is likely that it had not the name of Gilead till after the transaction mentioned, ver. 47. The mountains of Gilead were eastward of the country possessed by the tribes of Reuben and Gad; and extended from Mount Hermon to the mountains of Moab.

Verse 24. And God came to Laban.] God's caution to Laban was of high importance to Jacob—Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad; or rather, as is the literal meaning of the Hebrew, from good to evil; for had he neither spoken good or evil to Jacob, they could have had no intercourse at all. The original is, therefore, peculiarly appropriate; for when people meet, the language at first is the language of friendship; the command therefore implies, "Do not begin with Peace be unto thee, and then proceed to injurious language and acts of violence." Beware of unmeaning compliments, and particularly of saying what thy heart feels not. God hates a hypocrite and a deceiver.

Verse 27. I might have sent thee away with mirth.] With rejoicing, making a feast or entertainment on the occasion; and with songs, odes either in the praise of God, or to commemorate the splendid acts of their ancestors; with tabret, which appears to have been precisely the same with that which is called the tambourine, and which is frequently to be met with in our streets. And with harp, a sort of stringed instrument, a lute or harp; probably the same as the Greek kimura, a harp. These four things seem to include all that was used in those primitive times, as expressive of gladness and satisfaction on the most joyous occasions.

Verse 29. It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt.] Literally, My hand is unto God to do you evil, i.e., I have vowed to God that I will punish thee for thy flight, and the stealing of my teraphim; but the God of your father has prevented me from doing it. It is a singular instance that the plural pronoun, when addressing an individual, should be twice used in this place—the God of your father, for thy father.

Verse 32. Let him not live.] It appears that anciently theft was punished by death; and we know that the patri-archs had the power of life and death in their hands. But previously to the law, the punishment of death was scarcely ever inflicted but for murder. The rabbins consider that this was an imprecation used by Jacob, as if he had said, Let God take away the life of the person who has stolen them!

Verse 35. The custom of women is upon me.] This she knew must be a satisfactory reason to her father; for he could not suspect that a woman in such a situation, whose touch was considered as defiling, would have sat upon articles that were either the objects of his adoration, or used for any sacred purpose. The stratagem succeeded to her wish, and Laban departed without suspicion. It seems very natural to suppose that Rachel did believe that by the use of these teraphim Laban could find out their flight, and the direction they took, and therefore she stole them; and having stolen them she was afraid to acknowledge the theft, and probably might think that they might be of some use to herself.

Verse 36. And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban.] Jacob was conscious that though he had made use of cunning to increase his flocks, yet Laban had been on the whole a great gainer by his services. Forty or even twenty years of a man's life, devoted to incessant labour, and constantly exposed to all the inclemencies of the weather (see ver. 40), deserve more than an ordinary reward. Laban's constitutional sin was covetousness, and it was an easily besetting sin; for it appears to have governed all his conduct, and to have rendered him regardless of the interests of his children, so long as he could secure his own. That he had frequently falsified his agreement with Jacob, we have already had reason to conjecture from ver. 7, and with this Jacob charges his father-in-law, in the most positive manner, ver. 41. Perhaps some previous unfair transactions of this kind were the cause why Jacob was led to adopt the expedient of outwitting Laban in the case of the spotted, spangled, ring-straked, and grised cattle.

Verse 39. That which was torn—of my hand didst thou require it.] This more particularly marks the covetous and rigorous disposition of Laban; for the law of God required that what had been torn by beasts the shepherd should not 41 Thus have I been twenty years in thy house; I <sup>a</sup> served thee fourteen years for thy two daughters, and six years for thy cattle: and <sup>b</sup> thou hast changed my wages ten times.

42 <sup>c</sup> Except the God of my father, the God of Abraham, and <sup>d</sup> the fear of Isaac, had been with me, surely thou hadst sent me away now empty. <sup>e</sup> God hath seen mine affliction and the labour of my hands, and <sup>f</sup> rebuked thee yesternight.

43 And Laban answered and said unto Jacob, These daughters are my daughters, and these children are my children, and these cattle are my cattle, and all that thou seest is mine: and what can I do this day unto these my daughters, or unto their children which they have born?

44 Now therefore, come thou, <sup>g</sup> let us make a covenant, I and thou; <sup>h</sup> and let it be for a witness between me and thee.

45 And Jacob <sup>i</sup> took a stone, and set it up for a pillar.

46 And Jacob said unto his brethren, Gather stones; and they took stones, and made an heap: and they did eat there upon the heap.

47 And Laban called it, <sup>j</sup> Jegar-sahadutha: but Jacob called it, <sup>k</sup> Galeed.

48 And Laban said, <sup>l</sup> This heap is a witness between me and thee this day. Therefore was the name of it called Galeed.

49 And <sup>m</sup> Mizpah; <sup>n</sup> for he said, The LORD watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another.

50 If thou shalt afflict my daughters, or if thou shalt take other wives beside my daughters, (no man <sup>o</sup> is with us;) see, God <sup>p</sup> is witness betwixt me and thee.

51 And Laban said to Jacob, Behold this heap, and behold <sup>q</sup> this pillar, which I have cast betwixt me and thee;

52 This heap <sup>r</sup> be witness, and <sup>s</sup> this pillar <sup>t</sup> be witness, that I will not pass over this heap to thee, and that thou shalt not pass over this heap and this pillar unto me, for harm.

53 The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, the God of their father, <sup>u</sup> judge betwixt us. And Jacob <sup>v</sup> sware by <sup>w</sup> the fear of his father Isaac.

54 Then Jacob <sup>x</sup> offered sacrifice upon the mount, and called his brethren to eat bread: and they did eat bread, and tarried all night in the mount.

be obliged to make good, Exod. xxii. 10, 13. And it is very likely that this law was in force from the earliest times.

Verse 42. The fear of Isaac] It is strange that Jacob should say, the God of Abraham, and the FEAR of Isaac, when both words are meant of the same Being. The reason perhaps was this: Abraham was long since dead, and God was his unalienable portion for ever. Isaac was yet alive in a state of probation, living in the fear of God, not exempt from the danger of falling; therefore God is said to be his fear—not only the object of his religious worship in a general way, but that holy and just God before whom he was still working out his salvation with fear and trembling—fear lest he should fall, and trembling lest he should offend.

Verse 46. Made an heap] Probably for the double purpose of an altar and a table, and Jacob's stone or pillar was set on it for the purpose of a memorial.

Verse 47. Laban called it Jegar-sahadutha] The first is pure Chaldee, the second pure Hebrew. [Probably Laban invoked the gods of Nahor, while Jacob called upon the God of Abraham.] From this example we may infer that the Chaldee language was nearly coeval with the Hebrew. A gloss made by St. Jerome, and which was probably only entered by him in his margin as a note, has crept into the text of the Vulgate. It is found in every copy of this Version, and is as follows: Uterque iuxta proprietatem linguæ suæ, Each according to the idiom of his own tongue.

Verses 48, 49. I think these two verses are badly divided, and should be read thus:

Verse 48. And Laban said, This heap is a witness between me and thee this day.

Verse 49. Therefore was the name of it called Galeed and Mizpah; for he said, The Lord watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another.

Mizpah] Signifies a watch-tower; and Laban supposes that in consequence of the consecration of the place, and the covenant now solemnly made and ratified, God would take possession of this heap, and stand on it as on a watch-tower, to prevent either of them from trenching on the conditions of their covenant.

Verse 50. No man is with us] Though all were present at the sacrifice offered, yet it appears that in making the contract Jacob and Laban withdrew, and transacted the business in private, calling on God to witness it.

Jacob had already four wives; but Laban feared that he might take others, whose children would naturally come in for a share of the inheritance, to the prejudice of his daughters and grandchildren.

Verse 51. And Laban said to Jacob—behold this pillar, which I have cast betwixt me and thee] But this pillar, not cast but set up, was certainly set up by Jacob. Instead of the above reading the Samaritan text has, The pillar which thou seest betwixt me and thee. [The notion of Kalisch is worth considering: that as the worshipper of the true God and the idolater could not form an alliance on the same basis, the pillar was the witness for Jacob, and the heap for Laban.]

Verse 53. The God of their father] As Laban certainly speaks of the true God here, with what propriety can he say that this God was the God of Terah, the father of Abraham and Nahor? It is certain that Terah was an idolater; of this we have the most positive proof, Josh. xxiv. 2. Because the clause is not in the Septuagint, and is besides wanting in some MSS., Dr. Kennicott considers it an interpolation. But there is no need of having recourse to this expedient if we adopt the reading abihem, YOUR father, for abihem, THEIR father, which is supported by several of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and is precisely the same form made use of by Laban, ver. 29, when addressing Jacob. [It is possible that Laban, in conformity with his polytheistic views, placed the God of Abraham on a level with the God of Nahor and the God of Terah. Or he might have thought Abraham had not ceased to recognize his ancestral deities.]

Verse 54. Offered sacrifice upon the mount] It is very likely that Laban joined in this solemn religious rite, and that, having offered the blood and fat to God, they feasted upon the sacrifice.

Verse 55. Kissed his sons and his daughters] That is, his grandchildren, Jacob's eleven sons with Dinah their sister, and their mothers Leah and Rachel. All these he calls his children, ver. 48. And blessed them—prayed heartily for their prosperity, though we find from ver. 29 that he came having bound himself by a vow to God to do them some injury. Thus God turned his intended curse into a blessing.

Jacob's character we have already seen, and hitherto have met in it little to admire; but we shall soon find a blessed change both in his mind and in his conduct. Laban's character appears in almost every instance to disadvantage;

he does not seem to be what we commonly term a wicked man, but he was certainly both weak and covetous. Provided he could get an increase of property, he regarded not who was wronged or who suffered. How watchful should we be against this destructive, unnatural, and degrading vice! It is impossible for a man who loves money to love either God or man; and consequently he must be in the broad way that leads to destruction.

For the difficulties in the chronology of Jacob's sojourning in Padan-aram, I refer the reader to the Remarks upon Gen. xxxi. 38, &c., by Dr. Kennicott.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Jacob, proceeding on his journey, is met by the angels of God, 1, 2. Sends messengers before him to his brother Esau, requesting to be favourably received, 3-5. The messengers return without an answer, but with the intelligence that Esau, with four hundred men, was coming to meet Jacob, 6. He is greatly alarmed, and adopts prudent means for the safety of himself and family, 7, 8. His affecting prayer to God, 9-12. Prepares a present of five droves of different cattle for his brother, 13-15. Sends them forward before him, at a certain distance from each other, and instructs the drivers what to say when met by Esau, 15-20. Sends his wives, servants, children, and baggage, over the brook Jabbok, by night, 21-23. Himself stays behind, and wrestles with an angel until the break of day, 24. He prevails, and gets a new name, 25-29. Calls the name of the place Peniel, 30. Is lame in his thigh in consequence of his wrestling with the angel, 31, 32.

AND Jacob went on his way, and <sup>a</sup>the angels of God met him.

2 And when Jacob saw them, he said, This <sup>b</sup>is God's <sup>c</sup>host: and he called the name of that place <sup>d</sup>Mahanaim.

3 And Jacob sent messengers before him to Esau his brother, <sup>e</sup>unto the land of Seir, <sup>f</sup>the <sup>g</sup>'country of Edom.

4 And he commanded them, saying, <sup>h</sup>Thus shall ye speak unto my lord Esau; Thy servant Jacob saith thus: I have sojourned with Laban, and stayed there until now:

5 And <sup>i</sup> I have oxen, and asses, flocks, and men-servants, and women-servants: and I have sent to tell my lord, that <sup>j</sup>I may find grace in thy sight.

6 And the messengers returned to Jacob, saying, We came to thy brother Esau, and also <sup>k</sup>he cometh to meet thee, and four hundred men with him.

7 Then Jacob was greatly afraid and <sup>l</sup>distressed: and he divided the people that was with him, and the flocks, and herds, and the camels, into two bands:

8 And said, If Esau come to the one company, and smite it, then the other company which is left shall escape.

Verse 1. The angels of God met him.] Our word angel comes from the Greek angelos, which literally signifies a messenger; or, as translated in some of our old Bibles, a tidings-bringer. The Hebrew word malach, is nearly of the same import; and hence we may see the propriety of St. Augustine's remark: Nomen non naturæ sed officii, "it is a name, not of nature, but of office;" and hence it is applied indifferently to a human agent or messenger, 2 Sam. ii. 5; to a prophet, Hag. i. 13; to a priest, Mal. ii. 7; to celestial spirits, Ps. ciii. 19, 20, 22; civ. 4.

Verse 2. Mahanaim.] The two hosts, if read by the points, the angels forming one, and Jacob and his company forming another; or simply hosts or camps in the plural. There was a city built afterwards here, and inhabited by the priests of God, Josh. xxi. 38. For what purpose the angels of God met Jacob does not appear from the text; probably it was intended to show him that he and his company were under the care of an especial providence, and consequently to confirm his trust and confidence in God.

The doctrine of the ministration of angels has been much abused, not only among the heathens, but also among Jews and Christians, and perhaps most among the latter. Angels with feigned names, titles, and influences, have been and still are invoked and worshipped by a certain class of men. This is perfectly absurd. 1. They are God's instruments, not self-determining agents. 2. They can only do what they are appointed to perform, for there is no evidence that they have any discretionary power. 3. God helps man by ten thousand means and instruments; some intellectual, as angels; some rational, as men; some irrational, as brutes; and some merely material, as the sun, wind, rain, food, raiment, and the various productions of the earth. He therefore helps by whom he will help, and to him alone belongs all the glory; for should he be determined to destroy, all these instruments collectively could not save. Instead therefore of worshipping them, we should take their own advice: See thou do it not—Worship God.

Verse 3. Jacob sent messengers] The same word which is before translated angels. It is very likely that these messengers had been sent some time before he had this vision at Mahanaim, for they appear to have returned while Jacob encamped at the brook Jabbok, where he had the vision of angels.

The land of Seir, the country of Edom.] This land which was situated on the south of the Dead Sea, extending from thence to the Arabian Gulf, 1 Kings ix. 26, was formerly possessed by the Horites, Gen. xiv. 6; but Esau with his children drove them out, destroyed them, and dwelt in their stead, Deut. ii. 22; and thither Esau went from the face of his brother Jacob, chap. xxxvi. 6, 7.

Verse 4. Thus shall ye speak unto my lord Esau] Jacob acknowledges the superiority of his brother; for the time was not yet come in which it could be said, The elder shall serve the younger.

Verse 6. Esau—cometh—and four hundred men with him.] Jacob, conscious that he had injured his brother, was now apprehensive that he was coming with hostile intentions, and that he had every evil to fear from his displeasure. Conscience is a terrible accuser.

It does not appear that Esau in this meeting had any hostile intention, but was really coming with a part of his servants or tribe to do his brother honour. If he had had any contrary intention, God had removed it; and the angelic host which Jacob met with before might have inspired him with sufficient confidence in God's protection.

Verse 7. He divided the people, &c.] His prudence and cunning were now turned into a right channel, for he took the most effectual method to appease his brother, had he been irritated, and save at least a part of his family. This dividing and arranging of his flocks, family, and domestics, has some-and God of my father Isaac, the LORD<sup>a</sup> which saidst unto me, Return unto thy country, and to thy kindred, and I will deal well with thee:

10<sup>b</sup> I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies, and of all the truth, which thou hast shewed unto thy servant; for with<sup>d</sup> my staff I passed over this Jordan; and now I am become two bands.

11<sup>c</sup> Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau: for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me, and<sup>e</sup> the mother<sup>f</sup> with the children.

12 And<sup>h</sup> thou saidst, I will surely do thee good, and make thy seed as the sand of the sea, which cannot be numbered for multitude.

13 And he lodged there that same night; and took of that which came to his hand<sup>g</sup> a present for Esau his brother:

14 Two hundred she-goats, and twenty he-goats, two hundred ewes, and twenty rams.

15 Thirty milch camels with their colts, forty kine, and ten bulls, twenty she-asses, and ten foals.

16 And he delivered them into the hand of his servants, every drove by themselves; and said unto his servants, Pass over before me, and put a space betwixt drove and drove.

17 And he commanded the foremost, saying, When Esau my brother meeteth thee, and asketh thee, saying, Whose art thou? and whither goest thou? and whose are these before thee?

18 Then thou shalt say, They be thy servant Jacob's; it is a present sent unto my lord Esau: and, behold, also he is behind us.

19 And so commanded he the second, and the third, and all that followed the droves, saying, On this manner shall ye speak unto Esau, when ye find him.

20 And say ye moreover, Behold, thy servant Jacob is behind us. For he said, I will<sup>i</sup> appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face: peradventure he will accept<sup>k</sup> of me.

21 So went the present over before him; and himself lodged that night in the company.

22 And he rose up that night, and took his two wives, and his two women-servants, and his eleven sons,<sup>l</sup> and passed over the ford Jabbok.

23 And he took them, and<sup>m</sup> sent them over the brook, and sent over that he had.

24 And Jacob was left alone; and there<sup>n</sup> wrestled a man with him until the<sup>o</sup> breaking of the day.

25 And when he saw that he prevailed not against him, he touched the hollow of his thigh; and<sup>p</sup> the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, as he wrestled with him.

26 And<sup>q</sup> he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh:

thing in it highly characteristic. To such a man as Jacob such expedients would naturally present themselves.

Verse 9. O God of my father Abraham, &c.] This prayer is remarkable for its simplicity and energy; and it is a model too for prayer, of which it contains the essential constituents: 1. Deep self-abasement. 2. Magnification of God's mercy. 3. Deprecation of the evil to which he was exposed. 4. Pleading the promises that God had made to him. And 5. Taking encouragement from what God had already wrought.

Verse 10. I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies] The marginal reading is more consistent with the original: I am less than all the compassions, and than all the faithfulness, which thou hast showed unto thy servant. Probably St. Paul had his eye on this passage when he wrote, Unto me who am less than the least of all saints. A man who sees himself in the light of God will ever feel that he has no good but what he has received, and that he deserves nothing of all that he has. The archangels of God cannot use a different language, and even the spirits of just men consummated in their plenitude of bliss, cannot make a higher boast.

Verse 11. And the mother with the children.] He must have had an awful opinion of his brother when he used this expression, which implies the utmost cruelty, proceeding in the work of slaughter to total extermination.

Verse 12. Make thy seed as the sand] Having come to the promise by which the covenant was ratified both to Abraham and Isaac, he ceased, his faith having gained strong confirmation in a promise which he knew could not fail, and which he found was made over to him, as it had been to his father and grandfather.

Verse 13. And took of that which came to his hand] Which came under his hand, i.e., what, in the course of God's providence, came under his power.

Verse 14. Two hundred she-goats, &c.] This was a princely present, and such as was sufficient to have compensated Esau for any kind of temporal loss he might have sustained in being deprived of his birth-right and blessing. The thirty milch camels were particularly valuable, for milch camels among the Arabs constitute a principal part of their riches, the creature being every way so serviceable that the providence of God appears peculiarly kind and wise in providing such a beast for those countries where no other animal could be of equal service.

Verse 15. Ten bulls] By all this we see that Jacob was led to make restitution for the injury he had done to his brother. Restitution for injuries done to man is essentially requisite if in our power. He who can and will not make restitution for the wrongs he has done, can have no claim even on the mercy of God.

Verse 22. Passed over the ford Jabbok.] This brook or rivulet rises in the mountains of Gilead, and falls into the Jordan at the south extremity of the lake of Gennesaret. [Now called the Wady Zerka, or blue river.]

Verse 24. And there wrestled a man with him] This was doubtless the Lord Jesus Christ, who, among the patriarchs, assumed that human form, which in the fulness of time he really took of a woman, and in which he dwelt thirty-three years among men.

But it may be asked, Had he here a real human body, or only its form? The latter, doubtless. How then could he wrestle with Jacob? It need not be supposed that this angel must have assumed a human body, or something analogous to it, in order to render himself tangible by Jacob; for as the soul operates on the body by the order of God, so could an angel operate on the body of Jacob during a whole night, and produce in his imagination, by the effect of his power, every requisite idea of corporeity, and in his nerves every sensation of substance, and yet no substantiality be in the case.

From Hos. xii. 4, we may learn that the wrestling of Jacob, mentioned in this place, was not merely a corporeal exercise, but also a spiritual one; He wept and made supplication unto him. See the notes there.

Verse 25. The hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint] What this implies it is difficult to find out; it is not likely that it was a complete luxation of the thigh bone. It may mean no more than he received a stroke on the groin, not a touch; for the Hebrew word often signifies to smite with violence, which stroke, even if comparatively slight, would effectually disable him for a time, and cause him to halt for many hours, if not for several days. I might add that in this place—the groin, a blow might be of fatal consequence; but as the angel gave it only as a proof of his power, and to show that he could not prevail because he would not, hence the blow was only disabling, without being dangerous; and he was probably cured by the time the sun rose.

Verse 26. Let me go, for the day breaketh] Though phantoms are supposed to disappear when the sun rises, that

And he said, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.

27 And he said unto him, What is thy name? And he said, Jacob.

28 And he said, "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but 'Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed.

29 And Jacob asked him, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, thy name. And he said, 'Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? And he blessed him there.

* Hos. xli. 4.—Ch. xxxv. 10. † Kings xvii. 34.—That is, a prince of God.—Hos. xli. 3, 4.—Ch. xxv. 31. xxvii. 33.—Judg. xlii. 18.—That is, the face of God.—Ch. xvi.

could be no reason in this case. Most of the angelic appearances mentioned in the Old and New Testaments took place in open day, which put their reality out of question.

Verse 28. Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel. Yisrael, from sar, a prince, and el, God; or rather from ish, a man (the aleph being dropped), and raah, he saw, el, God; and this corresponds with the name which Jacob imposed on the place, calling it peniel, the faces of God, or of Elohim, which faces being manifested to him caused him to say, verse 30, "I have seen the Elohim faces to faces (i.e., fully and completely, without any medium), and my soul is redeemed."

We may learn from this that the redemption of the soul will be the blessed consequence of wrestling by prayer and supplication with God: "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." From this time Jacob became a new man; but it was not till after a severe struggle that he got his name, his heart, and his character changed. After this he was no more Jacob the supplanter, but Israel—the man who prevails with God, and sees him face to face.

And hast prevailed.] More literally, Thou hast had power with God, and with man thou shalt also prevail. There is a beautiful apposition here between the two words: Seeing thou hast been powerful with the Almighty, surely thou shalt prevail over perishing mortals. He has never said to the seed of Jacob, Seek ye my face in vain. He who wrestles must prevail.

Verse 29. Tell me, I pray thee, thy name. It is very likely that Jacob wished to know the name of this angel, that he might invoke him in his necessities: but this might have led him into idolatry, for the doctrine of the Incarnation could be but little understood at this time; hence, he refuses to give himself any name, yet shows himself to be the true God, and so Jacob understood him (see verse 28); but he wished to have heard from his own lips that name by which he desired to be invoked and worshipped.

Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? Canst thou be ignorant who I am? And he blessed him there—gave him the new heart and the new nature which God alone can give to fallen man, and by the change he wrought in him, sufficiently showed who he was.

Verse 31. The sun rose upon him. Possibly with the rising of the sun, which may here be understood as emblematical of the Sun of righteousness—the Lord Jesus, the pain and weakness of his thigh passed away, and he felt both in soul and body that he was healed of his plagues.

Verse 32. Therefore the children of Israel eat not of the sinew. What this sinew was neither Jew nor Christian can tell; and it can add nothing either to science, or to a true understanding of the text, to multiply conjectures. I have already supposed that what the angel touched or struck was 30 And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel: for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved.

31 And as he passed over Penuel the sun rose upon him, and he halted upon his thigh.

32 Therefore the children of Israel eat not of the sinew which shrank, which is upon the hollow of the thigh, unto this day: because he touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh in the sinew that shrank.

18. Exod. xxiv. 11. xxxlii. 20. Deut. v. 25. Judg. vi. 22. xlii 22. Isa. vi. 5.—Mal. iv. 2.—1 Sam. v. 5.

the groin; and if this be right, the sinew, nerve, or muscle that shrank, must be sought for in that place. [The nervous ischiadicus is still avoided by the Jews in eating.]

1. After his reconciliation with Laban, Jacob proceeds on his way to Canaan; and God provided for him the instructive vision of angels, that he might see that those who were for him were more than those who could be against him. A proper consideration of God's omniscience is of the utmost advantage to every genuine Christian. He knows whereof we are made, he remembers that we are but dust, he sees our trials and difficulties, and his eye affects his heart.

2. Jacob's recollection of his unkindness and injustice to his brother, fills his soul with fear, and obliges him to betake himself to God by prayer and supplication. How important is the office of conscience! And how necessary are times of trial and difficulty when its voice is loudest, and the heart is best prepared to receive its reproofs! In how many cases has conscience stumbled till it pleased God to send some trial by which it has been powerfully awakened, and the salvation of the sinner was the result! Before I was afflicted I went astray.

3. Though salvation be the free gift of God, yet he gives it not to any who do not earnestly seek it. The deeper the conviction of guilt and helplessness is, the more earnest the application to God for mercy is likely to be. They whose salvation costs them strong crying and tears, are not likely (humanly speaking) to part with it lightly; they remember the vinegar and the gall, and they watch and pray that they enter not into temptation.

4. In the strife and agony requisite to enter in at the strait gate, it is highly necessary that we should know that the grace and salvation of God are not purchased by our tears, &c.; for those things which are only proofs and arguments that we have sinned, can never remove the iniquity of our transgressions. God marks even this strife, though highly pleasing in his sight, with such proofs of its own utter insufficiency, that we may carry about with us the memorial of our own weakness, worthlessness, and slowness of heart to believe. God smote the thigh of Jacob, 1. That he might know he had not prevailed by his own strength, but by the power and mercy of God. 2. That he might have the most sensible evidence of the reality of the divine interposition in his behalf. 3. That he might see God's displeasure against his unbelief. And 4. That men in general might be taught, that those who will be the disciples of Christ must deny themselves, take up their cross daily, and mortify their members which are upon the earth. Those who have not cut off a right hand or foot, or plucked out a right eye, for the kingdom of heaven's sake, are never likely to see God. The religion that costs us nothing, is to us worth nothing.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Esau, with four hundred men, meets Jacob, 1. He places his children under their respective mothers, passes over before them, and bows himself to his brother, 2, 3. Esau receives him with great affection, 4. Receives the homage of the handmaids, Leah, Rachel, and their children, 5-7. Jacob offers him the present of cattle, which he at first refuses, but after much entreaty accepts, 8-11. Invites Jacob to accompany him to Mount Seir, 12. Jacob excuses himself because of his flocks and his children, but promises to follow him, 13, 14. Esau offers to leave him some of his attendants, which Jacob declines, 15. Esau returns to Seir, 16, and Jacob journeys to Succoth, 17, and to Shalem, in the land of Canaan, 18. Buys a parcel of ground from the children of Hamor, 19, and erects an altar which he calls El-elohe-Israel, 20.

AND Jacob lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, <sup>a</sup>Esau came, and with him four hundred men. And he divided the children unto Leah, and unto Rachel and unto the two handmaids.

2 And he put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindmost.

3 And he passed over before them, and <sup>b</sup>bowed himself to the ground seven times, until he came near to his brother.

4 <sup>c</sup>And Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, and fell on his neck, and kissed him: and they wept.

5 And he lifted up his eyes, and saw the women and the children: and said, Who are those <sup>d</sup>with thee? And he said, The children <sup>e</sup>which God hath graciously given thy servant.

6 Then the handmaidens came near, they and their children, and they bowed themselves.

7 And Leah also with her children came near, and bowed themselves: and after came Joseph near, and Rachel, and they bowed themselves.

8 And he said, <sup>f</sup>What meanest thou by <sup>g</sup>all this drove which I met? And he said, these are <sup>h</sup>to find grace in the sight of my lord.

9 And Esau said, I have enough, my brother; <sup>i</sup>keep that thou hast unto thyself.

10 And Jacob said, Nay, I pray thee, if now I have found grace in thy sight, then receive my present at my hand; for therefore I <sup>k</sup>have seen thy face, as though I had seen the face of God, and thou wast pleased with me.

11 Take, I pray thee, <sup>l</sup>my blessing that is brought to thee; because God hath dealt graciously with me, and because I have <sup>m</sup>enough. <sup>n</sup>And he urged him; and he took it.

12 And he said, Let us take our journey, and let us go and I will go before thee.

13 And he said unto him, My lord knoweth that the children are tender, and the flocks and herds with young are with me; and if men should overdrive them one day, all the flock will die.

14 Let my lord, I pray thee, pass over before his servant; and I will lead on softly, according <sup>o</sup>as the cattle that goeth before me and the children be able to endure, until I come unto my lord <sup>p</sup>unto Seir.

15 And Esau said, Let me now <sup>q</sup>leave with thee some of the folk that are with me; and he said, <sup>r</sup>What needeth it? <sup>s</sup>let me find grace in the sight of my lord.

16 So Esau returned that day on his way unto Seir.

17 And Jacob journeyed to <sup>t</sup>Succoth, and built him an house, and made booths for his cattle; therefore the name of the place is called <sup>u</sup>Succoth.

Verse 1. Behold, Esau came, and with him four hundred men.] It has been generally supposed that Esau came with an intention to destroy his brother, and for that purpose brought with him four hundred armed men. But, 1. There is no kind of evidence of this pretended hostility. 2. There is no proof that the four hundred men that Esau brought with him were at all armed. 3. But there is every proof that he acted towards his brother Jacob with all openness and candour, and with such a forgetfulness of past injuries as none but a great mind could have been capable of. Why then should the character of this man be perpetually vilified? Here is the secret. With some people, on the most ungrounded assumption, Esau is a reprobate, and the type and figure of all reprobates, and therefore he must be everything that is bad. This serves a system; but, whether true or false in itself, it has neither countenance nor support from the character or conduct of Esau.

Verse 2. He put the handmaids and their children foremost.] There is something so artificial in this arrangement of Jacob's family, that it must have had some peculiar design. Was Jacob still apprehensive of danger, and put those foremost whom he least esteemed, that if the foremost met with any evil, those who were behind might escape on their swift beasts? chap. xxxii. 7, 8. Or did he intend to keep his choicest treasure to the last, and exhibit his beautiful Rachel and favourite Joseph after Esau had seen all the rest, in order to make the deeper impression on his mind?

Verse 4. Esau ran to meet him.] How sincere and genuine is this conduct of Esau, and at the same time how magnanimous! He had buried all his resentment, and forgotten all his injuries; and receives his brother with the strongest demonstrations, not only of forgiveness, but of fraternal affection.

Verse 10. Receive my present at my hand.] Jacob could not be certain that he had found favour with Esau, unless the present had been received; for in accepting it Esau necessarily became his friend, according to the custom of those times and in that country.

Verse 14. Until I come unto my lord unto Seir.] It is very likely that Jacob was perfectly sincere in his expressed purpose of visiting Esau at Seir, but it is as likely that circumstances afterwards occurred that rendered it either improper or impracticable; and we find that Esau afterwards removed to Canaan, and he and Jacob dwelt there together for several years.

Verse 17. Journeyed to Succoth.] So called from the booths or tents, which Jacob erected there for the resting and convenience of his family, who in all probability continued there for some considerable time.

19 And <sup>d</sup>he bought a parcel of a field, where he

Verse 18. And Jacob came to Shalem, a city of Shechem] The word shalem should be translated here in peace, or in safety. Shechem is called in Acts vii. 16, Sychem, and in John iv. 5, Sychar; in the Arabic it is called Nablous, and to the present day Neapolis.

Verse 19. For an hundred pieces of money.] As kesitah signifies a lamb, it may imply that Jacob gave the Hamorites one hundred lambs for the field. But all circumstances weighed, most likely a piece of money is here intended, and possibly marked with the image of a lamb; though as the original word kesitah occurs only here, and in Josh. xxiv. 32, and Job xlii. 11, this is not sufficiently evident, the word itself being of very doubtful signification.

Verse 20. And he erected there an altar] It appears that Jacob had a very correct notion of the providence and mercy of God. Hence he viewed God as the God of all grace, and to him he erects an altar, dedicating it to God, the God of Israel, referring particularly to the change of his own name, and the mercies which he then received; and hence perhaps it would be best to translate the words, The strong God (is) the God of Israel; as by the power of his grace and goodness he had rescued, defended, blessed, and supported him from his youth up until now. The erecting altars with particular names appears in other places; so, had spread his tent, at the hand of the children of <sup>a</sup>Hamor, Shechem's father, for an hundred <sup>b</sup>pieces of money.

20 And he erected there an altar; and <sup>c</sup>called it <sup>b</sup>El-elohe-Israel.

Exod. xvii. 15, Moses calls his altar Jehovah-nissi, "the Lord is my banner."

1. When a man's ways please God, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him. When Jacob had got reconciled to God, God reconciled his brother to him. The hearts of all men are in the hands of God, and he turns them howsoever he will.

2. Since the time in which Jacob wrestled with the Angel of the Covenant, we see in him much dependence on God, accompanied with a spirit of deep humility and gratitude. God's grace alone can change the heart of man, and it is by that grace only that we get a sense of our obligations; this lays us in the dust, and the more we receive the lower we shall lie.

3. Jacob buys a piece of ground, and erects an altar on it in the land of a heathen, that he might acknowledge God among his enemies, and turn them to the true faith; and there is every reason to believe that this expedient would have been successful, had it not been for the base conduct of his sons. How true is the saying, One sinner spoileth much good! Reader, beware lest thy conduct should become a stumbling block to any.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Dinah, the daughter of Jacob and Leah, going out to see the daughters of the land, is ravished by Shechem, the son of Hamor, 1, 2. He entreats his father to get her for him to wife, 3. Jacob and his sons hear of the indignity offered to Dinah, 5-7. Hamor proposes the suit of Shechem to Jacob and his sons, and offers them a variety of advantages, 8-10. Shechem himself comes forward, begs to have Dinah to wife, and offers dowry to any extent, 11, 12. The sons of Jacob pretend scruples of conscience to give their sister to one who was uncircumcised; and require, as a condition of this marriage, and of intermarriages in general, that all the Shechemites should be circumcised, 13-17. Hamor and Shechem consent, 18, 19. They lay the business before the elders of their city, dwell on the advantages of a connexion with Jacob and his family, and propose to them the condition required by the sons of Jacob, 20-23. The elders consent, and all the males are circumcised, 24. While the Shechemites are incapable of defending themselves on the third day after their circumcision, Simeon and Levi, the brothers of Dinah, came upon the city, slew all the males, sacked the city, took the women and children captives, and seized on all the cattle belonging to the Shechemites, 25-29. Jacob is greatly displeased and alarmed at the treachery and cruelty of his sons, and lays before them the probable consequences, 30. They endeavour to vindicate their conduct, 31.

Verse 1. And Dinah—went out to see the daughters of the land.] It is supposed that Jacob had been now about seven or eight years in the land, and that Dinah, who was but about seven years of age when Jacob came to Canaan, was now about fourteen or fifteen. Why or on what occasion she went out we know not, but the reason given by Josephus is very probable, viz. that it was on one of their festivals.

3 And his soul clave unto Dinah the daughter of Jacob; and he loved the damsel, and spake <sup>a</sup>kindly unto the damsel.

4 And Shechem <sup>b</sup>spake unto his father Hamor, saying, Get me this damsel to wife.

5 And Jacob heard that he had defiled Dinah his

Verse 2. Prince of the country] Our Version appears to represent Shechem as prince, but his father was the chief of the country.

Verse 3. Spake kindly unto the damsel.] Literally, he spake to the heart of the damsel—endeavoured to gain her affections, and to reconcile her to her disgrace. It appears sufficiently evident from this and the preceding verse that there had been no consent on the part of Dinah, that the whole was an daughter: now his sons were with his cattle in the field; and Jacob <sup>a</sup>held his peace until they were come.

6 And Hamor the father of Shechem went out unto Jacob to commune with him.

7 And the sons of Jacob came out of the field when they heard it: and the men were grieved, and they <sup>b</sup>were very wroth, because he <sup>c</sup>had wrought folly in Israel, in lying with Jacob's daughter; <sup>d</sup>which thing ought not to be done.

8 And Hamor communed with them, saying, The soul of my son Shechem longeth for your daughter: I pray you give her him to wife.

9 And make ye marriages with us, and give your daughters unto us, and take our daughters unto you.

10 And ye shall dwell with us: and <sup>e</sup>the land shall be before you; dwell and <sup>f</sup>trade ye therein, and <sup>g</sup>get you possessions therein.

11 And Shechem said unto her father and unto her brethren, Let me find grace in your eyes, and what ye shall say unto me I will give.

12 Ask me never so much <sup>h</sup>dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife.

13 And the sons of Jacob answered Shechem and Hamor his father <sup>i</sup>deceitfully, (and said, Because he had defiled Dinah their sister:)

14 And they said unto them, We cannot do this thing, to give our sister to one that is uncircumcised: for <sup>j</sup>that were a reproach unto us:

15 But in this will we consent unto you: If ye will be as we <sup>k</sup>be, that every male of you be circumcised;

16 Then will we give our daughters unto you, and we will take your daughters to us; and we will dwell with you, and we will become one people.

17 But if ye will not hearken unto us, to be circumcised; then will we take our daughter, and we will be gone.

act of violence, and that she was now detained by force in the house of Shechem. Here she was found when Simeon and Levi sacked the city, verse 26.

Verse 7. He had wrought folly in Israel] The land, afterwards generally called Israel, was not as yet so named; and the sons of Jacob were neither called Israel, Israelites, nor Jews, till long after this. How then can it be said that Shechem had wrought folly in Israel? The words may be translated, against Israel. The angel had said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob—but only Jacob, but Israel. It was this that aggravated the offence of Shechem; he wrought folly against Israel, the prince of God, in lying with the daughter of Jacob. Here both the names are given: Jacob, whose daughter was defiled, and Israel, the prince of God, against whom the offence was committed.

Verse 13. Answered—deceitfully] Which nothing could excuse; yet, to show that they had had much provocation, it is immediately subjoined they spoke thus because he had defiled Dinah their sister; for so this parenthesis should be read.

Verse 14. That were a reproach unto us] To have given an heiress of the promise to one who was not circumcised, and who had no kind of right to its spiritual blessings, from whom might spring children who would naturally walk in the way of their father, would have been absurd, reproachful, and wicked. Thus far they were perfectly right; but to make this holy principle a cloak for their deceitful and murderous purposes, was the full sum of wickedness.

Verse 17. Then will we take our daughter, and we will be 18 And their words pleased Hamor, and Shechem Hamor's son.

19 And the young man deferred not to do the thing, because he had delight in Jacob's daughter: and he <sup>l</sup>was <sup>m</sup>more honourable than all the house of his father.

20 And Hamor and Shechem his son came unto the gate of their city, and communed with the men of their city, saying, 21 These men <sup>n</sup>are peaceable with us; therefore let them dwell in the land, and trade therein; for the land, behold, <sup>o</sup>it is large enough for them; let us take their daughters to us for wives, and let us give them our daughters.

22 Only herein will the men consent unto us for to dwell with us, to be one people, if every male among us be circumcised, as they <sup>p</sup>are circumcised.

23 Shall not their cattle and their substance and every beast of theirs be ours? only let us consent unto them, and they will dwell with us.

24 And unto Hamor and unto Shechem his son hearkened all that <sup>q</sup>went out of the gate of his city: and every male was circumcised, all that went out of the gate of his city.

25 And it came to pass on the third day, when they were sore, that two of the sons of Jacob, <sup>r</sup>Simeon and Levi, Dinah's brethren, took each man his sword, and came upon the city boldly, and slew all the males.

26 And they slew Hamor and Shechem his son with the <sup>s</sup>edge of the sword, and took Dinah out of Shechem's house, and went out.

27 The sons of Jacob came upon the slain, and spoiled the city, because they had defiled their sister.

28 They took their sheep, and their oxen, and their asses, and that which <sup>t</sup>was in the city, and that which <sup>u</sup>was in the field, gone.] It is natural to suppose that the tribe of Hamor was very inconsiderable, else they would not have sought an alliance with the family of Jacob, and have come so readily into a painful, disgraceful measure, without having either the sanction of divine authority or reason; for it does not appear that the sons of Jacob urged either.

Verse 23. Shall not their cattle and their substance—be ours?] This was a bait held out for the poor unsuspecting people of Hamor by their prince and his son, who were not much less deceived than the people themselves.

Verse 24. Every male was circumcised] These people must have had very great affection for their chief and his son, or have been under the influence of the most passive obedience, to have come so readily into this measure, and to have submitted to this rite. But the petty princes in Asiatic countries have ever been absolute and despotic, their subjects paying them the most prompt and blind obedience.

Verse 25. On the third day, when they were sore] When the inflammation was at the height, and a fever ensued which rendered the person utterly helpless, and his state critical, Simeon and Levi, the half-brothers of Dinah, took each man his sword, probably assisted by that portion of the servants which helped them to take care of the flock, came on the city boldly, securely—without being suspected, and being in no danger of meeting with resistance, and slew all the males. Great as the provocation was, and it certainly was very great, this was an act of unparalleled treachery and cruelty.

Verse 27. The sons of Jacob] The rest of Jacob's sons, the remaining brothers of Simeon and Levi, spoiled the city.

and their wives took they captive; and spoiled even all that was in the house.

Verse 30. Ye have troubled me] Brought my mind into great distress, and endangered my personal safety; to make me to stink—to render me odious to the surrounding tribes, so that there is every reason to suspect that when this deed is come abroad they will join in a confederacy against me, and extirpate my whole family. And had he not been under the peculiar protection of God, this in all human probability would have been the case; but he had prevailed with God, and he was also to prevail with men. That Jacob's resentment was not dissembled we have the fullest proof in his depriving these two sons of the birth-right, which otherwise they had doubtless enjoyed.

Verse 31. Should he deal with our sister as with an harlot?] On this outrage alone they vindicated their flagitious conduct. The word harlot first occurs here: the original is zonah, which ordinarily signifies one who prostitutes herself to any person for hire.

Had not Dinah gone out to see the daughters of the land, and very possibly at one of their idolatrous festivals, she had not suffered the foul disgrace mentioned in this chapter. Not only prudence dictates that young women should keep at home, but God expressly commands it, Tit. ii. 5. How true is the saying, Those who wander out of the way of understanding shall abide in the congregation of the dead! In the case before us blame seems to attach to all parties.

1. It was wrong in Jacob to suffer his daughter, alone and unprotected, to visit the daughters of the land.

2. It was excessively wicked in Shechem to take this advantage of the daughter of a respectable stranger, who had sought his friendship, and came to sojourn among his people, and whose righteous dealing they must have witnessed for Perizzites: 'and I being few in number, they shall gather themselves together against me, and slay me; and I shall be destroyed, I and my house.

31 And they said, Should he deal with our sister as with an harlot?

at least seven years past. In his behalf we may say, and it would be unjust not to say it, that having done the mischief, and sinned deeply against the laws of hospitality, he wished to make all the reparation in his power; and therefore in the most frank and liberal manner he not only offered, but most pressing entreated, permission to take Dinah, to wife. This was the utmost he could do in such a case.

3. It was diabolical in Jacob's sons to slay a whole tribe for the offence of one man, and especially as that one had offered to make all the restitution in his power. Jacob, to his great honour, remonstrated against this barbarous and bloody act, committed apparently under the sanction of religion; and God showed his abhorrence of it by directing the patriarch, in his dying moments, to proscribe them from the blessings of the covenant, so that they barely retained a name among the tribes of Israel, being in general small, and ever disreputable, except merely in the service of the sanctuary, in which Levi was employed. How often since, notwithstanding this solemn warning, has the pure and benevolent religion of God been made, by wicked and designing men, a political stalking-horse to serve the basest purposes, and a covert to the worst of crimes! But shall we find fault with the holy religion of the blessed God because wicked men have abused it? God forbid! As every good is capable of being abused, does he act wisely who argues against the use of the thing on this account? Shall we say that various kinds of grain, fruits, and aliment are a curse, because wicked men abuse them to the purposes of drunkenness and gluttony? This would argue an utter perversion of all reason: and is it not on such a pretext as this that many persons have ventured to call in question even the truths of Christianity?

CHAPTER XXXV.

Jacob is commanded of God to go to Beth-el, and to build an altar there, 1. His exhortation to his family to put away all strange gods, &c., 2, 3. They deliver them all up, and Jacob hides them in the earth, 4. They commence their journey, 5; come to Luz, 6; build there the altar El-beth-el, 7. Burial place of Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, 8. God appears again unto Jacob, 9. Blesses him and renews his promises, 10-13. To commemorate this manifestation of God, Jacob sets up a pillar, and calls the place Beth-el, 14, 15. They journey to Ephrath, where Rachel, after hard labour, is delivered of Benjamin, and dies, 16-19. Jacob sets up a pillar on her grave, 20. They journey to Edar, 21. While at this place, Reuben defiles his father's bed, 22. Account of the children of Jacob, according to the mothers, 23-26. Jacob comes to Mamre to his father Isaac, who was probably then in the one hundred and fifty-eighth year of his age, 27. Isaac dies, and is buried by his sons Esau and Jacob, 29.

AND God said unto Jacob, Arise, go up to Beth-el, and dwell there: and make there an altar unto God, <sup>b</sup> that appeared unto thee <sup>c</sup> when thou fleddest from the face of Esau thy brother.

Verse 1. Arise, go up to Beth-el] The transaction that had lately taken place rendered it unsafe for Jacob to dwell any longer in the city of Shechem; and it seems that while he was reflecting on the horrible act of Simeon and Levi, and not knowing what to do, God graciously appeared to him, and commanded him to go up to Beth-el, build an altar there, and thus perform the vow he had made, chap. xxviii. 20, 22.

Verse 2. Put away the strange gods] Jacob's servants were all Syrians, and no doubt were addicted less or more to idolatry and superstition. These gods might belong to them, or, as some have conjectured, they were the teraphim which

2 Then Jacob said unto his <sup>d</sup> household, and to all that were with him, Put away <sup>e</sup> the strange gods that are among you, and <sup>f</sup> be clean, and change your garments:

3 And let us arise, and go up to Beth-el; and I

Rachel stole. But it is more natural to suppose that these gods found now in Jacob's family were images of silver, gold, or curious workmanship, which were found among the spoils of the city of Shechem. Lest these should become incitements to idolatry, Jacob orders them to be put away.

Be clean, and change your garments] Personal or outward purification, as emblematical of the sanctification of the soul, has been in use among all the true worshippers of God from the beginning of the world. In many cases the law of Moses more solemnly enjoined rites and ceremonies which had been in use from the earliest ages.

Verse 3. Answered me in the day of my distress] Not will make there an altar unto God, <sup>a</sup> who answered me in the day of my distress, <sup>b</sup> and was with me in the way which I went.

4 And they gave unto Jacob all the strange gods which were in their hands, and all their <sup>c</sup> ear-rings which were in their ears; and Jacob hid them under <sup>d</sup> the oak which was by Shechem.

5 And they journeyed: and <sup>e</sup> the terror of God was upon the cities that were round about them, and they did not pursue after the sons of Jacob.

6 So Jacob came to <sup>f</sup> Luz, which is in the land of Canaan, (that is, Beth-el,) he and all the people that were with him.

7 And he <sup>g</sup> built there an altar, and called the place <sup>h</sup> El-beth-el: because <sup>i</sup> there God appeared unto him, when he fled from the face of his brother.

8 But <sup>j</sup> Deborah Rebekah's nurse died, and she was buried beneath Beth-el, under an oak: and the name of it was called <sup>k</sup> Allon-bachuth.

9 And <sup>l</sup> God appeared unto Jacob again, when he came out of Padan-aram, and blessed him.

10 And God said unto him, Thy name is Jacob: <sup>m</sup> thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, <sup>n</sup> but Israel shall be thy name: and he called his name Israel.

11 And God said unto him, <sup>o</sup> I am God Almighty: be fruitful and multiply; <sup>p</sup> a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee, and kings shall come out of thy loins:

12 And the land <sup>q</sup> which I gave Abraham and Isaac, to thee I will give it, and to thy seed after thee will I give the land.

13 And God <sup>r</sup> went up from him in the place where he talked with him.

14 And Jacob <sup>s</sup> set up a pillar in the place where he talked with him, even a pillar of stone: and he poured a drink-offering thereon, and he poured oil thereon.

15 And Jacob called the name of the place where God spake with him, <sup>t</sup> Beth-el.

16 And they journeyed from Beth-el; and there was but <sup>u</sup> a little way to come to Ephrath; and Rachel travailed, and she had hard labour.

17 And it came to pass, when she was in hard labour, that the midwife said unto her, Fear not; <sup>v</sup> thou shalt have this son also.

18 And it came to pass, as her soul was in departing, (for she died), that she called his name <sup>w</sup> Ben-oni: but his father called him <sup>x</sup> Benjamin.

19 And <sup>y</sup> Rachel died, and was buried in the way to <sup>z</sup> Ephrath, which is Beth-lehem.

20 And Jacob set a pillar upon her grave: that is the pillar of Rachel's grave <sup>aa</sup> unto this day.

21 And Israel journeyed, and spread his tent beyond <sup>bb</sup> the tower of Edar.

22 And it came to pass, when Israel dwelt in that land, that Reuben went and <sup>cc</sup> lay with Bilhah his father's concubine: and Israel heard it. Now the sons of Jacob were twelve:

only when he fled from the face of his brother, but more particularly when he was in his greatest strait at the brook of Jabbok.

Verse 4. And—ear-rings which were in their ears] Whether those rings were in the ears of the gods, or in those of Jacob's family, we may rest assured that they were not mere ornaments, but served for superstitious purposes. Ear-rings were certainly worn as amulets and charms, first consecrated to some god, or formed under some constellation, on which magical characters and images were drawn.

Verse 5. The terror of God.] A supernatural awe sent by the Almighty, was upon the cities that were round about, so that they were not molested in their departure. This could be owing to nothing less than the especial providence of God.

Verse 7. El-beth-el.] The first el is wanting in one of De Rossi's MSS., as it is also in the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, and some copies of the Arabic. The sentence reads much better without it, and much more consistent with the parallel passages.

Verse 8. But Deborah Rebekah's nurse died.] How she came to be in Jacob's family expositors are greatly puzzled to find out; but the text does not state that she was in Jacob's family. Her death is mentioned merely because Jacob and his family had now arrived at the place where she was buried, and the name of that place was called Allon-bachuth, "the oak of weeping," as it is likely her death had been greatly regretted, and a general and extraordinary mourning had taken place on the occasion. Of Rebekah's death we know nothing. After her counsel to her son, chapter xxvii., we hear no more of her history from the sacred writings, except of her burial in chapter xlix. 31. Her name is written in the dust. And is not this designed as a mark of the disapprobation of God? It seems strange that such an inconsiderable person as a nurse should be mentioned, when even the person she brought up is passed by unnoticed!

Verse 9. God appeared unto Jacob again.] To Isaac and Jacob these frequent appearances of God were necessary, but they were not so to Abraham; for him one word was sufficient—Abraham believed God.

Verse 13. And God went up from him] This was not a vision, not a strong mental impression, but a real manifestation of God. Jacob saw and heard him speak, and before his eyes he went up—ascended to heaven. This was no doubt the future Saviour, the Angel of the covenant.

Verse 14. A drink-offering] A libation. These were afterwards very common in all countries. At first they consisted probably of water only, afterwards wine was used; see on Lev. vii. 1, &c. The pillar which Jacob set up was to commemorate the appearance of God to him; his drink-offering and the oil were intended to express his gratitude and devotion to his preserver. It was probably the same pillar which he had set up before, which had since been thrown down, and which he had consecrated afresh to God.

Verse 16. There was but a little way to come to Ephrath.] The word kibrath has greatly perplexed commentators. It seems to have been some sort of measure applied to land, but what its exact quantity was cannot be ascertained. Ephrath, called also Bethlehem, and Bethlehem Ephrata, was the birth-place of our blessed Redeemer.

Verse 18. As her soul was in departing] Is not this a proof that there is an immortal spirit in man, which can exist separate from and independent of the body? If her breath only had been intended, neshamah or ruah would have rather been used, as the first means breath, the latter breath or spirit indifferently.

She called his name Ben-oni] The son of my sorrow or affliction, because of the hard labour she had in bringing him into the world: but his father called him Benjamin, the son of my right-hand, i.e. the son peculiarly dear to me. So man of the right-hand, Ps. lxxx. 17, signifies one much loved and regarded of God.

Verse 20. Jacob set a pillar upon her grave.] In ancient times, and among rude nations, a heap of stones designated the burial-place of the chief: many of these still remain in different countries. Afterwards, a rude stone, with a simple inscription, was used, containing only the name of the de-born, and Simeon and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Zebulun.

24 The sons of Rachel; Joseph, and Benjamin.

25 The sons of Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid; Dan, and Naphtali.

26 And the sons of Zilpah, Leah's handmaid; Gad, and Asher. These are the sons of Jacob, which were born to him in Padan-aram.

ceased, and that of his father. But where arts and sciences flourished, superb monuments were erected, highly decorated, and pompously inscribed. That which is now called Rachel's pillar is allowed, by those who have examined it, to be a comparatively modern structure. [But it probably stands on the original site.]

Verse 21. Tower of Eder.] Literally, the tower of the flock, and so translated, Mic. iv. 8. It is supposed that this tower was about a mile from Bethlehem, built by the shepherds near to some well, for the convenience of watering their flocks, and keeping watch over them by night.

Verse 22. And Israel heard it.] Not one word is added farther in the Hebrew text; but a break is left in the verse, opposite to which there is a Masoretic note, which simply states, there is a hiatus in the verse. This hiatus the Septuagint has thus supplied: and it appeared evil in his sight.

Now the sons of Jacob were twelve.] Called afterwards the twelve patriarchs, because they became heads or chiefs of numerous families or tribes, Acts vii. 8; and the people that descended from them are called the twelve tribes, Acts xxvi. 7; James i. 1. And in reference to the twelve patriarchs, our Lord chose twelve apostles. Strictly speaking there were thirteen tribes among the Hebrews, as Ephraim and Manasse were counted for tribes, chap. xlviii. 5, 6; but the scripture in naming them usually sets down but twelve, omitting the name now of one, then of another, as may in sundry places be observed, Deut. xxxiii.; Ezek. xlviii.; Rev. vii., &c.

Verse 23. The sons of Leah.] The children are arranged under their respective mothers, and not in order of their birth.

Verse 26. Born to him in Padan-aram.] i.e. all but Benjamin, who was born in Canaan, ver. 16, 17.

It is well known that Padan-aram is the same as Mesopotamia. The word signifies between the two rivers. It is situated between the Euphrates and Tigris, having Assyria on the east, Arabia Deserta, with Babylonia, on the south, Syria on the west, and Armenia on the north.

Verse 27. The city of Arbah (which is Hebron).] It has been conjectured that Jacob must have paid a visit to his father before this time, as previously to this he had been some years in Canaan; but now, as he was approaching to his end, Jacob is supposed to have gone to live with and comfort him in his declining days.

Verse 29. Esau and Jacob buried him.] Esau, as we have seen chap. xxxiii., was thoroughly reconciled to his brother Jacob, and now they both join in fraternal and filial affection to do the last kind office to their amiable father. It is generally allowed that the death of Isaac is mentioned here out of its chronological order, as several of the transactions mentioned in the succeeding chapters, especially xxxvii. and xxxviii., must have happened during his life; but that the history of Joseph might not be disturbed, his death is anticipated in this place. It is supposed that he lived at least twelve years after Joseph was sold into Egypt.

27 And Jacob came unto Isaac his father unto * Mamre, unto the <sup>b</sup> city of Arbah, (which is Hebron,) where Abraham and Isaac sojourned.

28 And the days of Isaac were an hundred and fourscore years.

29 And Isaac gave up the ghost and died, and * was gathered unto his people, being old and full of days: and <sup>d</sup> his sons Esau and Jacob buried him.

1. That such a family as that of Jacob should have had false gods in it, is a matter not less astonishing than real: and suppose that we allow that their images and rings were got from strangers, yet their being tolerated in the family, though for a very short time, cannot be easily accounted for. It is true the LAW was not then given, and the unity of God not so particularly taught as it was afterwards. Besides, certain superstitions were compatible in those early times with general sincerity and attachment to the truth; those times and acts of ignorance were winked at, till superior light shone upon the world. Sin is like the letting out of water—when once a breach is made in the dyke, the stream becomes determined to a wrong course, and its progress is soon irresistible.

2. The doctrine of a particular and especial providence has another proof in this chapter. After the sanguinary conduct of Jacob's sons, is it not surprising that the neighbouring tribes did not join together and extirpate the whole family? And so they certainly would, had not the terror of God fallen upon them, ver. 6.

3. The impatience and fate of the amiable Rachel, who can read of without deploring? (Give me children, said she, or else I die, chap. xxx. 1. Her desire was granted, and her death was the consequence! God's way is ever best. We know not what we ask, nor what we ought to ask, and therefore often ask amiss when we petition for such secular things as belong to the dispensations of God's providence. For things of this kind we have no revealed directory: and when we ask for them, it should be with the deepest submission to the divine will, as God alone knows what is best for us. With respect to the soul, every thing is clearly revealed, so that we may ask and receive, and have a fullness of joy; but as to our bodies, there is much reason to fear that the answer of our petitions would be, in numerous cases, our inevitable destruction. How many prayers does God in mercy shut out!

4. The transgression of Reuben, of whatsoever kind, was marked, not only by the displeasure of his father, but by that of God also; see chap. xlix. 4. It brought a curse upon him, and he forfeited thereby the right of primogeniture and the priesthood: the first was given to Judah, the second to Levi. A man, by sowing a grain of forbidden sweets, may reap an abundant harvest of eternal wretchedness. Reader, let not sin rob thee of the kingdom of God.

5. Isaac appears to have been generally pious, deeply submissive and obedient. He was rather an amiable and good, than a great and useful, man. If compared with his son Jacob, in the early part of their lives, he appears to great advantage, as possessing more sincerity and more personal piety. But if compared with his father Abraham, oh, what a falling off is here! Abraham is the most perfect character under the Old Testament, and even under the New he has no parallel but St. Paul. Isaac, though falling far short of his father's excellences, will ever remain a pattern of piety and filial obedience.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

The genealogy of Esau, i.e. his sons, by his Canaanitish wives Adah, Aholibamah, and Bashemath, 1-3. The children of Adah and Bashemath, 4. Of Aholibamah, 5. Esau departs from Canaan and goes to Mount Seir, 6-8. The generations of Esau, i.e. his grandchildren, while in Seir, 9-19. The generations of Seir the Horite, 20-30. Anah finds mules (Yemim) in the wilderness, 24. The kings which reigned in Edom, 31-39. The dukes that succeeded them, 40-43.

NOW these are the generations of Esau, * who is Edom.

2 <sup>b</sup> Esau took his wives of the daughters of Canaan; Adah the daughter of Elon the Hittite, and <sup>c</sup> Aholibamah the daughter of Anah the daughter of Zibeon the Hivite.

3 And <sup>d</sup> Bashemath Ishmael's daughter, sister of Nebajoth.

4 And <sup>e</sup> Adah bare to Esau Eliphaz; and Bashemath bare Reuel.

5 And Aholibamah bare Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah: these are the sons of Esau, which were born unto him in the land of Canaan.

6 And Esau took his wives, and his sons, and his daughters, and all the persons of his house, and his cattle, and all his beasts, and all his substance, which he had got in the land of Canaan; and went into the country from the face of his brother Jacob.

7 <sup>f</sup> For their riches were more than that they might dwell together; and <sup>g</sup> the land wherein they were strangers could not bear them, because of their cattle.

8 Thus dwelt Esau in <sup>h</sup> mount Seir: <sup>i</sup> Esau is Edom.

9 And these are the generations of Esau the father of <sup>k</sup> the Edomites in mount Seir.

10 These are the names of Esau's sons; <sup>l</sup> Eliphaz the son of Adah the wife of Esau, Reuel the son of Bashemath the wife of Esau.

11 And the sons of Eliphaz were Teman, Omar, <sup>m</sup> Zepho, and Gatam, and Kenaz.

12 And Timna was concubine to Eliphaz, Esau's son; and she bare to Eliphaz <sup>n</sup> Amalek: these were the sons of Adah Esau's wife, 13 And these are the sons of Reuel; Nahath, and Zerah, Shammah, and Mizzah: these were the sons of Bashemath Esau's wife.

Verse 1. These are the generations of Esau] The generations of Esau are particularly marked, to show how exactly God fulfilled the promises he made to him, chap. xxv. and xxvii.; and those of Seir the Horite are added, because his family became in some measure blended with that of Esau.

Verse 2. His wives] It appears that Esau's wives went by very different names. Aholibamah is named Judith, chap. xxvi. 34; Adah is called Bashemath in the same place; and she who is here called Bashemath is called Mahalath, chap. xxviii. 9. These are variations which cannot be easily accounted for; and they are not of sufficient importance to engross much time. It is well known that the same persons in scripture are often called by different names.

Anah the daughter of Zibeon] But this same Anah is said to be the son of Zibeon, ver. 24, though in this and the fourteenth verse he is said to be the daughter of Zibeon. But the Samaritan, the Septuagint (and the Syriac, in ver. 2), read son instead of daughter. Others say that daughter should be referred to Aholibamah, who was the daughter of Anah, and grand-daughter of Zibeon.

Verse 6. Esau took his wives, &c.] So it appears that Esau and Jacob dwelt together in Canaan, whither the former removed from Seir, probably soon after the return of Jacob. That they were on the most friendly footing this sufficiently proves; and Esau shows the same dignified conduct as on other occasions, in leaving Canaan to Jacob, and returning again to Mount Seir; certainly a much less fruitful region than that which he now in behalf of his brother voluntarily abandoned.

Verse 12. Timna was concubine to Eliphaz] As Timna was sister to Lotan the Horite, ver. 22, we see how the 14 And these were the sons of Aholibamah, the daughter of Anah the daughter of Zibeon, Esau's wife: and she bare to Esau Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah.

15 These were dukes of the sons of Esau: the sons of Eliphaz the first-born son of Esau; duke Teman, duke Omar, duke Zepho, duke Kenaz, 16 Duke Korah, duke Gatam, and duke Amalek: these are the dukes that came of Eliphaz in the land of Edom: these were the sons of Adah.

17 And these are the sons of Reuel, Esau's son: duke Nahath, duke Zerah, duke Shammah, duke Mizzah: these are the dukes that came of Reuel in the land of Edom: these are the sons of Bashemath Esau's wife.

18 And these are the sons of Aholibamah Esau's wife; duke Jeush, duke Jaalam, duke Korah: these were the dukes that came of Aholibamah the daughter of Anah, Esau's wife.

19 These are the sons of Esau, who is Edom, and these are their dukes.

20 <sup>o</sup> These are the sons of Seir <sup>p</sup> the Horite, who inhabited the land; Lotan, and Shobal, and Zibeon, and Anah, 21 And Dishon, and Ezer, and Dishan: these are the dukes of the Horites, the children of Seir in the land of Edom.

22 And the children of Lotan were Hori, and <sup>q</sup> Heman; and Lotan's sister was Timna.

23 And the children of Shobal were these; <sup>r</sup> Alvan, and Manabath, and Ebal, <sup>s</sup> Shepho, and Onam.

24 And these are the children of Zibeon; both Ajah, and Anah: this was that Anah that found <sup>t</sup> the mules in the wilderness, as he fed the asses of Zibeon his father.

25 And the children of Anah were these; Dishon and Aholibamah the daughter of Anah, family of Esau and the Horites got intermixed. This might give the sons of Esau a pretext to seize the land, and expel the ancient inhabitants, as we find they did, Deut. ii. 12.

Amalek] The father of the Amalekites, afterwards bitter enemies to the Jews, and whom God commanded to be entirely exterminated, Deut. xxv. 17, 19.

Verse 15. Dukes of the sons of Esau] The word duke comes from the Latin dux, a captain or leader. The Hebrew has the same signification; and as it is also the term for a thousand, which is a grand capital or leading number, probably the dukes had this name from being leaders of or captains over a company of one thousand men; just as those among the Greeks called chiliarchs, which signifies the same; and as the Romans called those centurions who were captains over one hundred men, from the Latin word centum, which signifies a hundred. The dual government was that which prevailed first among the Idumeans, or descendants of Esau. Here fourteen dukes are reckoned to Esau, seven that came of his wife Adah, four of Bashemath, and three of Aholibamah.]

Verse 16. Duke Korah] "It is clear," says Dr. Kennicott, "that some transcriber has improperly inserted duke Korah in the 16th verse; from which interpolation both the Samaritan text and the Samaritan version are free."

Verse 20. These are the sons of Seir the Horite] These Horites were the original inhabitants of the country of Seir, called the land of the Horites, and afterwards the land of the Idumeans, when the descendants of Esau had driven them out.

Verse 21. These are the dukes of the Horites] It appears pretty evident that the Horites and the descendants of Esau were mixed together in the same land.

wilderness] The word here translated mules, has given rise to a great variety of conjectures and discordant opinions.

My own opinion is, that mules were not known before the time of Anah; and that he was probably the first who coupled the mare and ass together to produce this mongrel, or was the first who met with creatures of this race in some very secluded part of the wilderness. [This rendering of the original is now entirely abandoned by critics. The word translated mules should be warm springs, such as are found now in the neighbourhood of the Dead Sea.]

Verse 31. Before there reigned any king over—Israel.] I suppose all the verses, from this to the 39th inclusive, have been transferred to this place from 1 Chron. i. 43-50, as it is not likely they could have been written by Moses; and it is quite possible they might have been, at a very early period, written in the margin of an authentic copy.

I know there is another way of accounting for those words on the ground of their being written originally by Moses; but to me it is not satisfactory. It is simply this: the word king should be considered as implying any kind of regular government, whether by chiefs, dukes, judges, &c., and therefore when Moses says, these are the kings which reigned in Edom, before there was any king in Israel, he may be only understood as saying that these kings reigned among the Edomites before the family of Jacob had acquired any considerable power, or before the time in which his twelve sons had become the fathers of those numerous tribes, at the head of which, as king himself in Jeshurun, he now stood. [The weightiest critical evidence is in favour of regarding this list of Edomitish kings as belonging to a pre-Mosaic age. Some think that the writer had on his mind the promise that kings should come out of the loins of Jacob. The whole question is difficult.]

Verse 33. Jobab the son of Zerah.] Many have supposed that Jobab is the same as Job, and that Eliphaz, mentioned verse 10, &c., was the same who in the book of Job is called one of his friends: but there is no proper proof of this, and there are many reasons against it.

Verse 40. These are the names of the dukes that came of Esau.] These dukes did not govern the whole nation of the Idumeans, but they were chiefs in their respective families, in their places—the districts they governed, and to which they gave their names.

Verse 43. He is Esau, the father of the Edomites.] That is, The preceding list contains an account of the posterity of Esau, who was the father of Edom. Thus ends Esau's history; for after this there is no farther account of his life, actions, or death, in the Pentateuch.

1. I have already, in several places, endeavoured to wipe off the odium that has been thrown upon Esau, without attempting to lessen his faults; and the unprejudiced reader must see that, previously to this last account we have of him, his character stands without a blot, except in the case of selling his birth-right, and his purpose to destroy his brother. To the first he was led by his famishing situation and the unkindness of his brother, who refused to save his life but on this condition; and the latter, made in the heat of vexation and passion, he never attempted to execute, even when he had the most ample means and the fairest opportunity to do it.

2. To some the genealogical lists in this chapter will doubtless appear uninteresting, especially those which concern Esau and his descendants; but it was as necessary to register the generations of Esau as to register those of Jacob, in order to show that the Messiah did not spring from the former, but that he did spring from the latter. The genealogical tables, so frequently met with in the sacred writings, and so little regarded by Christians in general, are extremely useful. 1. As they are standing proofs of the truth of the prophecies, which stated that the Messiah should come from a particular family, which prophecies were clearly fulfilled in the birth of Christ. 2. As they testify, to the conviction of the Jews, that the Messiah thus promised is found in the person of Jesus of Nazareth, who incontestably sprang from the last, the only remaining branch of the family of David. These registers were religiously preserved among the Jews till the destruction of Jerusalem; after which they were all destroyed, inasmuch that there is not a Jew in the universe who can trace himself to the family of David; consequently, all expectation of a Messiah to come is, even on their own principles, nugatory and absurd, as nothing remains to legitimate his birth. When Christ came all these registers were in existence. When St. Matthew and St. Luke wrote, all these registers were still in existence; and had they pretended what could not have been supported, an appeal to the registers would have convicted them of falsehood. But no Jew attempted to do this, notwithstanding the excess of their malice against Christ and his followers; and because they did not do it, we may safely assert that no Jew could do it. Thus the foundation standeth sure.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Jacob continues to sojourn in Canaan. 1. Joseph, being seventeen years of age, is employed in feeding the flocks of his father. 2. Is loved by his father more than the rest of his brethren. 3. His brethren envy him. 4. His dream of the sheaves, 5-7. His brethren interpret it, and hate him on the account. 8. His dream of the sun, moon, and eleven stars, 9-11. Jacob sends him to visit his brethren, who were with the flock in Shechem 13, 14. He wanders in the field, and is directed to go to Dothan, whither his brethren had removed the flocks, 15-17. Seeing him coming, they conspire to destroy him, 18-20. Reuben, secretly intending to deliver him, counsels his brethren not to kill, but to put him into a pit, 21, 22. They strip Joseph of his coat of many colours, and put him into a pit, 23, 24. They afterwards draw him out, and sell him to a company of Ishmeelite merchants for twenty pieces of silver, who carry him into Egypt, 25-28. Reuben returns to the pit, and not finding Joseph, is greatly affected, 29, 30. Joseph's brethren dip his coat in goat's blood to persuade his father that he had been devoured by a wild beast, 31-33. Jacob is greatly distressed, 34, 35. Joseph is sold in Egypt to Potiphar, captain of Pharaoh's guard, 36.

AND Jacob dwelt in the land <sup>a</sup> wherein <sup>b</sup> his father was a stranger, in the land of Canaan.

2 These are the generations of Jacob. Joseph, being seventeen years old, was feeding the flock with his brethren; and the lad was with the sons of Bilhah, and with the sons of Zilpah, his father's wives: and Joseph brought unto his father <sup>c</sup> their evil report.

3 Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was <sup>d</sup> the son of his old age: and he made him a coat of many <sup>e</sup> colours.

4 And when his brethren saw that their father loved him more than all his brethren, they <sup>f</sup> hated him, and could not speak peaceably unto him.

5 And Joseph dreamed a dream, and he told it his brethren: and they hated him yet the more.

6 And he said unto them, Hear, I pray you, this dream which I have dreamed:

7 For, <sup>g</sup> behold, we were binding sheaves in the field, and, lo, my sheaf arose, and also stood upright:

Verse 1. Wherein his father was a stranger] The place was probably the vale of Hebron, see ver. 14.

Verse 2. These are the generations] The history of the lives and actions of Jacob and his sons; for in this general sense the original must be taken, as in the whole of the ensuing history there is no particular account of any genealogical succession.

Brought unto his father their evil report.] Conjecture has been busily employed to find out what this evil report might be; but it is needless to inquire what it was, as on this head the sacred text is perfectly silent. All the use we can make of this information is, that it was one cause of increasing his brothers' hatred to him, which was first excited by his father's partiality, and secondly by his own dreams.

Verse 3. A coat of many colours.] Made up of stripes of differently coloured cloth. Similar to this was the toga prætexta of the Roman youth, which was white, striped or fringed with purple; this they wore till they were seventeen years of age, when they changed it for the toga virilis, or toga pura, which was all white. Such vestures as clothing of distinction are worn all over Persia, India, and China to the present day. It is no wonder that his brethren should envy him, when his father had made him such a distinguished object of his partial love.

Verse 4. And could not speak peaceably unto him.] They could not speak peace to him, i.e. they would not accost him in a friendly manner. They would not even wish him well. The eastern method of salutation is Peace be to thee! Now, as peace among those nations comprehends all kinds of blessings spiritual and temporal, so they are careful not to say it to those whom they do not cordially wish well. It is not an unusual thing for an Arab or a Turk to hesitate to 8 And his brethren said to him, Shalt thou indeed reign over us? or shalt thou indeed have dominion over us? and they hated him yet the more for his dreams, and for his words.

9 And he dreamed yet another dream, and told it his brethren, and said, Behold, I have dreamed a dream more; and, behold, <sup>h</sup> the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me.

10 And he told it to his father, and to his brethren: and his father rebuked him, and said unto him, What is this dream that thou hast dreamed? Shall I and thy mother and thy <sup>i</sup> brethren indeed come to bow down ourselves to thee to the earth?

11 And <sup>j</sup> his brethren envied him; but his father <sup>k</sup> observed the saying.

12 And his brethren went to feed their father's flock in Shechem.

return the salam, if given by a Christian, or by one of whom he has not a favourable opinion; and thus in their own country, may be ever considered as a mark of hostility; not only as a proof that they do not wish you well, but that if they have an opportunity they will do you an injury. This was precisely the case with respect to Joseph's brethren: they would not give him the salam, and therefore felt themselves at liberty to take the first opportunity to injure him.

Verse 7. We were binding sheaves in the field] Though in these early times we read little of tillage, yet it is evident from this circumstance that it was practised by Jacob and his sons.

Verse 9. He dreamed yet another dream] This is as clear as the preceding. But how could Jacob say, Shall I and thy mother, &c., when Rachel his mother was dead some time before this? Perhaps Jacob might hint, by this explanation, the impossibility of such a dream being fulfilled, because one of the persons who should be a chief actor in it was already dead. But any one wife or concubine of Jacob was quite sufficient to fulfil this part of the dream. It is possible, some think, that Joseph may have had these dreams before his mother Rachel died; but were even this the case, she certainly did not live to fulfil the part which appears to refer to herself.

The sun and the moon and the eleven stars] Why eleven stars? Was it merely to signify that his brothers might be represented by stars? Or does he not rather there allude to the Zodiac, his eleven brethren answering to eleven of the celestial signs, and himself to the twelfth? This is certainly not an unnatural thought, as it is very likely that the heavens were thus measured in the days of Joseph; for the zodiacal 14 And he said to him, Go, I pray thee, * see whether it be well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks; and bring me word again. So he sent him out of the vale of <sup>b</sup> Hebron, and he came to Shechem.

15 And a certain man found him, and, behold, he was wandering in the field: and the man asked him, saying, What seekest thou?

16 And he said, I seek my brethren: * tell me, I pray thee, where they feed their flocks.

17 And the man said, They are departed hence; for I heard them say, Let us go to Dothan. And Joseph went after his brethren, and found them in <sup>a</sup> Dothan.

18 And when they saw him afar off, even before he came near unto them * they conspired against him to slay him.

19 And they said one to another, Behold, this dreamer cometh.

20 * Come now therefore, and let us slay him, and cast him into some pit, and we will say, Some evil beast hath devoured him; and we shall see what will become of his dreams.

21 And <sup>b</sup> Reuben heard it, and he delivered him out of their hands; and said, Let us not kill him.

22 And Reuben said unto them, Shed no blood, but cast him into this pit that is in the wilderness, and lay no hand upon him; that he might rid him out of their hands, to deliver him to his father again.

23 And it came to pass, when Joseph was come unto his brethren, that they stript Joseph out of his coat, his coat of many <sup>1</sup> colours that was on him;

24 And they took him, and cast him into a pit: and the pit was empty, there was no water in it.

25 <sup>1</sup> And they sat down to eat bread: and they lifted up their eyes and looked, and, behold, a company of <sup>a</sup> Ishmeelites came from Gilead, with their camels bearing spicery, and <sup>1</sup> balm and myrrh, going to carry it down to Egypt.

26 And Judah said unto his brethren, What profit is it if we slay our brother, and <sup>m</sup> conceal his blood?

27 Come, let us sell him to the Ishmeelites, and <sup>a</sup> let not our hand be upon him; for he is <sup>o</sup> our brother and <sup>p</sup> our flesh. And his brethren <sup>q</sup> were content.

28 Then there passed by <sup>r</sup> Midianites, merchantmen; and they drew and lifted up Joseph out of the pit, <sup>a</sup> and sold Joseph to the Ishmeelites for <sup>t</sup> twenty pieces of silver: <sup>a</sup> and they brought Joseph into Egypt.

29 And Reuben returned unto the pit: and behold, Joseph was not in the pit; and he <sup>r</sup> rent his clothes.

30 And he returned unto his brethren, and said, The child <sup>s</sup> is not; and I, whither shall I go?

31 And they took <sup>w</sup> Joseph's coat, and killed a kid of the goats, and dipped the coat in the blood:

32 And they sent the coat of many colours, and they brought it to their father; and said, This have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no.

33 And he knew it, and said, It is my son's coat; an <sup>a</sup> evil beast hath devoured him; Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces!

34 And Jacob <sup>r</sup> rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his loins, and mourned for his son many days.

35 And all his sons and all his daughters <sup>r</sup> rose up to comfort him; but he refused to be comforted: and he said, For <sup>aa</sup> I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning. Thus his father wept for him.

constellations have been distinguished among the eastern nations from time immemorial.

Verse 14. Go—see whether it be well with thy brethren] As Jacob's sons were now gone to feed the flock on the parcel of ground they had bought from the Shechemites, and where they had committed such a horrible slaughter, their father might feel more solicitous about their welfare, lest the neighbouring tribes should rise against them, and revenge the murder of the Shechemites.

As Jacob appears to have been at this time in the vale of Hebron, it is supposed that Shechem was about sixty English miles distant from it, and that Dothan was about eight miles farther. But these calculations are very dubious; for we do not even know that the same place is intended, as there are many proofs that different places went by the same names. [Dothan, still bearing its ancient name, has been discovered in our own times, 12 miles to the north of Sebaste.]

Verse 19. Behold, this dreamer cometh.] A form of speech which conveys great contempt.

Verse 20. Come now—and let us slay him] What unprincipled savages these must have been to talk thus coolly about imbruing their hands in an innocent brother's blood! How necessary is a divine revelation, to show man what God hates and what he loves!

Verse 21. Reuben heard it] Though Reuben appears to have been a transgressor of no ordinary magnitude, chap. xxxv. 22, yet his bosom was not the habitation of cruelty. He determined, if possible, to save his brother from death, and deliver him safely to his father, with whose fondness for him he was sufficiently acquainted.

Verse 23. They stript Joseph out of his coat] This probably was done that, if ever found, he might not be discerned to be a person of distinction, and consequently no inquiry made concerning him.

Verse 25. They sat down to eat bread] Every act is perfectly in character, and describes forcibly the brutish and diabolic nature of their ruthless souls.

A company of Ishmeelites] We may naturally suppose that this was a caravan, composed of different tribes that, for their greater safety, were travelling together, and of which Ishmeelites and Midianites made the chief.

Verse 28. For twenty pieces of silver] This, I think, is the first instance on record of selling a man for a slave; but the practice certainly did not commence now, it had doubtless been in use long before. As there were only nine of the brethren present, and they sold Joseph for twenty shekels, each had more than two shekels as his share in this most infamous transaction. [The average value of a slave was thirty shekels.]

Verse 29. Reuben returned unto the pit] It appears he was absent when the caravan passed by, to whom the other brethren had sold Joseph.

Verse 30. The child is not; and I, whither shall I go?] The words in the original are very plaintive.

Verse 32. Sent the coat of many colours—to their father] What deliberate cruelty to torture the feelings of their aged father, and thus harrow up his soul!

Verse 33. Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces!] It is likely he inferred this from the lacerated state of the coat, which, in order the better to cover their wickedness, they had not only besmeared with the blood of the goat, but it is probable reduced to tatters.

Verse 35. All his sons and all his daughters] He had only one daughter, Dinah; but his sons' wives may be here included.

Verse 36. Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh's] The word translated officer, signifies a eunuch; and lest any person should imagine that because this Potiphar had a wife, therefore it is absurd to suppose him to have been a eunuch, let such persons know that it is not uncommon in the east for eunuchs to have wives, nay, some of them have even a harem or seraglio, where they keep many women, though it does not appear that they have any progeny; and probably discontent on this ground might have contributed as much to the unfaithfulness of Potiphar's wife, as that less principled motive through which it is commonly believed she acted. [Though the primary meaning of the word translated officer is undoubted, it seems to have in its application to Potiphar only an official sense. It was a general title given to the higher officers of the royal household.]

Captain of the guard.] Chief of the butchers; a most appropriate name for the guards of an eastern despot. Potiphar, we may therefore suppose, was captain of those guards whose business it was to take care of the royal person, and execute his sovereign will on all the objects of his displeasure.

1. Joseph has often been considered as a type of Christ, and this subject in the hands of different persons has assumed a great variety of colouring. Parallels and coincidences of this kind should always be received cautiously, for where the Spirit of God has not marked a direct resemblance, and obviously referred to it as such in some other part of his word, it is bold, if not dangerous, to say "such and such things and persons are types of Christ." We have instances sufficiently numerous, legitimately attested, without having recourse to those which are of dubious import and precarious application.

2. ENVY has been defined, "pain felt, and malignity conceived, at the sight of excellence or happiness in another." Under this detestable passion did the brethren of Joseph labour; and had not God particularly interposed, it would have destroyed both its subject and its object. Perhaps there is no vice which so directly filiates itself on Satan, as this does. In opposition to the assertion that we cannot envy that by which we profit, it may be safely replied that we may envy our neighbour's wisdom, though he gives us good counsel; his riches, though he supplies our wants; and his greatness, though he employs it for our protection.

3. How ruinous are family distractions! A house divided against itself cannot stand. Parents should take good heed that their own conduct be not the first and most powerful cause of such dissensions, by exciting envy in some of their children through undue partiality to others.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Judah marries the daughter of a Canaanite, 1, 2; and begets of her Er, 3, Onan, 4, and Shelah, 5. Er marries Tamar, 6; is slain for his wickedness, 7. Onan, required to raise up seed to his brother, refuses, 8, 9. He also is slain, 10. Judah promises his son Shelah to Tamar, when he should be of age; but performs not his promise, 11. Judah's wife dies, 12. Tamar in disguise receives her father-in-law, he leaves his signet, bracelets, and staff in her hand, and she conceives by him, 13-23. Judah is informed that his daughter-in-law is with child; and, not knowing that himself was the father, condemns her to be burnt, 24. She produces the signet, bracelets, and staff, and convicts Judah, 25, 26. She is delivered of twins, who are called Pharez and Zarah, 27-30.

AND it came to pass at that time, that Judah went down from his brethren, and turned in to a certain <sup>b</sup> Adullamite, whose name was Hirah.

2 And Judah <sup>c</sup> saw there a daughter of a certain Canaanite, whose name was <sup>d</sup> Shuah; and he took her, and went in unto her.

3 And she conceived, and bare a son; and he called his name <sup>e</sup> Er.

4 And she conceived again, and bare a son; and she called his name <sup>f</sup> Onan.

5 And she yet again conceived, and bare a son; and called his name <sup>g</sup> Shelah: and he was at Chezib when she bare him.

6 And Judah <sup>h</sup> took a wife for Er, his first-born, whose name was Tamar.

7 And <sup>i</sup> Er, Judah's first-born, was wicked in the sight of the LORD; <sup>j</sup> and the LORD slew him.

8 And Judah said unto Onan, Go in unto <sup>k</sup> thy brother's wife, and marry her, and raise up seed to thy brother.

9 And Onan knew that the seed should not be <sup>l</sup> his; and it came to pass, when he went in unto his brother's wife, that he spilled it on the ground, lest that he should give seed to his brother.

10 And the thing which he did <sup>m</sup> displeased the LORD: wherefore he slew <sup>n</sup> him also.

11 Then said Judah to Tamar his daughter in law, his fathers to prove at least the impropriety of such a connexion.

Verse 5. And he was at Chezib when she bare him.] This town is supposed to be the same with Achizib, which fell to the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 44.

Verse 7. Er—was wicked in the sight of the Lord] What this wickedness consisted in we are not told; but the phrase sight of the Lord being added, proved that it was some very great evil.

Verse 9. Onan knew that the seed should not be his] That is, that the child begotten of his brother's widow should be reckoned as the child of his deceased brother, and his name, though the real father of it, should not appear in the genealogical tables.

Verse 10. Wherefore he slew him also.] His crime was Verse 1. And it came to pass at that time] The facts mentioned here could not have happened at the times mentioned in the preceding chapter, as those times are all unquestionably too recent, for the very earliest of the transactions here recorded must have occurred long before the selling of Joseph. I should rather suppose that this chapter originally stood after chapter xxxiii., and that it got by accident into this place. [This is not the view of recent critics. Nor does the history endorse it. Judah was evidently living with his brethren, and had not set up an establishment of his own at the time when Joseph was sold.]

Adullamite] It appears as if this Adullamite had kept a kind of lodging-house, for Shuah the Canaanite and his family lodged with him; and there Judah lodged also. As the woman was a Canaanite, Judah had the example of * Remain a widow at thy father's house, till Shelah my son be grown: (for he said, Lest peradventure he die also, as his brethren did.) And Tamar went and dwelt <sup>b</sup> in her father's house.

12 And <sup>c</sup> in process of time the daughter of Shual Judah's wife died; and Judah <sup>d</sup> was comforted, and went up unto his sheep-shearers to Timnath, he and his friend Hirah the Adullamite.

13 And it was told Tamar, saying, Behold, thy father in law goeth up <sup>e</sup> to Timnath to shear his sheep.

14 And she <sup>f</sup> put her widow's garments off from her, and covered her with a veil, and wrapped herself, and <sup>g</sup> sat in <sup>h</sup> an open place, which is by the way to Timnath; for she saw <sup>i</sup> that Shelah was grown, and she was not given unto him to wife.

15 When Judah saw her, he thought her to be an harlot: because she had covered her face.

16 And he turned unto her by the way, and said, Go to, I pray thee, let me come in unto thee; (for he knew not that she was his daughter in law.) And she said, What wilt thou give me, that thou mayest come in unto me?

17 And he said, <sup>j</sup> I will send thee <sup>k</sup> a kid from the flock. And she said, <sup>l</sup> Wilt thou give me a pledge till thou send it?

18 And he said, What pledge shall I give thee? And she said, <sup>m</sup> Thy signet, and thy bracelets, and thy staff that is in thine hand, And he gave it her, and came in unto her, and she conceived by him. 19 And she arose and went away, and <sup>n</sup> laid by her veil from her, and put on the garments of her widowhood.

20 And Judah sent the kid by the hand of his friend the Adullamite, to receive his pledge from the woman's hand; but he found her not.

21 Then he asked the men of that place, saying, Where is the harlot that was <sup>o</sup> openly by the way-side? And they said, There was no harlot in this place.

22 And he returned to Judah, and said, I cannot find her; and also the men of the place said, that there was no harlot in this place.

23 And Judah said, Let her take it to her, lest we <sup>p</sup> be shamed: behold, I sent this kid, and thou hast not found her.

24 And it came to pass about three months after, that it was told Judah, saying, Tamar thy daughter in law hath <sup>q</sup> played the harlot; and also, behold, she is with child by whoredom. And Judah said, Bring her forth, <sup>r</sup> and let her be burnt.

25 When she was brought forth, she sent to her father in law, saying, By the man, whose these are, am I with child: and she said, <sup>s</sup> Discern, I pray thee, whose are these, <sup>t</sup> the signet, and bracelets, and staff.

26 And Judah <sup>u</sup> acknowledged them, and said, <sup>v</sup> She hath been more righteous than I; because his refusal to raise up seed to his brother, and rather than do it he, by the act mentioned above, rendered himself incapable of it. We find from this history that long before the Mosaic law it was an established custom, probably founded on a divine precept, that if a man died childless his brother was to take his wife, and the children produced by this second marriage were considered as the children of the first husband, and in consequence inherited his possessions.

Verse 12. In process of time] This phrase, which is in general use in the Bible, needs explanation; the original means, and the days were multiplied. Though it implies an indefinite time, yet it generally embraces a pretty long period, and in this place may mean several years.

Verse 15. Thought her to be an harlot] The Hebrew is zonah, and signifies generally a person who prostitutes herself to the public for hire, or one who lives by the public; and hence very likely applied to a publican, a tavern-keeper, or hostess, Josh. ii. 1.

It appears that in very ancient times there were public persons of this description; that they generally veiled themselves, sat in public places by the highway side, and received certain hire. Though adultery was reputed a very flagrant crime, yet this public prostitution was not; for persons whose characters were on the whole morally good had connexions with them.

Verse 17. Wilt thou give me a pledge till thou send it? The word erabon signifies an earnest of something promised, a part of the price agreed for between a buyer and seller, by giving and receiving of which the bargain was ratified; or a deposit, which was to be restored when the thing promised should be given. From the use of the term in this history we may at once see what the apostle means by the Holy Spirit being the EARNEST of the promised inheritance; viz., a security given in hand for the fulfilment of all God's promises relative to grace and eternal life. We may learn from this that eternal life will be given in the great day to all who can produce this erabon or pledge. He who has the earnest of the Spirit then in his heart shall not only be saved from death, but have that eternal life of which it is the pledge and the evidence.

Verse 21. Where is the harlot that was openly by the wayside?] Our translators often render different Hebrew words by the same term in English, and thus many important shades of meaning, which involve traits of character, are lost. In ver. 15 Tamar is called a harlot, zonah, which, as we have already seen, signifies a person who prostitutes herself for money. In this verse she is called a harlot in our Version; but the original is kedeshah, a holy or consecrated person, from kudash, to make holy, or to consecrate to religious purposes. And the word here must necessarily signify a person consecrated by prostitution to the worship of some impure goddess.

It would appear that impure rites and public prostitution prevailed in the worship of the Canaanites in the time of Judah.

Verse 23. Lest we be shamed] Not of the act, for this he does not appear to have thought criminal; but lest he should fall under the railing of his companions and neighbours, for having been tricked out of his signet, bracelets, and staff, by a prostitute.

Verse 24. Bring her forth, and let her be burnt.] As he had ordered Tamar to live as a widow in her own father's house till his son Shelah should be marriageable, he considers her therefore as the wife of his son; and as Shelah was not yet given to her, and she is found with child, she is reputed by him as an adulteress, and burning it seems was anciently the punishment of this crime. Judah, being a patriarch or head of a family, had, according to the custom of those times, the supreme magisterial authority over all the branches of his own family; therefore he only acts here in his juridical capacity. How strange, that in the very place where adultery was punished by the most violent death, prostitution for money and for religious purposes should be considered as no crime!

Verse 25. The signet] Properly a seal, or instrument with which impressions were made to ascertain property, &c. Bracelets] From pathal, to twist, wreath, twine, may signify a girdle or a collar by which precedence, &c., might be indicated.

Staff.] Matteh, either what we would call a common walking-stick, or the staff which was the ensign of his tribe.

Verse 26. She hath been more righteous than I] It is that <sup>a</sup> I gave her not to Shelah my son. And he knew her again <sup>b</sup> no more.

27 And it came to pass in the time of her travail, that, behold, twins were in her womb.

28 And it came to pass, when she travailed, that the one put out his hand: and the midwife took and bound upon his hand a scarlet thread, saying, This came out first.

probable that Tamar was influenced by no other motive than that which was common to all the Israelitish women, the desire to have children who might be heirs of the promise made to Abraham, &c. And as Judah had obliged her to continue in her widowhood under the promise of giving her his son Shelah when he should be of age, consequently his refusing or delaying to accomplish this promise was a breach of truth, and an injury done to Tamar.

Verse 28. The midwife—bound upon his hand a scarlet thread.] The binding of the scarlet thread about the wrist of the child whose arm appeared first in the birth, serves to show us how solicitously the privileges of the birth-right were preserved. Had not this caution been taken by the mid-wife, Pharez would have had the right of primogeniture to the prejudice of his elder brother Zarah. And yet Pharez is usually reckoned in the genealogical tables before Zarah; and from him, not Zarah, does the line of our Lord proceed. Probably the two brothers, as being twins, were conjoined in the privileges belonging to the birth-right.

29 And it came to pass, as he drew back his hand, that, behold, his brother came out: and she said, <sup>c</sup> How hast thou broken forth? this breach be upon thee: therefore his name was called <sup>d</sup> Pharez.*

30 And afterwards came out his brother, that had the scarlet thread upon his hand: and his name was called Zarah.

Verse 29. How hast thou broken forth? The breach here mentioned refers to a certain circumstance in parturition which it is unnecessary to explain.

Verse 30. His name was called Zarah.] Zarah, risen or sprung up, applied to the sun, rising and diffusing his light.

The insertion of this chapter is a further proof of the impartiality of the sacred writer. The facts detailed, considered in themselves, can reflect no credit on the patriarchal history; but Judah, Tamar, Zarah, and Pharez, were progenitors of the Messiah, and therefore their birth must be recorded; and as the birth, so also the circumstances of that birth, which, even had they not a higher end in view, would be valuable as casting light upon some very ancient customs, which it is interesting to understand.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Joseph, being brought to Potiphar's house, prospers in all his undertakings, 1-3. Potiphar makes him his overseer, 4. He prospered in all his concerns for Joseph's sake, in whom he puts unlimited confidence, 5, 6. The wife of Potiphar solicits him to criminal correspondence, 7. He refuses and makes a fine apology for his conduct, 8, 9. She continues her solicitations, and he his refusals, 10. She uses violence, and he escapes from her hand, 11-13. She accuses him to the domestics, 14, 15, and afterwards to Potiphar, 16-18. Potiphar is enraged, and Joseph is cast into prison, 19, 20. The Lord prospers him, and gives him great favour in the sight of the keeper of the prison, 21, who intrusts him with the care of the house and all the prisoners, 22, 23.

AND Joseph was brought down to Egypt, and <sup>a</sup> Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard, an Egyptian, <sup>b</sup> bought him of the hands of the Ishmeelites, which had brought him down thither.

2 And <sup>c</sup> the LORD was with Joseph, and he was a prosperous man; and he was in the house of his master the Egyptian.

3 And his master saw that the LORD was with him, and that the LORD <sup>d</sup> made all that he did to prosper in his hand.

4 And Joseph <sup>e</sup> found grace in his sight, and he served him: and he made him <sup>f</sup> overseer over his house, and all that he had he put into his hand.

5 And it came to pass from the time that he had made him overseer in his house, and over all that he had, that <sup>g</sup> the LORD blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake; and the blessing of the LORD was upon all that he had in the house and in the field.

6 And he left all that he had in Joseph's hand; and he knew not ought he had, save the bread which he did eat. And Joseph <sup>h</sup> was a goodly person, and well-favoured.

7 And it came to pass after these things, that his master's wife cast her eyes upon Joseph; and she said, <sup>i</sup> Lie with me.

8 But he refused, and said unto his master's wife, Behold, my master wotteth not what is with me in the house, and he hath committed all that he hath to my hand;

9 There is none greater in this house than I; neither hath he kept back any thing from me but thee, because thou art his wife: <sup>j</sup> how then can I do this great wickedness, and <sup>k</sup> sin against God?

Verse 6. Joseph was a goodly person, and well-favoured.] The same expressions are used relative to Rachel. The beauty of Joseph is celebrated over all the East, and the Persian poets vie with each other in descriptions of his comeliness.

old Anglo-Saxon witan, to know; hence wit, intellect, understanding, wisdom, prudence.

Verse 9. How then.] Joseph gives two most powerful reasons for his non-compliance with the wishes of his mistress: 1. Gratitude to his master, to whom he owed all that he had. 2. His fear of God, in whose sight it would be a 10 And it came to pass, as she spake to Joseph day by day, that he hearkened not unto her, to lie by her, or to be with her.

11 And it came to pass about this time, that Joseph went into the house to do his business; and there was none of the men of the house there within.

12 And she caught him by his garment, saying, Lie with me: and he left his garment in her hand, and fled, and got him out.

13 And it came to pass, when she saw that he had left his garment in her hand, and was fled forth,

14 That she called unto the men of her house, and spake unto them, saying, See, he hath brought in an Hebrew unto us to mock us: he came in unto me to lie with me, and I cried with a loud voice;

15 And it came to pass, when he heard that I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled, and got him out.

16 And she laid up his garment by her, until his lord came home.

17 And she spake unto him according to these words, saying, The Hebrew servant which thou hast brought unto us, came in unto me to mock me:

18 And it came to pass, as I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled out.

19 And it came to pass, when his master heard the words of his wife, which she spake unto him, saying, After this manner did thy servant to me; that his wrath was kindled.

20 And Joseph's master took him, and put him into the prison, a place where the king's prisoners were bound: and he was there in the prison.

21 But the LORD was with Joseph, and shewed him mercy, and gave him favour in the sight of the keeper of the prison.

22 And the keeper of the prison committed to Joseph's hand all the prisoners that were in the prison; and whatsoever they did there, he was the doer of it.

23 The keeper of the prison looked not to any thing that was under his hand; because the LORD was with him, and that which he did, the LORD made it to prosper.

heinous offence, and who would not fail to punish him for it.

Verse 14. He hath brought in an Hebrew unto us] Potiphar's wife affects to throw great blame on her husband, whom we may reasonably suppose she did not greatly love. He hath brought in—he hath raised this person to all his dignity and eminence, to give him the greater opportunity to mock us. The word here translated to mock, is the same word used in chap. xxvi, 8, relative to Isaac and Rebekah; and is certainly used by Potiphar's wife in ver. 17, to signify some kind of familiar intercourse not allowable but between man and wife.

Verse 20. Put him into the prison] Literally the round house; in such a form the prison was probably built.

Verse 21. The Lord was with Joseph] It is but of little consequence where the lot of a servant of God may be cast; like Joseph, he is ever employed for his master, and God honours him and prospers his work.

1. He who acknowledges God in all his ways, has the promise that God shall direct all his steps. Joseph's captivity shall promote God's glory; and to this end God works in him, for him, and by him. Even the irreligious can see when the Most High distinguishes his followers. Joseph's master saw that Jehovah was with him: and from this we may learn that the knowledge of the true God was in Egypt, even before the time of Joseph, though his worship was neither established nor even tolerated there. Both Abraham and Isaac had been in Egypt, and they had left a savour of true godliness behind them.

38. Ps. cvi, 46. Prov. xvi, 7. Dan. i, 9. Acts vii, 9, 10.—Ch. xi, 3, 4.—j Ver. 2, 8.

2. Joseph's virtue in resisting the solicitations of his mistress was truly exemplary. Had he reasoned after the manner of men, he might have soon found that the proposed intrigue might be carried on with the utmost secrecy, and greatly to his secular advantage. But he chose to risk all rather than injure a kind benefactor, defile his conscience, and sin against God.

3. Joseph fled, and got him out. To know when to fight and when to fly are of great importance in the Christian life. Some temptations must be manfully met, resisted, and thus overcome; from others we must fly. He who stands to contend or reason, especially in such a case as that mentioned here, is infallibly ruined. Principis obsta, "resist the first overtures of sin," is a good maxim. After-remedies come too late.

4. A woman of the spirit of Potiphar's wife is capable of any species of evil. When she could not get her wicked ends answered, she began to accuse. This is precisely Satan's custom: he first tempts men to sin, and then accuses them as having committed it, even where the temptation has been faithfully and perseveringly resisted! By this means he can trouble a tender conscience, and weaken faith by bringing confusion into the mind.

CHAPTER XL.

Pharaoh's chief butler and his chief baker, having offended their lord, are put in prison, 1-3. The captain of the guard gives them into the care of Joseph, 4. Each of them has a dream, 5. Joseph seeing them sad, questions them on the subject, 6, 7. Their answer, 8. The chief butler tells his dream, 9-11. Joseph interprets it, 12, 13. Gives a slight sketch of his history to the chief butler, and begs him to think upon him when restored to his office, 14, 15. The chief baker tells his dream, 16, 17. Joseph interprets this also, 18, 19. Both dreams are fulfilled according to the interpretation, the chief butler being restored to his office, and the chief baker hanged, 20-22. The chief butler makes no interest for Joseph, 23.

AND it came to pass after these things, that the butler of the king of Egypt and his baker had offended their lord the king of Egypt.

h. i. 11.

Verse 1. The butler] Mashkeh, the same as saky among the Arabians and Persians, and signifying a cup-bearer. Baker] Ophah; rather cook, confectioner, or the like.

2 And Pharaoh was wroth against two of his officers, against the chief of the butlers, and against the chief of the bakers.

b Prov. xvi, 14.

Had offended] They had probably been accused of attempting to take away the king's life, one by poisoning his drink, the other by poisoning his bread or confectionaries.

3 * And he put them in ward in the house of the captain of the guard, into the prison, the place where Joseph was bound.

4 And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them : and they continued a season in ward.

5 And they dreamed a dream, both of them, each man his dream in one night, each man according to the interpretation of his dream ; the butler and the baker of the king of Egypt, which were bound in the prison.

6 And Joseph came in unto them in the morning, and looked upon them, and, behold, they were sad.

7 And he asked Pharaoh's officers that were with him in the ward of his lord's house, saying, Wherefore <sup>b</sup>look ye so sadly to day ?

8 And they said unto him, <sup>c</sup>We have dreamed a dream, and there is no interpreter of it. And Joseph said unto them, <sup>d</sup>Do not interpretations belong to God ? tell me them, I pray you.

9 And the chief butler told his dream to Joseph, and said to him, In my dream, behold, a vine was before me.

10 And in the vine were three branches : and it was as though it budded, and her blossoms shot forth ; and the clusters thereof brought forth ripe grapes :

11 And Pharaoh's cup was in my hand ; and I took the grapes, and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup, and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand.

12 And Joseph said unto him, <sup>e</sup>This is the interpretation of it : The three branches <sup>f</sup>are three days :

13 Yet within three days shall Pharaoh <sup>g</sup>lift <sup>h</sup>up thy head, and restore thee unto thy place : and thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou wast his butler.

14 But <sup>i</sup>I think <sup>j</sup>on me when it shall be well with thee, and <sup>k</sup>show kindness, I pray thee, unto me, and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house :

15 For indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews : and here also have I done nothing that they should put me into the dungeon.

16 When the chief baker saw that the interpretation was good, he said unto Joseph, I also was in my dream, and, behold, I <sup>l</sup>had three <sup>m</sup>white baskets on my head :

17 And in the uppermost basket <sup>n</sup>there was of all manner of <sup>o</sup>bakemeats for Pharaoh ; and the birds did eat them out of the basket upon my head,

18 And Joseph answered and said, <sup>p</sup>This is the interpretation thereof : The three baskets <sup>q</sup>are three days :

19 <sup>r</sup>Yet within three days shall Pharaoh <sup>s</sup>lift up thy head from off thee, and shall hang thee on a tree ; and the birds shall eat thy flesh from off thee.

21 And he <sup>y</sup>restored the chief butler unto his butlership again ; and <sup>z</sup>he gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand :

22 But he <sup>aa</sup>hanged the chief baker, as Joseph had interpreted to them.

23 Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but <sup>ab</sup>forgot him.

Verse 3. Where Joseph was bound.] The place in which Joseph was now confined ; this is what is implied in being bound : for without doubt, he had his personal liberty. As the butler and the baker were state criminals, they were put in the same prison with Joseph, which we learn from the preceding chapter, ver. 20, was the king's prison.

Verse 4. They continued a season.] Literally days ; how long we cannot tell. But many suppose the word signifies a complete year ; and as Pharaoh called them to an account on his birth-day, ver. 20, Calmet supposes they had offended on the preceding birth-day, and thus had been one whole year in prison.

Verse 5. Each man according to the interpretation.] Not like dreams in general, the disordered workings of the mind, the consequence of disease or repletion ; these were dreams that had an interpretation, that is, that were prophetic.

Verse 6. They were sad.] They concluded that their dreams portended something of great importance, but they could not tell what.

Verse 8. There is no interpreter.] They either had access to none, or those to whom they applied could give them no consistent, satisfactory meaning.

Do not interpretations belong to God ?] God alone, the Supreme Being, knows what is in futurity ; and if he have sent a significant dream, he alone can give the solution.

Verse 11. And I took the grapes and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup.] From this we find that wine anciently was the mere expressed juice of the grape, without fermentation. The cup-bearer took the bunch, pressed the juice into the cup, and instantly delivered it into the hands of his master.

Verse 12. The three branches are three days.] That is, The three branches signify three days ; so this is my body, that is, this bread signifies or represents my body ; this cup is my blood, REPRESENTS my blood : a form of speech frequently used in the sacred writings, for the Hebrew has no proper word by which our terms signifies, represents, &c., are expressed ; therefore it says, such a thing is, for represents, points out, &c.

Verse 14. Make mention of me unto Pharaoh.] One would have supposed that the very circumstance of his restoration, according to the prediction of Joseph, would have almost necessarily prevented him from forgetting so extraordinary a person. But what have mere courtiers to do either with gratitude or kindness ?

Verse 15. For indeed I was stolen.] These were simple assertions, into the proof of which he was ready to enter if called on.

Verse 19. Lift up thy head from off thee.] Thus we find that beheading, hanging, and gibbeting, were modes of punishment among the ancient Egyptians ; but the criminal was beheaded before he was hanged, and then either hanged on hooks, or by the hands.

Verse 20. Pharaoh's birth-day.] The distinguishing a birth-day by a feast appears from this place to have been a very ancient custom. It probably had its origin from a correct notion of the immortality of the soul, as the commencement of life must appear of great consequence to that person who believed he was to live for ever.

Lifted up the head of the chief butler, &c.] By lifting up the head, probably no more is meant than bringing them to trial ; see 1 Kings xxi. 9, &c. The issue of the trial was, the baker alone was found guilty and hanged ; and the butler, being acquitted, was restored to his office.

Verse 23. Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph.] Had he mentioned the circumstance to Pharaoh, there is no doubt that Joseph's case would have been examined into, and he would in consequence have been restored to his liberty ; but, owing to the ingratitude of the chief butler, he was left two years longer in prison.

Many commentators have seen in every circumstance in the history of Joseph a parallel between him and our blessed Lord. So, "Joseph in prison represents Christ in the custody of the Jews; the chief butler and the chief baker represent the two thieves which were crucified with our Lord; and as one thief was pardoned, and the other left to perish, so the chief butler was restored to his office, and the chief baker hanged." I believe God never designed such parallels; and I am astonished to find comparatively grave and judicious men trifling in this way, and forcing the features of truth into the most distorted anamorphosis, so that even her friends blush to acknowledge her.

CHAPTER XLI.

Pharaoh's dream of the seven well-favoured and seven ill-favoured kine, 1-4. His dream of the seven full and seven thin ears of corn, 5-7. The magicians and wise men applied to for the interpretation of them, but could give no solution, 8. The chief butler recollects and recommends Joseph, 9-13. Pharaoh commands him to be brought out of prison, 14. Joseph appears before Pharaoh, 15, 16. Pharaoh repeats his dreams, 17-24. Joseph interprets them, 25-32, and gives Pharaoh directions how to provide against the approaching scarcity, 33-36. Pharaoh, pleased with the counsel, appoints Joseph to be superintendent of all his affairs, 37-41. Joseph receives the badges of his new office, 42, 43, and has his powers defined, 44; receives a new name, and marries Asenath, daughter of Poti-Pherah, priest of ON, 45. Joseph's age when brought before Pharaoh, 46. Great fertility of Egypt in the seven plentiful years, 47. Joseph hoards up the grain, 48, 49. Ephraim and Manasseh born, 50-52. The seven years of famine commence with great rigour, 53-55. Joseph opens the storehouses to the Egyptians, 56. People from the neighbouring countries come to Egypt to buy corn, the famine being in all those lands, 57.

AND it came to pass at the end of two full years, that Pharaoh dreamed: and, behold, he stood by the river.

2 And, behold, there came up out of the river seven well-favoured kine and fat-fleshed: and they fed in a meadow.

3 And, behold, seven other kine came up after them out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed: and stood by the other kine upon the brink of the river.

4 And the ill-favoured and lean-fleshed kine did eat up the seven well-favoured and fat kine. So Pharaoh awoke.

5 And he slept and dreamed the second time; and, behold, seven ears of corn came up upon one stalk, rank and good.

6 And, behold, seven thin ears and blasted with the east wind sprung up after them.

7 And the seven thin ears devoured the seven rank and full ears. And Pharaoh awoke, and, behold, it was a dream.

8 And it came to pass in the morning, that his spirit was troubled; and he sent and called for all 'the magicians of Egypt, and all the wise men thereof: and Pharaoh told them his dreams; but there was none that could interpret them unto Pharaoh.

9 Then spake the chief butler unto Pharaoh, saying, I do remember my faults this day:

10 Pharaoh was wroth with his servants, and put me in ward in the captain of the guard's house, both me and the chief baker:

11 And we dreamed a dream in one night, I and he; we dreamed each man according to the interpretation of his dream.

12 And there was there with us a young man, an Hebrew, servant to the captain of the guard; and we told him, and he interpreted to us our dreams; to each man, according to his dream, he did interpret.

13 And it came to pass, as he interpreted to us, so it was; me he restored unto mine office, and him he hanged.

14 Then Pharaoh sent and called Joseph, and they brought him hastily out of the dungeon: and he shaved himself, and changed his raiment, and came in unto Pharaoh.

Verse 1. Two full years] Two years of days, two complete solar revolutions, after the events mentioned in the preceding chapter.

The river.] The Nile, the cause of the fertility of Egypt.

Verse 2. There came up out of the river seven well-favoured kine] This must certainly refer to the hippopotamus or river horse, as the circumstances of coming up out of the river and feeding in the field characterize that animal alone. [Dr. Clark's exposition is improbable. The cow was the symbol of Isis, and as such was worshipped in Egypt. As in hot countries generally, the Egyptian kine were almost amphibious.]

Verse 6. Blasted with the east wind] In Egypt this wind is peculiarly destructive, because it comes through the parched deserts of Arabia, often destroying vast numbers of men and women. The destructive nature of the simoom or smoom, is mentioned by almost all travellers.

Verse 8. Called for all the magicians] The word here used may probably mean no more than interpreters of abstruse and difficult subjects; and especially of the Egyptian hieroglyphics, an art which is now entirely lost. It is most likely that the term is Egyptian, and consequently its etymology must remain unknown to us.

Wise men.] The persons who, according to Porphyry, "addicted themselves to the worship of God and the study of wisdom, passing their whole life in the contemplation of divine things. Contemplation of the stars, self-purification, arithmetic, and geometry, and singing hymns in honour of their gods, was their continual employment." It was probably among these that Pythagoras conversed, and from whom he borrowed that modest name by which he wished his countrymen to distinguish him, viz., a philosopher, simply, a lover of wisdom.

Verse 9. I do remember my faults] It is not possible he could have forgotten the circumstance to which he here alludes; but it was not convenient for him to remember this before; and probably he would not have remembered it now, had he not seen, that giving this information in such a case was likely to serve his own interest.

Verse 14. They brought him hastily out of the dungeon]

15 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it: and I have heard say of thee, that thou canst understand a dream to interpret it.

16 And Joseph answered Pharaoh, saying, It is not in me: God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace.

17 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, In my dream, behold I stood upon the bank of the river.

18 And, behold, there came up out of the river seven kine, fat-fleshed, and well favoured; and they fed in a meadow:

19 And, behold, seven other kine came up after them, poor, and very ill-favoured and lean-fleshed, such as I never saw in all the land of Egypt for badness:

20 And the lean and the ill-favoured kine did eat up the first seven fat kine;

21 And when they had eaten them up, it could not be known that they had eaten them; but they were still ill-favoured, as at the beginning. So I awoke.

22 And I saw in my dream, and, behold, seven ears came up in one stalk, full and good:

23 And, behold, seven ears, withered, thin, and blasted with the east wind, sprung up after them:

24 And the thin ears devoured the seven good ears: and I told this unto the magicians; but there was none that could declare it to me.

25 And Joseph said unto Pharaoh, The dream of Pharaoh is one: God hath shewed Pharaoh what he is about to do.

26 The seven good kine are seven years; and the seven good ears are seven years: the dream is one.

27 And the seven thin and ill-favoured kine that came up after them, are seven years; and the seven empty ears, blasted with the east wind, shall be seven years of famine.

Pharaoh was in perplexity on account of his dreams; and when he heard of Joseph, he sent immediately to get him brought before him. He shaved himself—having let his beard grow all the time he was in prison, he now trimmed it, for it is not likely that either the Egyptians or Hebrews shaved themselves in our sense of the word: the change of raiment was, no doubt, furnished out of the king's wardrobe; as Joseph, in his present circumstances, could not be supposed to have any changes of raiment.

Verse 16. It is not in me, &c.] I am not essential to thy comfort, God himself has thee under his care. And he will send thee, or answer thee peace; thou shalt have prosperity, howsoever ominous thy dreams may appear. By this answer he not only conciliated the mind of the king, but led him to expect his help from that God from whom alone all comfort, protection, and prosperity, must proceed.

Verse 18. Seven kine, fat-fleshed.] It is well known that there is scarcely any rain in Egypt; and that the country depends for its fertility on the overflowing of the Nile; and that the fertility is in proportion to the duration and quantity of the overflow. We may therefore safely conclude that the seven years of plenty were owing to an extraordinary overflowing of the Nile; and that the seven years of dearth were occasioned by a very partial, or total want of this essentially necessary inundation.

Verse 21. And when they had eaten them up, &c.] A most nervous and physically correct description.

Verse 26. God hath shewed Pharaoh what he is about to do.] Joseph thus shows the Egyptian king that though the ordinary cause of plenty or want is the river Nile, yet its inundations are under the direction of God: the dreams

28 This is the thing which I have spoken unto Pharaoh; What God is about to do, he sheweth unto Pharaoh.

29 Behold, there come seven years of great plenty throughout all the land of Egypt:

30 And there shall arise after them seven years of famine; and all the plenty shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt; and the famine shall consume the land;

31 And the plenty shall not be known in the land by reason of that famine following; for it shall be very grievous.

32 And for that the dream was doubled unto Pharaoh twice; it is because the thing is established by God, and God will shortly bring it to pass.

33 Now therefore let Pharaoh look out a man discreet and wise, and set him over the land of Egypt.

34 Let Pharaoh do this, and let him appoint officers over the land, and take up the fifth part of the land of Egypt in the seven plentiful years:

35 And let them gather all the food of those good years that come, and lay up corn under the hand of Pharaoh, and let them keep food in the cities.

36 And that food shall be for store to the land against the seven years of famine, which shall be in the land of Egypt; that the land perish not through the famine.

37 And the thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of all his servants.

38 And Pharaoh said unto his servants, Can we find such a one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?

39 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph. Forasmuch as God hath shewed thee all this, there is none so discreet and wise as thou art:

40 Thou shalt be over my house, and according unto thy word shall all my people be ruled: only in the throne will I be greater than thou.

are sent by him, not only to signify beforehand the plenty and want, but to show also that all these circumstances, however fortuitous they may appear to man, are under the direction of an overruling Providence.

Verse 31. The plenty shall not be known in the land by reason of that famine following.] As Egypt depends for its fertility on the flowing of the Nile, and this flowing is not always equal, there must be a point to which it must rise to saturate the land sufficiently, in order to produce grain sufficient for the support of its inhabitants. According to Pliny the ordinary height of the inundations is sixteen cubits.

When the Nile rises to eighteen cubits it prevents the sowing of the land in due season, and as necessarily produces a famine as when it does not overflow its banks.

Verse 38. A man discreet and wise.] As it is impossible that Joseph could have foreseen his own elevation, consequently he gave this advice without any reference to himself. The counsel therefore was either immediately inspired by God, or was dictated by policy, prudence, and sound sense.

Verse 34. Take up the fifth part of the land.] What is still called the meery, or that part of the produce which is claimed by the king by way of tax. It is probable that in Joseph's time it was not so much as a fifth part, most likely a tenth: but as this was an extraordinary occasion, and the earth brought forth by handfuls, ver. 47, the king would be justified in requiring a fifth; and from the great abundance, the people could pay this increased tax without feeling it to be oppressive.

Verse 35. Under the hand of Pharaoh.] To be completely at the disposal of the king.

41 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, See, I have *set thee over all the land of Egypt.

43 And he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had; <sup>f</sup>and they cried before him, <sup>g</sup>Bow the knee<sup>h</sup>: and he made him ruler <sup>i</sup>over all the land of Egypt.

44 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt.

45 And Pharaoh called Joseph's name <sup>j</sup>Zaphnath-paaneah; and he gave him to wife Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah <sup>k</sup>priest of On. And Joseph went out over all the land of Egypt.

46 And Joseph was thirty years old when he <sup>l</sup>stood before Pharaoh king of Egypt. And Joseph went out from the presence of Pharaoh, and went throughout all the land of Egypt.

47 And in the seven plenteous years the earth brought forth by handfuls.

Verse 38. In whom the Spirit of God is? If the Egyptians were idolaters, they acknowledged Joseph's God; and it is not to be supposed that they only became acquainted with him on this occasion. The knowledge of the true God was in Egypt long before; but it is very likely that though they acknowledged his influence with respect to Joseph, yet they might, notwithstanding, have their gods many and their lords many at this time, for we know that in religious matters they were exceedingly corrupt afterwards.

Verse 40. According unto thy word shall all my people be ruled] Literally, At thy mouth shall all my people kiss. In the eastern countries it is customary to kiss any thing that comes from a superior, and this is done by way of testifying respect and submission. In this sense the words in the text are to be understood: All the people shall pay the profoundest respect and obedience to all thy orders and commands.

Only in the throne will I be greater than thou.] This, in one word, is a perfect description of a prime minister. Thou shalt have the sole management, under me, of all state affairs.

Verse 42. And Pharaoh took off his ring—and put it upon Joseph's hand] In this ring was probably set the king's signet, by which the royal instruments were sealed; and thus Joseph was constituted what we would call Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal.

Vestures of fine linen] Whether this means linen or cotton is not known. It seems to have been a term by which both were denominated; or it may be some other substance or cloth with which we are unacquainted. If the fine linen of Egypt was such as that which invests the bodies of the mummies, and these in general were persons of the first distinction, and consequently were enveloped in cloth of the finest quality, it was only fine comparatively speaking, Egypt being the only place at that time where such cloth was manufactured.

Put a gold chain about his neck] This was not merely a badge of office. The chain might be intended to point out the union which should subsist between all parts of the government—the king, his ministers, and the people; as also that necessary dependence which they had reciprocally on each other, as well as the connexion which must be preserved between the different members of the body politic, and the laws and institutions by which they were to be governed. Its being of gold might be intended to show the excellence, utility, and permanence of a government constituted on wise, just, and equal laws. We are justified in drawing such inferences as these, because in ancient times, in all nations, every thing was made an emblem or representation of some spiritual or moral subject.

Verse 43. He made him to ride in the second chariot] That 48 And he gathered up all the food of the seven years, which were in the land of Egypt, and laid up the food in the cities: the food of the field, which was round about every city, laid he up in the same.

49 And Joseph gathered <sup>m</sup>corn as the sand of the sea, very much, until he had left numbering; for it was without number.

50 <sup>n</sup>And unto Joseph were born two sons before the years of famine came, which Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah <sup>o</sup>priest of On bare unto him.

51 And Joseph called the name of the first-born <sup>p</sup>Manasseh: For God, said he, hath made me forget all my toil, and all my father's house.

52 And the name of the second called he <sup>q</sup>Ephraim: For God hath caused me to be <sup>r</sup>fruitful in the land of my affliction.

53 And the seven years of plenteousness that was in the land of Egypt, were ended.

54 <sup>s</sup>And the seven years of dearth began to come, <sup>t</sup>according as Joseph had said: and the dearth was in all lands; but in all the land of Egypt there was bread.

55 And when all the land of Egypt was famished, which usually followed the king's chariot in public ceremonies.

Bow the knee] Abrech, which we translate bow the knee, and which we might as well translate any thing else, is probably an Egyptian word, the signification of which is utterly unknown. [Some derive Abrech from the Coptic Abork, to throw down. Kalisch renders it by Governor.]

Verse 44. I am Pharaoh] The same as if he had said, I am the king; for Pharaoh was the common title of the sovereigns of Egypt.

Verse 45. Zaphnath-paaneah] The meaning of this title is as little known as that of abrech in the preceding verse. Some translate it, The revealer of secrets; others, The treasury of glorious comfort. All the etymologies hitherto given of this word are, to say the least of them, doubtful. I believe it also to be an Egyptian epithet, designating the office to which he was now raised; and similar to our compound terms, Prime-Minister, Lord-Chancellor, High-Treasurer, Chief-Justice, &c. [Kalisch quotes many conjectures, but without any satisfactory conclusion.]

Asenath, the daughter of Poti-pherah] There is no likelihood that the Poti-pherah mentioned here, is the same as the Potiphar who had purchased Joseph, and, on the false accusation of his wife, cast him into prison.

Priest of On] ON is rendered Heliopolis (the city of the sun) by the Septuagint and Anglo-Saxon; and it is very likely that this Poti-pherah was intendant of that nome or province, under Pharaoh.

Joseph went out over all the land] No doubt for the building of granaries, and appointing proper officers to receive the corn in every place.

Verse 46. Joseph was thirty years old] As he was seven-teen years old when he was sold into Egypt, chap. xxxvii. 2, and was now thirty, he must have been thirteen years in slavery.

Stood before Pharaoh] This phrase always means admission to the immediate presence of the sovereign, and having the honour of his most unlimited confidence. Among the Asiatic princes, the privilege of coming even to their seat, of standing before them, &c., was granted only to the highest favourites.

Verse 47. The earth brought forth by handfuls] This probably refers principally to rice, as it grows in tufts, a great number of stalks proceeding from the same seed.

Verse 50. Two sons] MANASSEH signifies forgetfulness; and EPHRAIM, fruitfulness; and he called his sons by these names, because God had enabled him to forget all his toil, disgrace, and affliction, and had made him fruitful in the very land in which he had suffered the greatest misfortune and indignities.

the people cried to Pharaoh for bread: and Pharaoh said unto all the Egyptians, Go unto Joseph; what he saith to you, do.

56 And the famine was over all the face of the earth. And Joseph opened <sup>a</sup>all the store-houses,

Verse 54. The seven years of dearth began to come] Owing in Egypt to the Nile not rising more than twelve or thirteen cubits; but there must have been other causes which affected other countries, not immediately dependent on the Nile, though remotely connected with Egypt and Canaan.

The dearth was in all lands] All the countries dependent on the Nile. And it appears that a general drought had taken place, at least through all Egypt and Canaan; for it is said, ver. 57, that the famine was sore in all lands—Egypt and Canaan, and their respective dependencies.

Verse 55. When all the land of Egypt was famished] As Pharaoh, by the advice of Joseph, had exacted a fifth part of all the grain during the seven years of plenty, it is very likely that no more was left than what was merely necessary to supply the ordinary demand, both in the way of home consumption and for the purpose of barter or sale to neighbouring countries.

Verse 56. Over all the face of the earth.] The original should be translated all the face of that land, viz., Egypt, as it is explained at the end of the verse.

Verse 57. All countries came into Egypt—to buy] As there had not been a sufficiency of rains, vapours, &c., to swell the Nile, to effect a proper inundation in Egypt, the same cause would produce drought, and consequently scarcity, in all the neighbouring countries; and this may be all that is intended in the text.

1. As the providence of God evidently led the butler and baker of Pharaoh, as well as the king himself, to dream the and <sup>b</sup>sold unto the Egyptians; and the famine waxed sore in the land of Egypt.

57 <sup>c</sup>And all countries came into Egypt, to Joseph, for to buy corn; because that the famine was so sore in all lands.

prophetic dreams mentioned in this and the preceding chapter, so his Spirit in Joseph led to the true interpretation of them. What a proof do all these things give us of a providence that is so general as to extend its influence to every part, and so particular as to notice, influence, and direct the most minute circumstance!

2. Dreams have been on one hand superstitiously regarded, and on the other sceptically disregarded. That some are prophetic there can be no doubt; that others are idle none can hesitate to believe. Dreams may be divided into the six following kinds: 1. Those which are the mere nightly result of the mind's reflections and perplexities during the business of the day. 2. Those which spring from a diseased state of the body, occasioning startings, terrors, &c. 3. Those which spring from an impure state of the heart, mental repetitions of those acts or images of illicit pleasure which form the business of a profligate life. 4. Those which proceed from a diseased mind, occupied with schemes of pride, ambition, grandeur, &c. 5. Those which come immediately from Satan, which instil thoughts and principles opposed to truth and righteousness, leaving strong impressions on the mind suited to its natural bent and turn, which in the course of the day, by favouring circumstances, may be called into action. 6. Those which come from God, and which necessarily lead to him, whether prophetic of future good or evil, or impressing holy purposes and heavenly resolutions. Reader, there is often as much superstition in disregarding as in attending to dreams; and he who fears God will escape it in both.

CHAPTER XLII.

Jacob sends his ten sons to Egypt to buy corn, 1-3; but refuses to permit Benjamin to go, 4. They arrive in Egypt and bow themselves before Joseph, 5, 6. He treats them roughly, and calls them spies, 7-10. They defend themselves, and give an account of their family, 11-13. He appears unmoved, and puts them all in prison for three days, 14-17. On the third day he releases them on condition of their bringing Benjamin, 18-20. Being convicted by their consciences, they reproach themselves with their cruelty to their brother Joseph, and consider themselves under the displeasure of God, 21-23. Joseph is greatly affected, detains Simeon as a pledge for Benjamin, orders their sacks to be filled with corn, and the purchase money to be put in each man's sack, 24, 25. When one of them is going to give his ass provender he discovers his money in the mouth of his sack, at which they are greatly alarmed, 26-28. They come to their father in Canaan, and relate what happened to them in their journey, 29-34. On emptying their sacks, each man's money is found in his sack's mouth, which causes alarm both to them and their father, 35. Jacob deplores the loss of Joseph and Simeon, and refuses to let Benjamin go, though Reuben offers his two sons as pledges for his safety, 36-38.

NOW when <sup>a</sup>Jacob saw that there was corn in Egypt, Jacob said unto his sons, Why do ye look one upon another?

2 And he said, Behold, I have heard that there is corn in Egypt: get you down thither, and buy for us from thence; that we may <sup>b</sup>live, and not die.

3 And Joseph's ten brethren went down to buy corn in Egypt.

Verse 1. Jacob saw that there was corn] That is, Jacob heard from the report of others that there was plenty in Egypt. The operations of one sense, in Hebrew, are often put for those of another. Before agriculture was properly known and practised, famines were frequent; Canaan seems to have been peculiarly vexed by them.

Verse 6. Joseph was the governor] Shallit, an intendant, 4 But Benjamin, Joseph's brother, Jacob sent not with his brethren; for he said, <sup>c</sup>Lest peradventure mischief befall him.

5 And the sons of Israel came to buy corn among those that came: for the famine was <sup>d</sup>in the land of Canaan.

6 And Joseph was the governor <sup>e</sup>over the land, and he <sup>f</sup>it was that sold to all the people of the land: and Joseph's brethren came, and <sup>g</sup>bowed down a protector; hence shelitim, shields, or arms for protection and defence; and shilton, power and authority, Eccles. viii. 4, 8; and hence the Arabic sultan. Was it not from this very circumstance, Joseph being shaltit, that all the Mohammedan governors of Egypt, &c., took the title of sultan?

Bowed down themselves before him] Thus fulfilling the prophetic dream, chap. xxxvii. 7, 8, which they had taken themselves before him with their faces to the earth.

7 And Joseph saw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them, and spake roughly unto them; and he said unto them, Whence come ye? And they said, From the land of Canaan to buy food.

8 (And Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him.)

9 And Joseph remembered the dreams which he dreamed of them, and said unto them, Ye are spies; to see the nakedness of the land ye are come.

10 And they said unto him, Nay, my lord, but to buy food are thy servants come.

11 We are all one man's sons; we are true men, thy servants are no spies.

12 And he said unto them, Nay, but to see the nakedness of the land ye are come.

13 And they said, Thy servants are twelve brethren, the sons of one man in the land of Canaan; and, behold, the youngest is this day with our father, and one is not.

14 And Joseph said unto them, That is it that I spake unto you, saying, Ye are spies:

15 Hereby ye shall be proved: By the life of Pharaoh ye shall not go forth hence, except your youngest brother come hither.

16 Send one of you, and let him fetch your brother, and ye shall be kept in prison, that your words may be proved, whether there be any truth in you: or else by the life of Pharaoh surely ye are spies.

17 And he put them all together into ward three days.

every precaution to render null and void. But there is neither might nor counsel against the Lord.

Verse 9. Ye are spies] Ye are footmen, trampers about, footpads, vagabonds; persons who, under the pretence of wishing to buy corn, desire only to find out whether the land be so defenceless that the tribes to which ye belong (see ver. 11) may attack it successfully. Thus Joseph spake roughly to them merely to cover that warmth of affection which he felt towards them; and that being thus brought, apparently, into straits and dangerous circumstances, their consciences might be awakened to reflect on and abhor their own wickedness.

Verse 11. We are all one man's sons] We do not belong to different tribes, and it is not likely that one family would make a hostile attempt upon a whole kingdom. This seems to be the very ground that Joseph took, viz., that they were persons belonging to different tribes. Against this particularly they set up their defence, asserting that they all belonged to one family; and it is on the proof of this that Joseph puts them, in obliging them to leave one as a hostage, and insisting on their bringing their remaining brother; so that he took exactly the same precautions to detect them as if he had had no acquaintance with them, and had every reason to be suspicious.

Verse 13. One is not.] An elliptical sentence, One is not alive.

Verse 15. By the life of Pharaoh] Pharaoh liveth. As if he had said, As surely as the king of Egypt lives, so surely shall ye not go hence unless your brother come hither. Here therefore is no oath; and our translators should not have put it in the form of one, especially as the original not only will bear another version, but is absolutely repugnant to this in our sense of the word.

Verse 18. I fear God] Literally translated the passage runs thus, I also fear the gods; but the emphatic prefix is probably added by Joseph, both here and in his conversation with Pharaoh, the more particularly to point out the eminence and perfection of the Supreme Being as contrasted with the gods of Egypt.

18 And Joseph said unto them the third day, This do, and live; for I fear God:

19 If ye be true men, let one of your brethren be bound in the house of your prison: go ye, carry corn for the famine of your houses:

20 But bring your youngest brother unto me: so shall your words be verified, and ye shall not die. And they did so.

21 And they said one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us.

22 And Reuben answered them, saying, Spako I not unto you, saying, Do not sin against the child; and ye would not hear? therefore, behold, also his blood is required.

23 And they knew not that Joseph understood them; for he spake unto them by an interpreter.

24 And he turned himself about from them, and wept; and returned to them again, and communed with them, and took from them Simeon, and bound him before their eyes.

25 Then Joseph commanded to fill their sacks with corn, and to restore every man's money into his sack, and to give them provision for the way: and thus did he unto them.

26 And they laden their asses with the corn, and departed thence.

27 And as one of them opened his sack to give his ass provender in the inn, he espied his money; for, behold, it was in his sack's mouth.

Verse 21. We are verily guilty] How finely are the office and influence of conscience exemplified in these words! It was about twenty-two years since they had sold their brother, and probably their conscience had been lulled asleep to the present hour.

Verse 23. For he spake unto them by an interpreter.] Either there was a very great difference between the two languages as then spoken, or Joseph, to prevent all suspicion, might affect to be ignorant of both. [The ancient Egyptian which Joseph spoke was quite distinct from the Hebrew and all the Semitic tongues.]

Verse 24. Took—Simeon, and bound him before their eyes.] This was retaliation, if, as the rabbins suppose, it was Simeon who bound Joseph, and put him into the pit.

Verse 25. Commanded to fill their sacks] Their vessels; probably large woollen bags, or baskets lined with leather, which are still in use through all Asia. These vessels must have been different from those called sak in the twenty-seventh and following verses, which was probably only a small sack, in which each had reserved a sufficiency of corn for his ass during the journey; the larger vessels or bags serving to hold the wheat or rice they had brought, and their own packages.

Verse 26. They laden their asses] Amounting, no doubt, to several scores, if not hundreds, else they could not have brought a sufficiency of corn for the support of so large a family as that of Jacob.

Verse 27. One of them opened his sack] Each of the ten brethren on emptying his sack when he returned found his money in it; can we suppose that this was not discovered by them all before? It seems not; and the reason was probably this: the money was put in the mouth of the sack of one only, in the sacks of the others it was placed at or near to the bottom.

In the inn] The place at which they stopped to bait or rest themselves and their asses. Our word inn gives us a false idea here; there were no such places of entertainment at that time in the desert over which they had to pass; even caravanseries were not then in use, which are gene-

28 And he said unto his brethren, My money is restored; and, lo, it is even in my sack: and their heart <sup>a</sup> failed them, and they were afraid, saying one to another, What is this that God hath done unto us?

29 And they came unto Jacob their father unto the land of Canaan, and told him all that befell unto them; saying,

30 The man, who is the lord of the land, spake <sup>b</sup> roughly to us, and took us for spies of the country.

31 And we said unto him, We are true men; we are no spies:

32 We be twelve brethren, sons of our father; one is not, and the youngest is this day with our father in the land of Canaan.

33 And the man, the lord of the country, said unto us, <sup>c</sup> Hereby shall I know that ye are true men; leave one of your brethren here with me, and take food for the famine of your households, and be gone:

34 And bring your youngest brother unto me:

rally no more than four walls perfectly exposed, the place being open at the top.

Verse 28. Their heart failed them] Their heart went out. This refers to that spasmodic affection which is felt in the breast at any sudden alarm or fright.

What is this that God hath done unto us?] Their guilty consciences, now thoroughly awakened, were in continual alarms; they felt that they deserved God's curse, and every occurrence served to confirm and increase their suspicions.

Verse 36. All these things are against me.] All these things are upon me. Not badly translated by the Vulgate, "All these evils fall back upon me."

Verse 37. Slay my two sons, if I bring him not to thee] These words show the honesty and affection of Reuben's heart; he felt deeply for his father's distress, and was determined to risk and hazard every thing in order to relieve and comfort him. There is scarcely a transaction in which Reuben is concerned that does not serve to set his character in an amiable point of view, except the single instance mentioned chap. xxv. 22.

Verse 38. He is left alone] That is, Benjamin is the only remaining son of Rachel; for he supposed Joseph, who was the other son, to be dead.

Shall ye bring down my gray hairs with sorrow] Here he keeps up the idea of the oppressive burden mentioned ver. 36, to which every occurrence was adding an additional weight, so that he felt it impossible to support it any longer.

1. There is one doctrine relative to the economy of divine providence little heeded among men; the doctrine then shall I know that ye are no spies, but that ye are true men: so will I deliver you your brother, and ye shall <sup>d</sup> traffick in this land.

35 And it came to pass as they emptied their sacks, that, behold, <sup>e</sup> every man's bundle of money was in his sack: and when both they and their father saw the bundles of money, they were afraid.

36 And Jacob their father said unto them, Me have ye <sup>f</sup> bereaved of my children: Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away: all these things are against me.

37 And Reuben spake unto his father, saying, Slay my two sons, if I bring him not to thee: deliver him into my hand, and I will bring him to thee again.

38 And he said, My son shall not go down with you; for <sup>g</sup> his brother is dead, and he is left alone: <sup>h</sup> if mischief befall him by the way in which ye go, then shall ye <sup>i</sup> bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.

of restitution. When a man has done wrong to his neighbour, though on his repentance, and faith in our Lord Jesus, God forgives him his sin, yet he requires him to make restitution to the person injured, if it lie in the compass of his power. If he do not, God will take care to exact it in the course of his providence. No man should expect mercy at the hand of God who, having wronged his neighbour, refuses, when he has it in his power, to make restitution. Were he to weep tears of blood, both the justice and mercy of God would shut out his prayer, if he made not his neighbour amends for the injury he may have done him.

2. The ways of providence are often to us dark and perplexed, so that we are ready to imagine that good can never result from what appears to us to be directly contrary to our interest; and we are often tempted to think that those very providential dealings of God, which have for their object our present and eternal welfare, are rather proofs of his displeasure, or evidences of his vindictive judgment. All these things are against me, said poor desponding Jacob; whereas, instead of being against him, all these things were for him; and by all these means was the merciful God working for the preservation of himself and his family, and the fulfilment of his ancient promise, that the posterity of Abraham should be as the stars of heaven for multitude. How strange is it that our faith, after so many evidences of his goodness, should still be so weak; and that our opinion of him should be so imperfect that we can never trust in him but while he is under our own eye!

CHAPTER XLIII.

The famine continuing, Jacob desires his sons to go again to Egypt and buy some food, 1, 2. Judah shows the necessity of Benjamin's accompanying them, without whom it would be useless to return to Egypt, 3-5. Jacob expostulates with him, 6. Judah replies, and offers to become surety for Benjamin, 7-10. Jacob at last consents, and desires them to take a present with them for the governor of Egypt; and double money, that which they had brought back in their sacks' mouth, and the price of the load they were now to bring; and, having prayed for them, sends them away, 11-15. They arrive in Egypt, and are brought to Joseph's house to dine with him, at which they are greatly alarmed, 16-18. They speak to the steward of Joseph's house concerning the money returned in their sacks, 19-22. He gives them encouragement, 23, 24. Having made ready the present, they bring it to Joseph when he came home to dine, 25, 26. He speaks kindly to them, and inquires concerning their health, and that of their father, 27, 28. Joseph is greatly affected at seeing his brother Benjamin, 29-31. They dine with him, and are distinguished according to their seniority; but Benjamin receives marks of peculiar favour, 32-34.

AND the famine was sore in the land.
2 And it came to pass, when they had eaten up the corn which they had brought out of Egypt, their father said unto them, Go again, buy us a little food.

3 And Judah spake unto him, saying, The man did solemnly protest unto us, saying, Ye shall not see my face, except your brother be with you.

4 If thou wilt send our brother with us, we will go down and buy thee food:

5 But if thou wilt not send him, we will not go down: for the man said unto us, Ye shall not see my face, except your brother be with you.

6 And Israel said, Wherefore dealt ye so ill with me, as to tell the man whether ye had yet a brother.

7 And they said, The man asked us straitly of our state, and of our kindred, saying, Is your father yet alive? have ye another brother? and we told him according to the tenor of these words: 'could we certainly know that he would say, Bring your brother down?'

8 And Judah said unto Israel his father, Send the lad with me, and we will arise and go; that we may live, and not die, both we, and thou, and also our little ones.

9 I will be surety for him; of my hand shalt thou require him: if I bring him not unto thee, and set him before thee, then let me bear the blame for ever.

10 For except we had lingered, surely now we had returned this second time.

11 And their father Israel said unto them, If it must be so now, do this: take of the best fruits in the land in your vessels, and carry down the man a present, a little balm, and a little honey, spices and myrrh, nuts and almonds;

12 And take double money in your hand; and the money that was brought again in the mouth of your sacks, carry it again in your hand; peradventure it was an oversight:

13 Take also your brother, and arise, go again unto the man:

14 And God Almighty give you mercy before the man, that he may send away your other brother, and Benjamin. 'If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved.'

15 And the men took that present, and they took double money in their hand, and Benjamin; and rose up, and went down to Egypt, and stood up before Joseph.

16 And when Joseph saw Benjamin with them, he said to the ruler of his house, Bring these men home, and slay, and make ready; for these men shall dine with me at noon.

17 And the man did as Joseph bade; and the man brought the men into Joseph's house.

18 And the men were afraid, because they were brought into Joseph's house; and they said, Because of the money that was returned in our sacks at the first time are we brought in: that he may seek occasion against us, and fall upon us, and take us for bondmen, and our asses.

19 And they came near to the steward of Joseph's house, and they communed with him at the door of the house,

20 And said, O sir, we came indeed down at the first time to buy food:

21 And it came to pass, when we came to the inn, that we opened our sacks, and, behold, every man's money was in the mouth of his sack, our money in full weight: and we have brought it again in our hand.

22 And other money have we brought down in our hands to buy food: we cannot tell who put our money in our sacks.

23 And he said, Peace be to you, fear not: your Verse 8. Send the lad with me] Benjamin was at this time at least twenty-four years of age, some think thirty, and had a family of his own.

That we may live, and not die] An argument drawn from self-preservation, what some have termed the first law of nature.

Verse 9. Let me bear the blame for ever.] Then shall I sin against thee all my days, and consequently be liable to punishment for violating my faith.

Verse 11. Carry down the man a present] From the very earliest times presents were used as means of introduction to great men: Prov. xviii. 16. But what was the present brought to Joseph on this occasion? We are obliged to be contented with probabilities and conjecture. According to our translation, the gifts were balm, honey, spices, myrrh, nuts, and almonds.

Balm] It is supposed to signify resin in general, or some kind of gum issuing from trees.

Honey] This has been supposed to be the same as the rob of grapes, called in Egypt dibs. Others think that honey, in the common sense of the term, is to be understood here: we know that honey was plentiful in Palestine.

Spices] Probably Gum Storax, which might be very valuable on account of its qualities as a perfume.

Myrrh] Some think this means stacte; others an ointment made of myrrh.

Nuts] By some rendered pistachio nuts, those produced in Syria being the finest in the world; by others, dates; others, walnuts; others, pine-apples; others, the nuts of the terebinth tree.

Almonds] Correctly enough translated, and perhaps the only article in the collection of which we know any thing with certainty. It is generally allowed that the land of Canaan produces the best almonds in the east; and on this account they might be deemed a very acceptable present to the governor of Egypt.

Verse 12. Double money] What was returned in their sacks, and what was further necessary to buy another load.

Verse 14. It appears that this verse was spoken prophetically; and that God at this time gave Jacob a supernatural evidence that his children should be restored.

Verse 16. Slay, and make ready] Slay a slaying,—let preparations be made for a great feast or entertainment.

Verse 18. And the men were afraid] A guilty conscience needs no accuser. Every thing alarms them; they now feel that God is exacting retribution, and they know not what the degrees shall be, nor where it shall stop.

Fall upon us] A metaphor taken from wrestlers; when a man has overthrown his antagonist, he rolls himself upon him, in order to keep him down.

And our asses.] Which they probably had in great number with them; and which, if captured, would have been a great loss to the family of Jacob, as such cattle must have constituted a principal part of its riches.

Verse 20. O sir, we came indeed—to buy food] There is a frankness now in the conduct of Joseph's brethren that did not exist before; they simply and honestly relate the whole circumstance of the money being found in their sacks on their return from their last journey. Afflictions from the hand of God, and under his direction, have a wonderful tendency to humble the soul. Did men know how gracious his designs are in sending such, no murmur would ever be heard against the dispensations of Divine Providence.

Verse 23. And he said] The address of the steward in this verse plainly proves that the knowledge of the true

God, and the God of your father, hath given you treasure in your sacks: *I had your money. And he brought Simeon out unto them.

24 And the man brought the men into Joseph's house, and <sup>b</sup>gave them water, and they washed their feet; and he gave their asses provender.

25 And they made ready the present against Joseph came at noon: for they heard that they should eat bread there.

26 And when Joseph came home, they brought him the present which was in their hand into the house, and <sup>c</sup>bowed themselves to him to the earth.

27 And he asked them of their <sup>d</sup>welfare, and said, *Is your father well, the old man <sup>e</sup>of whom ye spake? Is he yet alive?

28 And they answered, Thy servant our father is in good health, he is yet alive. *And they bowed down their heads, and made obeisance.

29 And he lifted up his eyes, and saw his brother Benjamin, <sup>b</sup>his mother's son, and said, Is this your younger brother, <sup>1</sup> of whom ye spake unto me? And he said, God be gracious unto thee, my son!

30 And Joseph made haste; for <sup>1</sup>his bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he sought where to weep; and he entered into his chamber, and <sup>1</sup>wept there.

31 And he washed his face, and went out, and refrained himself, and said, Set on <sup>1</sup>bread.

32 And they set on for him by himself, and for them by themselves, and for the Egyptians, which did eat with him, by themselves: because the Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews; for that is <sup>1</sup>an abomination unto the Egyptians.

33 And they sat before him, the first-born according to his birth-right, and the youngest according to his youth: and the men marvelled one at another.

34 And he took and sent messes unto them from before him: But Benjamin's mess was <sup>1</sup>five times so much as any of theirs. And they drank, and <sup>1</sup>were merry with him.

God was in Egypt. It is probable that the steward himself was a Hebrew, and that Joseph had given him intimation of the whole affair; and though he was not at liberty to reveal it, yet he gives them assurances that the whole business would issue happily.

I had your money.] Ye have no reason to be apprehensive of any evil; the whole transaction is between myself and you; receive therefore the money as a present from the God of your father, no matter whose hands he makes use of to convey it. The conduct of the steward, as well as his words, had a great tendency to relieve their burdened minds.

Verse 27. And he asked them of their welfare] This verse may be thus translated: "And he asked them concerning their prosperity; And he said, Is your father prosperous, the old man who ye told me was alive? And they said, Thy servant our father prospers; he is yet alive."

Verse 29. He lifted up his eyes, and saw his brother Benjamin] They were probably introduced to him successively; and as Benjamin was the youngest, he would of course be introduced last.

God be gracious unto thee, my son!] A usual salutation in the East from the aged and superiors to the younger and inferiors, which, though very emphatic and expressive in ancient times, in the present day means no more than "I am your humble servant," or "I am exceedingly glad to see you;" words which among us mean—just nothing. Even in David's time they seem to have been, not only devoid of meaning, but used as a cloak for the basest and most treacherous designs: They bless with their mouths, but they curse inwardly. Hence Joab salutes Amasa, kisses him with apparent affection, and stabs him in the same moment! The case of Judas, betraying the Son of Man with a kiss, will not be forgotten.

Verse 32. They set on for him by himself, &c.] From the text it appears evident that there were three tables, one for Joseph, one for the Egyptians, and one for the eleven brethren.

The Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews] There might have been some political reason for this, but independently of this, two may be assigned. 1. The Hebrews were shepherds; and Egypt had been almost ruined by hordes of lawless wandering banditti, under the name of Hycsos or King-shepherds, who had but a short time before this been expelled from the land by Amasis, after they had held it in subjection for 259 years, according to Manetho, committing the most wanton cruelties. 2. The Hebrews sacrificed those animals which the Egyptians held sacred, and fed on their flesh. The Egyptians were in general very superstitious, and would have no social intercourse with people of any other nation; hence we are informed that they would not even use the knife of a Greek, because they might have reason to suspect it had cut the flesh of some of those animals which they held sacred. [The reason of the refusal of an Egyptian to eat with a Hebrew was simply a question of caste. The dynasty of the shepherd-kings was now in power.] Some are of opinion that the Egyptian idolatry, especially their worship of Apis under the figure of an ox, was posterior to the time of Joseph; ancient monuments are rather against this opinion, but it is impossible to decide either way.

Verse 33. The first-born according to his birth-right] This must greatly astonish these brethren, to find themselves treated with so much ceremony, and at the same time with so much discernment of their respective ages.

Verse 34. Benjamin's mess was five times so much as any of theirs] The circumstance of Benjamin's having a mess five times as large as any of his brethren, shows the peculiar honour which Joseph designed to confer upon him.

1. The scarcity in Canaan was not absolute; though they had no corn, they had honey, nuts, almonds, &c. In the midst of judgment, God remembers mercy. If there was scarcity in Canaan, there was plenty in Egypt; and though his providence had denied one country corn, and accumulated it in the other, his bounty had placed in the former money enough to procure it from the latter. How true is the saying, "It is never ill with any but it might be worse!" Let us be deeply thankful to God that we have anything, seeing we deserve no good at his hands.

2. If we examine our circumstances closely, and call to remembrance the dealings of God's providence towards us, we shall find that we can sing much both of mercy and of judgment. For one day of absolute unavoidable want, we shall find we had three hundred and sixty-four, if not of fulness, yet of a competency. Famines, though rarely happening, are everywhere recorded; innumerable years of abundance are scarcely ever registered! Such is the perverseness and ingratitude of man!

CHAPTER XLIV.

Joseph commands his steward to put his cup secretly into Benjamin's sack, 1, 2. The sons of Jacob depart with the corn they had purchased, 3. Joseph commands his steward to pursue them, and charge them with having stolen his cup, 4-6. The brethren excuse themselves, protest their innocence, and offer to submit to be slaves should the cup be found with any of them, 7-9. Search is made, and the cup is found in Benjamin's sack, 10-12. They are brought back, and submit themselves to Joseph, 13-16. He determines that Benjamin alone, with whom the cup is found, shall remain in captivity, 17. Judah, in a most affecting speech, pleads for Benjamin's enlargement, and offers himself to be a bondman in his stead, 18-34.

AND he commanded *the steward of his house, saying, Fill the men's sacks with food, as much as they can carry, and put every man's money in his sack's mouth;

2 And put my cup, the silver cup, in the sack's mouth of the youngest, and his corn money. And he did according to the word that Joseph had spoken.

3 As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away, they and their asses.

4 And when they were gone out of the city, and not yet far off, Joseph said unto his steward, Up, follow after the men; and when thou dost overtake them, say unto them, Wherefore have ye rewarded evil for good?

5 Is not this it in which my lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he <sup>b</sup>divineth? ye have done evil in so doing.

6 And he overtook them, and he spake unto them these same words.

7 And they said unto him, Wherefore saith my lord these words? God forbid that thy servants should do according to this thing:

8 Behold, *the money, which we found in our sacks' mouths, we brought again unto thee out of the land of Canaan: how then should we steal out of thy lord's house silver or gold.

9 With whomsoever of thy servants it be found, <sup>a</sup>both let him die, and we also will be my lord's bondmen.

10 And he said, Now also let it be according unto your words: he, with whom it is found, shall be my servant; and ye shall be blameless.

11 Then they speedily took down every man his sack to the ground, and opened every man his sack.

12 And he searched, and began at the eldest, and left at the youngest; and the cup was found in Benjamin's sack.

Verse 2. Put my cup—in the sack's mouth of the youngest] The stratagem of the cup seems to have been designed to bring Joseph's brethren into the highest state of perplexity and distress, that their deliverance by the discovery that Joseph was their brother might have its highest effect.

Verse 5. Whereby—he divineth?] Divination by cups has been from time immemorial prevalent among the Asiatics. And though it is not at all likely that Joseph practised any kind of divination, yet probably, according to the superstition of those times, supernatural influence might be attributed to his cup; and as the whole transaction related here was merely intended to deceive his brethren for a short time, he might as well affect divination by his cup, as he affected to believe they had stolen it. The steward therefore uses the word nachash in its proper meaning: Is not this it out of which my lord drinketh, and in which he inspecteth accurately? ver. 5. And hence Joseph says, ver. 15: Wot ye not—

13 Then they *rent their clothes, and laded every man his ass, and returned to the city.

14 And Judah and his brethren came to Joseph's house; for he was yet there: and they 'fell before him on the ground.

15 And Joseph said unto them, What deed is this that ye have done? wot ye not that such a man as I can certainly <sup>a</sup>divine?

16 And Judah said, What shall we say unto my lord? what shall we speak? or how shall we clear ourselves? God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants: behold, <sup>b</sup>we are my lord's servants, both we, and he also with whom the cup is found.

17 And he said, <sup>c</sup>God forbid that I should do so: but the man in whose hand the cup is found, he shall be my servant; and as for you, get you up in peace to your father.

18 Then Judah came near unto him, and said, Oh, my lord, let thy servant, I pray thee, speak a word in my lord's ears, and <sup>d</sup>let not thine anger burn against thy servant: for thou art even as Pharaoh.

19 My lord asked his servants, saying, Have ye a father, or a brother?

20 And we said unto my lord, We have a father, an old man, and <sup>e</sup>a child of his old age, a little one; and his brother is dead, and he alone is left of his mother, and his father loveth him.

21 And thou saidst unto thy servants, <sup>f</sup>Bring him down unto me, that I may set mine eyes upon him.

22 And we said unto my lord, The lad cannot leave his father: if he should leave his father, his father would die.

23 And thou saidst unto thy servants, <sup>g</sup>Except your youngest brother come down with you, ye shall see my face no more.

24 And it came to pass when we came up unto xvii. 15.—<sup>h</sup> Ch. xviii. 30, 32. Exod. xxxii. 22.—<sup>i</sup> Ch. xxxvii. 3.—<sup>j</sup> Ch. xlii. 15, 20.—<sup>k</sup> Ch. xliii. 3, 5.

did ye not know, that such a person as I (having such a cup) would accurately and attentively look into it?

Verse 16. What shall we say, &c.] No words can more strongly mark confusion and perturbation of mind. They, no doubt, all thought that Benjamin had actually stolen the cup; and the probability of his guilt might be heightened by the circumstance of his having that very cup to drink out of at dinner; for as he had the most honourable mess, so it is likely he had the most honourable cup to drink out of at the entertainment.

Verse 18. Thou art even as Pharaoh.] As wise, as powerful, and as much to be dreaded as he. In the Asiatic countries, the reigning monarch is always considered to be the pattern of all perfection; and the highest honour that can be conferred on any person, is to resemble him to the monarch, as the monarch himself is likened, in the same complimentary way, to an angel of God. Judah is the chief speaker thy servant, my father, we told him the words of my lord.

25 And <sup>a</sup>our father said, Go again, and buy us a little food.

26 And we said, We cannot go down: if our youngest brother be with us, then will we go down: for we may not see the man's face, except our youngest brother be with us.

27 And thy servant my father said unto us, Ye know that <sup>b</sup>my wife bare me two sons:

28 And the one went out from me, and I said, <sup>c</sup>Surely he is torn in pieces: and I saw him not since.

29 And if ye <sup>d</sup>take this also from me, and mischief befall him, ye shall bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.

here, because it was in consequence of his becoming surety for Benjamin that Jacob permitted him to accompany them to Egypt.

No paraphrase can heighten the effect of Judah's address to Joseph. To add would be to diminish its excellence; to attempt to explain would be to obscure its beauties; to clothe the ideas in other language than that of Judah, and his translators in our Bible, would ruin its energy, and destroy its influence. It is perhaps one of the most tender, father, and the lad be not with us: (seeing that <sup>a</sup> his life is bound up in the lad's life;)

31 It shall come to pass, when he seeth that the lad is not with us, that he will die; and thy servants shall bring down the gray hairs of thy servant our father with sorrow to the grave.

32 For thy servant became surety for the lad unto my father, saying, 'If I bring him not unto thee, then I shall bear the blame to my father for ever.

33 Now therefore, I pray thee, <sup>e</sup>let thy servant abide instead of the lad, a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren.

34 For how shall I go up to my father, and the lad be not with me? lest peradventure I see the evil that shall <sup>b</sup>come on my father.

affecting pieces of natural oratory ever spoken or penned; and we need not wonder to find that when Joseph heard it he could not refrain himself, but wept aloud. His soul must have been insensible beyond what is common to human nature, had he not immediately yielded to a speech so delicately tender, and so powerfully impressive. We cannot but deplore the unnatural and unscientific division of the narrative in our common Bibles, which obliges us to have recourse to another chapter in order to witness the effects which this speech produced on the heart of Joseph.

CHAPTER XLV.

Joseph, deeply affected with the speech of Judah, could no longer conceal himself, but discovers himself to his brethren, 1-4. Excuses their conduct towards him, and attributes the whole to the providence of God, 5-8. Orders them to hasten to Canaan, and bring up their father and their own families, cattle, &c., because there were five years of the famine yet to come, 9-13. He embraces and converses with all his brethren, 14, 15. Pharaoh, hearing that Joseph's brethren were come to Egypt, and that Joseph had desired them to return to Canaan and bring back their families, not only confirms the order, but promises them the best part of the land of Egypt to dwell in; and provides them carriages to transport themselves and their households, 16-20. Joseph provides them with waggons according to the commandment of Pharaoh; and, having given them various presents, sends them away with suitable advice, 21-24. They depart, arrive in Canaan, and announce the glad tidings to their father, who for a time believes not, but being assured of the truth of their relation, is greatly comforted, and resolves to visit Egypt, 25-28.

THEN Joseph could not refrain himself before all them that stood by him; and he cried, Cause every man to go out from me. And there stood no man with him, while Joseph made himself known unto his brethren.

2 And he <sup>a</sup>wept aloud: and the Egyptians and the house of Pharaoh heard.

3 And Joseph said unto his brethren, <sup>b</sup>I am

Verse 1. Joseph could not refrain himself] The word signifies to force one's self, to do something against nature, to do violence to one's self. Joseph could no longer constrain himself to act a feigned part—all the brother and the son rose up in him at once, and overpowered all his resolutions; he felt for his father, he realized his disappointment and agony; and he felt for his brethren, "now at his feet submissive in distress;" and, that he might give free and full scope to his feelings, and the most ample play to the workings of his affectionate heart, he ordered all his attendants to go out, while he made himself known to his brethren.

Joseph; doth my father yet live? And his brethren could not answer him; for they were <sup>a</sup>troubled at his presence.

4 And Joseph said unto his brethren, Come near to me, I pray you. And they came near. And he said, I am Joseph your brother, <sup>d</sup>whom ye sold into Egypt.

5 Now therefore <sup>e</sup>be not grieved, nor angry with 50.—<sup>a</sup> Ch. xxxvii. 28.—<sup>b</sup> Isa. xl. 2. 2 Cor. ii. 7.—<sup>c</sup> Heb. neither let there be anger in your eyes.

Verse 2. The Egyptians and the house of Pharaoh heard.] It seems strange that Joseph should have wept so loud that his cries should be heard at some considerable distance, as we may suppose his dwelling was not very nigh to the palace! But the house of Pharaoh may certainly signify Pharaoh's servants, or any of the members of his household, such as those whom Joseph had desired to withdraw, and who might still be within hearing of his voice. After all, the words may only mean that the report was brought to Pharaoh's house.

Verse 5. Be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves] This yourselves, that ye sold me hither: *for God did send me before you to preserve life.

6 For these two years hath the famine been in the land: and yet there are five years, in the which there shall neither be eating nor harvest.

7 And God sent me before you <sup>b</sup> to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance.

8 So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God: and he hath made me <sup>c</sup> a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt.

9 Haste ye, and go up to my father, and say unto him, Thus saith thy son Joseph, God hath made me lord of all Egypt: come down unto me, tarry not:

10 And <sup>d</sup>thou shalt dwell in the land of Goshen, and thou shalt be near unto me, thou, and thy children, and thy children's children, and thy flocks, and thy herds, and all that thou hast.

11 And there will I nourish thee; (for yet there are five years of famine:) send thou, and thy household, and all that thou hast, come to poverty.

12 And, behold, your eyes see, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin, that it is <sup>e</sup> my mouth that speaketh unto you.

13 And ye shall tell my father of all my glory in Egypt, and of all that ye have seen; and ye shall haste and <sup>f</sup>bring down my father hither.

14 And he fell upon his brother Benjamin's neck, and wept; and Benjamin wept upon his neck.

15 Moreover, he kissed all his brethren, and wept upon them: and after that his brethren talked with him.

16 And the fame thereof was heard in Pharaoh's house, saying, Joseph's brethren are come: and it <sup>g</sup>pleased Pharaoh well, and his servants.

17 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, Say unto thy brethren, This do ye: lade your beasts, and go, get you unto the land of Canaan;

18 And take your father, and your households, and come unto me: and I will give you the good of the land of Egypt, and ye shall eat <sup>h</sup>the fat of the land.

19 Now thou art commanded, this do ye; take you waggons out of the land of Egypt for your little ones, and for your wives, and bring your father, and come.

20 Also <sup>i</sup>regard not your stuff; for the good of all the land of Egypt is yours.

21 And the children of Israel did so: and Joseph gave them waggons, according to the <sup>j</sup>commandment of Pharaoh, and gave them provision for the way.

22 To all of them he gave each man changes of raiment; but to Benjamin he gave three hundred <sup>k</sup>pieces of silver, and <sup>l</sup>five changes of raiment.

23 And to his father he sent after this manner; ten asses <sup>m</sup>laden with the good things of Egypt, and discovers a truly noble mind: he not only forgives and forgets, but he wishes even those who had wronged him to forget the injury they had done, that they might not suffer distress on the account; and with deep piety he attributes the whole to the providence of God; for, says he, God did send me before you to preserve life. On every word here a strong emphasis may be laid. It is not you, but God; it is not you that sold me, but God who sent me; Egypt and Canaan must both have perished, had not a merciful provision been made; you were to come down hither and God sent me before you; death must have been the consequence of this famine, had not God sent me here to preserve life.

Verse 6. There shall neither be eating nor harvest.] EATING has been supposed to mean collecting the ears of corn, which would confound it with harvest: the word, however, means ploughing or seed-time, from the Anglo-Saxon erian, to plough, and plainly means that there should be no seed-time, and consequently no harvest; and why? Because there should be a total want of rain in other countries, and the Nile should not rise above twelve cubits in Egypt; see on chap. xli. 31. But the expressions here must be qualified a little, as we find from chap. xvii. 19 that the Egyptians came to Joseph to buy seed; and it is probable that even during this famine they sowed some of the ground, particularly on the borders of the river, from which a crop, though not an abundant one, might be produced. The passage, however, in the above chapter may refer to the last year of the famine, when they came to procure seed for the ensuing year.

Verse 8. He hath made me a father to Pharaoh.] It has already been conjectured that father was a name of office in Egypt, and that father of Pharaoh might among them signify the same as prime minister or the king's minister does among us.

Verse 10. Thou shalt dwell in the land of Goshen.] Probably this district had been allotted to Joseph by the king of Egypt, else we can scarcely think he could have promised it so positively, without first obtaining Pharaoh's consent. Goshen was the most easterly province of Lower Egypt, not far from the Arabian Gulf, lying next to Canaan (for Jacob went directly thither when he came into Egypt) from whence it is supposed to have been about fourscore miles distant, though Hebron was distant from the Egyptian capital about three hundred miles. At Goshen Jacob staid till Joseph visited him, chap. xli. 28. It is also called the Land of Rameses, chap. xlvii. 11, from a city of that name, which was the metropolis of the country.

Verse 12. That it is my mouth that speaketh unto you.] Undoubtedly Joseph laid considerable stress on his speaking with them in the Hebrew tongue, without the assistance of an interpreter, as in the case mentioned chap. xlii. 23.

Verse 14. He fell upon his brother Benjamin's neck.] Among the Asiatics kissing the beard, the neck, and the shoulders, is in use to the present day; and probably falling on the neck signifies no more than kissing the neck or shoulders, with the arms around.

Verse 20. Regard not your stuff.] Literally, Let not your eye spare your instruments or vessels:—keleychem, a general term, in which may be included household furniture, agricultural utensils, or implements of any description. They were not to delay nor encumber themselves with articles which could be readily found in Egypt, and were not worth so long a carriage.

Verse 21. Joseph gave them waggons.] It appears from this that such vehicles were very early in use, and that the road from Egypt to Canaan must have been very open and much frequented, else such carriages could not have passed by it.

Verse 22. Changes of raiment.] It is a common custom with all the Asiatic sovereigns to give both garments and money to ambassadors and persons of distinction, whom they particularly wish to honour. Hence they keep in their wardrobes several hundred changes of raiment, ready made up for presents of this kind.

Verse 23. Meat for his father by the way.] As the word is used, 2 Chron. xvi. 14, for aromatic preparations, it may be restrained in its meaning to something of that kind here. Some delicacy, similar to the savoury food which Isaac loved, may be here intended; and this was sent to Jacob in consideration of his age, and to testify the respect of his son. Of other kinds of meat he could need none, as he had large herds, and could kill a lamb, kid, sheep, or goat, whenever he pleased.

ten she-asses laden with corn and bread and meat for his father by the way.

24 So he sent his brethren away, and they departed: and he said unto them, See that ye fall not out by the way.

25 And they went up out of Egypt, and came into the land of Canaan unto Jacob their father,

26 And told him, saying, Joseph is yet alive, and * Job xxix. 24. Ps. cxxvi. 1. Luke xxiv. 11, 41.

Verse 24. See that ye fall not out by the way.] This prudent caution was given by Joseph, to prevent his brethren from accusing each other for having sold him; and to prevent them from envying Benjamin, for the superior favour shown him by his brother.

Verse 26. Jacob's heart fainted.] Probably the good news so overpowered him as to cast him into a swoon. He believed them not—he thought it was too good news to be true; and though it occasioned his swooning, yet on his recovery he could not fully credit it.

Verse 27. When he saw the waggons—the spirit of Jacob—revived.] The waggons were additional evidences of the truth of what he had heard from his sons; and the consequence was that he was restored to fresh vigour, he seemed as if he had gained new life, and he lived; revivit, says the Vulgate, he lived afresh.

Verse 28. It is enough; Joseph my son is yet alive.] It was not the state of dignity to which Joseph had arisen that particularly affected Jacob, it was the consideration that he was still alive. None can realize this scene; the words, the circumstances, all refer to indescrivable feelings.

1. In Joseph's conduct to his brethren there are several things for which it is difficult to account. It is strange, knowing how much his father loved him, that he never took an opportunity, many of which must have offered, to acquaint him that he was alive; and that self-interest did not dictate the propriety of this to him is at first view surprising, as his father would undoubtedly have paid his ransom, and restored him to liberty: but a little reflection will show that prudence dictated secrecy. His brethren, jealous and envious in the extreme, would soon have found out other methods of destroying his life, had they again got him into their power. Therefore, for his personal safety, he chose rather to be a bond-slave in Egypt than to risk his life by returning home.

2. His carriage to his brethren, previously to his making himself known, appears inexcusably harsh, if not vindictive; but when the men are considered, it will appear sufficiently evident that no other means would have been adequate to awaken their torpid consciences and bring them to a due he is governor over all the land of Egypt. *And <sup>b</sup> Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not.

27 And they told him all the words of Joseph, which he had said unto them: and when he saw the waggons which Joseph had sent to carry him, the spirit of Jacob their father revived:

28 And Israel said, It is enough; Joseph my son is yet alive: I will go and see him before I die.

sense of their guilt. A desperate disease requires a desperate remedy. The event justified all that he did, and God appears to have been the director of the whole.

3. His conduct in requiring Benjamin to be, as it were, torn away from the bleeding heart of an aged, desolate father, in whose affection he himself had long lived, is the most difficult to be satisfactorily accounted for. Unless the Spirit of prophecy had assured him that this experiment would terminate in the most favourable manner, his conduct in making it cannot well be vindicated. To such prophetic intimation this conduct has been attributed by learned men; and we may say that this consideration, if it does not untie the knot, at least cuts it. Perhaps it is best to say that in all these things Joseph acted as he was directed by a Providence, under the influence of which he might have been led to do many things which he had not previously designed. The issue proves that the hand of God's wisdom and goodness directed, regulated, and governed every circumstance, and the result was glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good-will among men.

4. Joseph saw that his brethren were confounded at his presence, and that they keenly remembered and deeply deplored their own guilt. It was necessary to comfort them, lest their hearts should have been overwhelmed with overmuch sorrow. How delicate and finely wrought is the apology he makes for them! the whole heart of the affectionate brother is at once seen in it—art is confounded and swallowed up by nature—"Be not grieved nor angry with yourselves—it was not you that sent me hither, but God." What he says also concerning his father shows the warmest feelings of a benevolent and filial heart. Indeed, the whole chapter is a master-piece of composition; and it is the more impressive because it is evidently a simple relation of facts just as they occurred; for no attempt is made to heighten the effect by rhetorical colouring or philosophical reflections; it is all simple, sheer nature, from beginning to end. Had not the history of Joseph formed a part of the sacred scriptures, it would have been published in all the living languages of man, and read throughout the universe! But it contains the things of God, and to all such the carnal mind is enmity.

AND Israel took his journey with all that he had, and came to *Beer-sheba, and offered sacrifices <sup>b</sup> unto the God of his father Isaac.

2 And God spake unto Israel <sup>c</sup> in the visions of the night, and said, Jacob, Jacob. And he said, Here am I.

3 And he said, I am God, <sup>d</sup> the God of thy father: fear not to go down into Egypt; for I will there <sup>e</sup> make of thee a great nation:

4 <sup>f</sup> I will go down with thee into Egypt, and I will also surely <sup>g</sup> bring thee up again: and <sup>h</sup> Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes.

5 And <sup>i</sup> Jacob rose up from Beer-sheba: and the sons of Israel carried Jacob their father, and their little ones, and their wives, in the waggons <sup>j</sup> which Pharaoh had sent to carry him.

6 And they took their cattle, and their goods, which they had gotten in the land of Canaan, and came into Egypt, <sup>k</sup> Jacob, and all his seed with him:

Verse 1. And came to Beer-sheba]. This place appears to be mentioned because it was a consecrated place, a place where God had appeared to Abraham, chap. xxi. 33, and to Isaac, chap. xxvi. 23, and where Jacob is encouraged to expect a manifestation of the same goodness: he chooses therefore to begin his journey with a visit to God's house; and as he was going into a strange land, he feels it right to renew his covenant with God by sacrifice. There is an old proverb which applies strongly to this case: "Prayers and provender never hinder any man's journey." He who would travel safely must take God with him.

Verse 3. Fear not to go down into Egypt]. It appears that there had been some doubts in the patriarch's mind; he found, from the confession of his own sons, how little they were to be trusted. But every doubt is dispelled by this divine manifestation. 1. He may go down confidently; no evil shall befall him. 2. Even in Egypt the covenant shall be fulfilled, God will make of him there a great nation. 3. God himself will accompany him on his journey, he will be with him in the strange land, and even bring back his bones to rest with those of his fathers. 4. He shall see Joseph, and this same beloved son shall be with him in his last hours, and do the last kind office for him: Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes. It was now a time of famine in Egypt, and God had forbidden his father Isaac to go down to Egypt when there was a famine there, chap. xxvi. 1-3; besides, he may have had some general intimation of the prophecy delivered to his grandfather Abraham, that his seed should be afflicted in Egypt, chap. xv. 13, 14; and he also knew that Canaan, not Egypt, was to be the inheritance of his family, chap. xii., &c. On all these accounts it was necessary to have the most explicit directions from God, before he should take such a journey.

Verse 7. All his seed brought he with him into Egypt.] When Jacob went down into Egypt he was in the one hundred and thirtieth year of his age, two hundred and fifteen years after the promise was made to Abraham.

Verse 8. These are the names of the children of Israel]. It may be necessary to observe here, First, that several of these names are expressed differently elsewhere, Jemuel for Nemuel, Jachin for Jarib, Gershon for Gershom, &c. But it is no uncommon case for the same person to have different names, or the same name to be differently pronounced. Secondly, that it is probable that some names in this list are brought in by prolepsis or anticipation, as the persons were born (probably) during the seventeen years which Jacob sojourned in Egypt. Thirdly, that the families of some are entered more at large than others because of their peculiar respectability, as in the case of Judah, Joseph, and Benjamin.

Verse 12. The sons of Pharez were Hezron and Hamul.] It is not likely that Pharez was more than ten years of age when he came into Egypt, and if so he could not have had children; therefore it is necessary to consider Hezron and Hamul as being born during the seventeen years that Jacob sojourned in Egypt, see on ver. 8: and it appears necessary, for several reasons, to take these seventeen years into the account, as it is very probable that what is called the going down into Egypt includes the seventeen years which Jacob spent there.

Verse 20. Unto Joseph—were born Manasseh and Ephraim.] There is a remarkable addition here in the Septuagint, which must be noticed: These were the sons of Manasseh whom his Syrian concubine bore unto him, Machir; and Machir begat Galaad. The sons of Ephraim, Manasse's brother, were Sutaalam and Taam; and the sons of Sutaalam, Edem.

which came out of his <sup>a</sup>loins, besides Jacob's sons' wives, all the souls were threescore and six;

27 And the sons of Joseph which were born him in Egypt, were two souls: <sup>b</sup>all the souls of the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were threescore and ten.

28 And he sent Judah before him unto Joseph, <sup>c</sup>to direct his face unto Goshen; and they came <sup>d</sup>into the land of Goshen.

29 And Joseph made ready his chariot, and went up to meet Israel his father, to Goshen, and presented himself unto him; and he <sup>e</sup>fell on his neck, and wept on his neck a good while.

30 And Israel said unto Joseph, 'Now let me die, since I have seen thy face, because thou art yet alive.

These add five persons to the list, and make out the number given by Stephen, Acts vii. 14, which it seems he had taken from the text of the Septuagint, unless we could suppose that the text of Stephen had been altered to make it correspond to the Septuagint, of which there is not the slightest evidence from ancient MSS. or Versions. The addition in the Septuagint is not found in either the Hebrew or the Samaritan at present; and some suppose that it was taken either from Numb. xxvi. 29, 35, or 1 Chron. vii. 14-20, but in none of these places does the addition appear as it stands in the Septuagint, though some of the names are found interspersed. Various means have been proposed to find the seventy persons in the text, and to reconcile the Hebrew with the Septuagint and the New Testament.

Dr. Hales's method is more simple, and I think more satisfactory: see Analysis, vol. ii., p. 159.

Verse 28. He sent Judah before him unto Joseph] Judah was certainly a man of sense, and also an eloquent man; and of him Joseph must have had a very favourable opinion from the speech he delivered before him, chap. xlv. 18, &c.; he was therefore chosen as the most proper person to go before and announce Jacob's arrival to his son Joseph.

Verse 29. And Joseph made ready his chariot] In chap. xli. 43 we have the first mention of a chariot, and if the translation be correct, it is a proof that the arts were not in a rude state in Egypt even at this early time. When we find waggons used to transport goods from place to place, we need not wonder that these suggested the idea of forming chariots for carrying persons, and especially those of high rank and authority. Necessity produces arts, and arts and science produce not only an increase of the conveniences, but also of the refinements and luxuries of life. It has been supposed that a chariot is not intended here; for as the word mercabah, which we and most of the ancient Versions translate chariot, comes from rachab, he rode, saddling his horse may be all that is intended. But it is more likely to signify a chariot, as the verb asar, which signifies to bind, tie, or yoke, is used; and not chabash, which signifies to saddle.

Verse 30. Now let me die, since I have seen thy face] Perhaps old Simeon had this place in view when, seeing the salvation of Israel, he said, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, &c. Luke ii. 29.

Verse 34. Thy servants' trade hath been about cattle] As the land of Goshen was both fruitful and pleasant, Joseph wished to fix his family in that part of Egypt; hence he advises them to tell Pharaoh that their trade had been in cattle

31 And Joseph said unto his brethren, and unto his father's house, <sup>a</sup>I will go up, and shew Pharaoh, and say unto him, My brethren and my father's house which were in the land of Canaan, are come unto me.

32 And the men are shepherds, for <sup>b</sup>their trade hath been to feed cattle; and they have brought their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have.

33 And it shall come to pass, when Pharaoh shall call you, and shall say, 'What is your occupation?'

34 That ye shall say, Thy servants' <sup>c</sup>trade hath been about cattle <sup>d</sup>from our youth even until now, both we, and also our fathers: that ye may dwell in the land of Goshen; for every shepherd is <sup>e</sup>an abomination unto the Egyptians.

32.—<sup>a</sup>Ch. xxx. 35. xxxiv. 5. xxxvii. 12.—<sup>b</sup>Ch. xliii. 32. Exod. viii. 26.

from their youth: and because every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians, hence he concluded that there would be less difficulty to get them quiet settlement in Goshen, as they would then be separated from the Egyptians, and consequently have the free use of all their religious customs. This scheme succeeded, and the consequence was the preservation both of their religion and their lives, though some of their posterity did afterwards corrupt themselves; see Ezek. xx. 8; Amos v. 26. As it is well known that the Egyptians had cattle and flocks themselves, and that Pharaoh even requested that some of Joseph's brethren should be made rulers over his cattle, how could it be said, as in verse 34, Every shepherd is an abomination unto the Egyptians? Three reasons may be assigned for this: 1. Shepherds and feeders of cattle were usually a sort of lawless, freebooting banditti, frequently making inroads on villages, &c., carrying off cattle, and whatever spoils they could find. On this account such persons must have been universally detested. 2. They must have abhorred shepherds if Manetho's account of the hyccos or king-shepherds can be credited. Hordes of marauders, under this name, from Arabia, Syria, and Ethiopia (whose chief occupation, like the Bedouin Arabs of the present day, was to keep flocks), made a powerful irruption into Egypt, which they subdued and ruled with great tyranny for 250 years. [Dr. Clarke's chronology is here at fault: the race of the shepherd-kings was at this very time, according to recent criticism, in the ascendant.] 3. The last and probably the best reason why the Egyptians abhorred such shepherds as the Israelites were, was, they sacrificed those very animals, the ox particularly, and the SHEEP, which the Egyptians held sacred. Though some contend that this idolatry was not as yet established in Egypt, and that the king-shepherds were either after the time of Joseph, or that Manetho by them intends the Israelites themselves; yet, as the arguments by which these conjectures are supported are not sufficient to overthrow those which are brought for the support of the contrary opinions, and as there was evidently an established religion and priesthood in Egypt before Joseph's time, and as that established priesthood was in all likelihood idolatrous, and as the worship of Aps under the form of an ox was one of the most ancient forms of worship in Egypt, we may rest tolerably certain that it was chiefly on this account that the shepherds, or those who fed on and sacrificed these objects of their worship, were an abomination to the Egyptians. [The aversion of the Egyptians to shepherds was mainly of a religious character.]

CHAPTER XLVII.

Joseph informs Pharaoh that his father and brethren are arrived in Goshen, 1. He presents five of his brethren before the king, 2, who questions them concerning their occupation; they inform him that they are shepherds, and request permission to dwell in the land of Goshen, 3, 4. Pharaoh consents, and desires that some of the most active of them should be made rulers over his cattle, 5, 6. Joseph presents his father to Pharaoh, 7, who questions him concerning his age, 8, to which Jacob returns him an affecting answer, and blesses Pharaoh, 9, 10. Joseph places his father and family in the land of Rameses, (Goshen), and furnishes them with provisions, 11, 12. The famine prevailing in the land, the Egyptians deliver up all their money to Joseph to get food, 13-15. The next year they bring their cattle, 16, 17. The third, their lands and their persons, 18-21. The land of the priests Joseph does not buy, as it was a royal grant to them from Pharaoh, 22. The people receive seed to sow the land on condition that they shall give a fifth part of the produce to the king, 23, 24. The people agree, and Joseph makes it a law all over Egypt, 25, 26. The Israelites multiply exceedingly, 27. Jacob, having lived seventeen years in Goshen, and being one hundred and forty-seven years old, 28, makes Joseph promise not to bury him in Egypt, but in Canaan, 29, 30. Joseph promises, and confirms it with an oath, 31.

THEN Joseph <sup>a</sup>came and told Pharaoh, and said, My father and my brethren, and their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have, are come out of the land of Canaan; and, behold, they are in <sup>b</sup>the land of Goshen.

2 And he took some of his brethren, even five men, and <sup>c</sup>presented them unto Pharaoh.

3 And Pharaoh said unto his brethren, <sup>d</sup>What is your occupation? And they said unto Pharaoh, <sup>e</sup>Thy servants are shepherds, both we, and also our fathers.

4 (They said moreover unto Pharaoh,) <sup>f</sup>For to so-journ in the land are we come; for thy servants have no pasture for their flocks; <sup>g</sup>for the famine is sore in the land of Canaan: now therefore, we pray thee, let thy servants <sup>h</sup>dwell in the land of Goshen.

5 And Pharaoh spake unto Joseph, saying, Thy father and thy brethren are come unto thee:

6 <sup>i</sup>The land of Egypt is before thee; in the best of the land make thy father and brethren to dwell; <sup>j</sup>in the land of Goshen let them dwell: and if thou knowest any men of activity among them, then make them rulers over my cattle.

7 And Joseph brought in Jacob his father, and Verse 2. He took some of his brethren] There is something very strange in the original; literally translated it signifies "from the end or extremity of his brethren he took five men." This has been understood sic different ways.

1. Joseph took five of his brethren that came first to hand—at random, without design or choice. 2. Joseph took five of the meanest looking of his brethren to present before Pharaoh, fearing if he had taken the sightliest that Pharaoh would detain them for his service, whereby their religion and morals might be corrupted. 3. Joseph took five of the best made and finest-looking of his brethren, and presented them before Pharaoh, wishing to impress his mind with a favourable opinion of the family which he had just now brought into Egypt, and to do himself honour. 4. Joseph took five of the youngest of his brethren. 5. He took five of the eldest of his brethren. 6. He took five from the extremity or end of his brethren, i.e. some of the eldest and some of the youngest, viz., Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Issachar, and Benjamin. It is certain that in Judges xviii. 2, the word may be understood as implying dignity, valour, excellence, and pre-eminence: but it may be understood simply as signifying some; out of the whole of his brethren he took only five men, &c.

Verse 6. Men of activity] Such as were capable of bearing fatigue, and of rendering their authority respectable.

Rulers over my cattle.] Mikneh signifies not only cattle, but possession or property of any kind; though most usually cattle are intended, because in ancient times they constiset him before Pharaoh: and Jacob blessed Pharaoh.

8 And Pharaoh said unto Jacob, <sup>k</sup>How old art thou?

9 And Jacob said unto Pharaoh, <sup>l</sup>The days of the years of my pilgrimage are an hundred and thirty years: <sup>m</sup>"few and evil have the days of the years of my life been, and <sup>n</sup>have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers, in the days of thy pilgrimage.

11 And Joseph placed his father and his brethren, and gave them a possession in the land of Egypt, in the best of the land, in the land of <sup>p</sup>Rameses, <sup>q</sup>as Pharaoh had commanded.

12 And Joseph nourished his father, and his brethren, and all his father's household, with bread, <sup>r</sup>according to their families.

13 And there was no bread in all the land; for the famine was very sore, <sup>s</sup>so that the land of Egypt, and all the land of Canaan, fainted by reason of the famine.

14 <sup>t</sup>And Joseph gathered up all the money that tuted the principal part of a man's property. The word may be taken here in a more extensive sense, and the circumstances of the case seem obviously to require it.

Verse 7. Jacob blessed Pharaoh.] Saluted him on his entrance with Peace be unto thee, or some such expression of respect and good-will.

Verse 9. The days of the years of my pilgrimage] Jacob had always lived a migratory or wandering life, in different parts of Canaan, Mesopotamia, and Egypt, scarcely ever at rest; and in the places where he lived longest, always exposed to the fatigues of the field and the desert. Our word pilgrim comes from the French pelerin and pelegrin, from the Latin adverb peregre, abroad, not at home. The pilgrim was a person who took a journey, long or short, on some religious account, submitting during the time to many hardships and privations. A more appropriate term could not be conceived to express the life of Jacob, and the motive which induced him to live such a life. His journey to Padan-aram or Mesopotamia excepted, the principal part of his journeys were properly pilgrimages, undertaken in the course of God's providence on a religious account.

Have not attained unto the—life of my fathers] Jacob lived in the whole one hundred and forty-seven years; Isaac, his father, lived one hundred and eighty; and Abraham, his grandfather, one hundred and seventy-five. These were days of years in comparison of the lives of the preceding patriarchs, some of whom lived nearly ten centuries!

Verse 14. Gathered up all the money] i.e. By selling was found in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, for the corn which they bought: and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house.

15 And when money failed in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came unto Joseph, and said, Give us bread: for 'why should we die in thy presence? for the money faileth.

16 And Joseph said, Give your cattle; and I will give you for your cattle, if money fail.

17 And they brought their cattle unto Joseph: and Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for the flocks, and for the cattle of the herds, and for the asses: and he <sup>b</sup> fed them with bread for all their cattle, for that year.

18 When that year was ended, they came unto him the second year, and said unto him, We will not hide it from my lord, how that our money is spent; my lord also hath our herds of cattle; there is not ought left in the sight of my lord, but our bodies and our lands:

19 Wherefore shall we die before thine eyes, both we and our land? buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh: and give us seed, that we may live, and not die, that the land be not desolate.

20 And Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh; for the Egyptians sold every man his field, because the famine prevailed over them: so the land became Pharaoh's.

corn out of the public stores to the people; and this he did till all the money was exchanged for corn, and brought into Pharaoh's treasury. Besides the fifth part of the produce of the seven plentiful years, Joseph had bought additional corn with Pharaoh's money to lay up against the famine that was to prevail in the seven years of dearth; and it is very likely that this was sold out at the price for which it was bought, and the fifth part, which belonged to Pharaoh, sold out at the same price. And as money at that time could not be plentiful, the cash of the whole nation was thus exhausted, as far as that had circulated among the common people.

Verse 16. Give your cattle] As the people had not grain for their own sustenance, consequently they could have none for their cattle; hence the cattle were in the most imminent danger of starving; and the people also were in equal danger, as they must have divided a portion of that bought for themselves with the cattle, which for the sake of tillage, &c., they wished of course to preserve till the seven years of famine should end. For this part of Joseph's conduct he certainly deserves high praise and no censure.

Verse 18. When that year was ended] The sixth year of the famine, they came unto him the second year, which was the last or seventh year of the famine, in which it was necessary to sow the land that there might be a crop the succeeding year; for Joseph, on whose prediction they relied, had foretold that the famine should continue only seven years, and consequently they expected the eighth year to be a fruitful year provided the land was sowed, without which, though the inundation of the land by the Nile might amount to the sixteen requisite cubits, there could be no crop.

Verse 21. And as for the people, he removed them to cities] It is very likely that Joseph was influenced by no political motive in removing the people to the cities, but merely by a motive of humanity and prudence. As the corn was laid up in the cities he found it more convenient to bring them to the place where they might be conveniently fed; each being within the reach of an easy distribution.

Verse 22. The land of the priests bought he not] From this verse it is natural to infer that whatever the religion of Egypt was, it was established by law and supported by the 21 (And as for the people, he removed them to cities, from one end of the borders of Egypt even to the other end thereof.)

22 * Only the land of the <sup>d</sup> priests bought he not; for the priests had a portion assigned them of Pharaoh, and did eat their portion which Pharaoh gave them: wherefore they sold not their lands.

23 Then Joseph said unto the people, Behold, I have bought you this day and your land for Pharaoh: lo, here is seed for you, and ye shall sow the land.

24 And it shall come to pass in the increase, that ye shall give the fifth part unto Pharaoh, and four parts shall be your own, for seed of the field, and for your food, and for them of your household, and for food for your little ones.

25 And they said, Thou hast saved our lives: * let us find grace in the sight of my lord, and we will be Pharaoh's servants.

26 And Joseph made it a law over the land of Egypt unto this day, that Pharaoh should have the fifth part; 'except the land of the <sup>e</sup> priests only, which became not Pharaoh's.

27 And Israel <sup>b</sup> dwelt in the land of Egypt, in the country of Goshen; and they had possessions therein, and <sup>c</sup> grew, and multiplied exceedingly.

28 And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years: so <sup>d</sup> the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and seven years.

29 And the time <sup>e</sup> drew nigh that Israel must die;

Ver. 22.—<sup>b</sup> Ver. 11.—<sup>c</sup> Ch. xli. 3.—<sup>d</sup> Heb. the days of the years of his life. See ver. 9.—<sup>e</sup> So Deut. xxxi. 14. 1 Kings ii. 1.

state. Hence when Joseph bought all the lands of the Egyptians for Pharaoh, he bought not the land of the priests, for that was a portion assigned them by Pharaoh; and they did eat—did live on, that portion. This is the earliest account we have of an established religion supported by the state.

Verse 23. I have bought you this day and your land for Pharaoh] It fully appears that the kingdom of Egypt was previously to the time of Joseph a very limited monarchy. The king had his estates; the priests had their lands; and the common people their patrimony independently of both. The land of Rameses or Goshen appears to have been the king's land, ver. 11. The priests had their lands, which they did not sell to Joseph, ver. 22, 26; and that the people had lands independent of the crown, is evident from the purchases Joseph made, ver. 19, 20; and we may conclude from those purchases that Pharaoh had no power to levy taxes upon his subjects to increase his own revenue. And when Joseph bought the original right which each individual had for the king, he raised the crown an ample revenue, though he restored the lands, by obliging each to pay one fifth of the product to the king, ver. 24. And it is worthy of remark that the people of Egypt well understood the distinction between subjects and servants; for when they came to sell their land, they offered to sell themselves also, and said; Buy us and our land, and we and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh, ver. 19.

Verse 26. And Joseph made it a law] That the people should hold their land from the king, and give him the fifth part of the produce as a yearly tax. Beyond this it appears the king had no farther demands. The whole of this conduct of Joseph has been as strongly censured by some as applauded by others. He was an honoured instrument in the hands of God of saving two nations from utter ruin, and especially of preserving that family from which the Messiah was to spring, and of perpetuating the true religion among them. In this character he is represented in the sacred pages. His conduct as the prime minister of Pharaoh was powerfully indicative of a deep and consummate politician, who had high notions of prerogative, which led him to use every prudent means to aggrandize his master, and at the same time to do what he judged best on the whole for the people he governed.

and he called his son Joseph, and said unto him, If now I have found grace in thy sight, <sup>a</sup>put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and <sup>b</sup>deal kindly and truly with me; <sup>c</sup>bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt: 30 But <sup>d</sup>I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt

Verse 30. I will lie with my fathers] As God had promised the land of Canaan to Abraham and his posterity, Jacob considered it as a consecrated place, under the particular superintendence and blessing of God: and as Sarah, Abraham, and Isaac were interred near to Hebron, he in all probability wished to lie not only in the same place, but in the same grave; and it is not likely that he would have been solicitous about this, had he not considered that promised land as being a type of the rest that remains for the people of God, and a pledge of the inheritance among the saints in light.

Verse 31. And Israel bowed himself upon the bed's head.] Jacob was now both old and feeble, and we may suppose him reclined on his couch when Joseph came; that he afterwards sat up erect (see chap. xlviii. 2) while conversing with his son, and receiving his oath and promise; and that when this was finished he bowed himself upon the bed's head—ex-31 And he said, Swear unto me; and he sware unto him. And <sup>b</sup>Israel bowed himself upon the bed's head.

hausted with the conversation, he again reclined himself on his bed as before. This seems to be the simple meaning, which the text, unconnected with any religious system or prejudice, naturally proposes. But because shachah signifies not only to bow, but to worship, because acts of religious worship were performed by bowing or prostration, and because mittah, a bed, by the change of the points only becomes matteh, a staff, in which sense the Septuagint took it, translating the original words thus: and Israel worshipped upon the top of his staff, which the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. xi. 21, quotes literatim; therefore some have supposed that Jacob certainly had a carved image on the head or top of his staff, to which he paid a species of adoration; or that he bowed himself to the staff or sceptre of Joseph, thus fulfilling the prophetic import of his son's dreams! The sense of the Hebrew text is given above. [And this sense alone is allowable.]

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Joseph, hearing that his father was near death, took his two sons Ephraim and Manasseh, and went to Goshen to visit him, 1. Jacob strengthens himself to receive them, 2. Gives Joseph an account of God's appearing to him at Luz, and repeating the promise, 3, 4. Adopts Ephraim and Manasseh as his own sons, 5, 6. Mentions the death of Rachel at Ephrath, 7. He blesses Ephraim and Manasseh, preferring the former, who was the younger, to his elder brother, 8-17. Joseph, supposing his father had mistaken in giving the right of primogeniture to the youngest, endeavours to correct him, 18. Jacob shows that he did it designedly, prophesies much good concerning both; but sets Ephraim the youngest before Manasseh, 19, 20. Jacob speaks of his death, and predicts the return of his posterity from Egypt, 21. And gives Joseph a portion above his brethren, which he had taken from the Amorites, 22.

AND it came to pass after these things, that one told Joseph, Behold, thy father is sick: and he took with him his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim.

2 And one told Jacob, and said, Behold, thy son Joseph cometh unto thee: and Israel strengthened himself, and sat upon the bed.

3 And Jacob said unto Joseph, God Almighty appeared unto me at <sup>a</sup>Luz in the land of Canaan, and blessed me.

4 And said unto me, Behold, I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a multitude of people; and will give this land to thy seed after thee, <sup>b</sup>for an everlasting possession.

Verse 1. One told Joseph, Behold, thy father is sick] He was ill before, and Joseph knew it; but it appears that a messenger had been now dispatched to inform Joseph that his father was apparently at the point of death.

Verse 2. Israel strengthened himself, and sat upon the bed.] He had been confined to his bed before, and now, hearing that Joseph was come to see him, he made what efforts his little remaining strength would admit, to sit up in bed to receive his son. This verse proves that a bed and not a staff is intended in the preceding chapter.

Verse 3. God Almighty] El Shaddai, the All-sufficient God, the Outpourer and Dispenser of mercies appeared to me at Luz, afterwards called Beth-el.

Verse 5. And now thy two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, —are mine] I now adopt them into my own family, and

5 And now thy <sup>a</sup>two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine; as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine.

6 And thy issue, which thou begettest after them, shall be thine, and shall be called after the name of thy brethren in their inheritance.

7 And as for me, when I came from Padan, <sup>a</sup>Rachel died by me in the land of Canaan in the way, when yet there was but a little way to come unto Ephrath: and I buried her there in the way of Ephrath; the same is Beth-lehem.

8 And Israel beheld Joseph's sons, and said, Who are these?

they shall have their place among my twelve sons, and be treated in every respect as those, and have an equal interest in all the spiritual and temporal blessings of the covenant.

Verse 7. Rachel died by me, &c.] Rachel was the wife of Jacob's choice, and the object of his unvarying affection; he loved her in life—he loves her in death: many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it. A match of a man's own making, when guided by reason and religion, will necessarily be a happy one.

Verse 8. Who are these?] At verse 10 it is said that Jacob's eyes were dim for age, that he could not see—could not discern any object unless it were near him; therefore, though he saw Ephraim and Manasseh, yet he could not distinguish them till they were brought nigh unto him.

9 And Joseph said unto his father, "They are my sons, whom God hath given me in this place. And he said, Bring them, I pray thee, unto me, and <sup>b</sup>I will bless them.

10 (Now <sup>c</sup>the eyes of Israel were <sup>d</sup>dim for age, so that he could not see.) And he brought them near unto him; and <sup>e</sup>he kissed them, and embraced them.

11 And Israel said unto Joseph, "I had not thought to see thy face: and lo, God hath shewed me also thy seed.

12 And Joseph brought them out from between his knees, and he bowed himself with his face to the earth.

Verse 11. I had not thought to see thy face] There is much delicacy and much tenderness in these expressions. He feels himself now amply recompensed for his long grief and trouble on account of the supposed death of Joseph, in seeing not only himself, but his two sons, whom God, by an especial act of favour, is about to add to the number of his own.

Verse 12. Joseph—bowed himself with his face to the earth.] This act of Joseph has been extravagantly extolled by Dr. Delaney and others. I must freely confess that I see nothing peculiarly amiable in this part of Joseph's conduct; he simply acquitted himself of a duty which God, nature, decency, and common sense imperiously demanded of him, and all such in his circumstances, to discharge. To the present day children in the East, next to God, pay the deepest reverence to their parents. Besides, before whom was Joseph bowing? Not merely his father, but a most eminent PATRIARCH; one highly distinguished by the Lord, and one of the three of whom the Supreme Being speaks in the most favourable and affectionate manner; the three who received and transmitted the true faith, and kept unbroken the divine covenant: I AM THE GOD OF ABRAHAM, the GOD OF ISAAC, and the GOD OF JACOB. He has never said, I am the GOD OF JOSEPH. And if we compare the father and the son as men, we shall find that the latter was exceeded by the former in almost endless degrees. Joseph owed his advancement and his eminence to what some would call good fortune, and what we know to have been the especial providence of God working in his behalf, wholly independent of his own industry, &c., every event of that providence issuing in his favour. Jacob owed his own support and preservation, and the support and preservation of his numerous family, under God, to the continual exercise of the vast powers of a strong and vigorous mind, to which the providence of God seemed ever in opposition; because God chose to try to the uttermost the great gifts which he had bestowed.

Besides, Joseph in thus reverencing his father only followed the custom of the Egyptians among whom he lived, who, according to Herodotus, were particularly remarkable for the reverence they paid to old age. Indeed, we find the deepest reverence to parents and old age practised by all the civilized nations in the world, not as a matter of meritorious courtesy, but as a point of rational and absolute duty.

Verse 14. Israel stretched out his right hand, &c.] Laying hands on the head was always used among the Jews in giving blessings, designating men to any office, and in the consecration of solemn sacrifices. This is the first time we find it mentioned; but we often read of it afterwards. Jacob laid his right hand on the head of the younger, which we are told he did wittingly—well knowing what he was about, for (or although) Manasseh was the first-born, knowing by the Spirit of prophecy that Ephraim's posterity would be more powerful than that of Manasseh. It is observable how God from the beginning has preferred the younger to the elder, as Abel before Cain; Shem before Japheth; Isaac before Ishmael; Jacob before Esau; Judah and Joseph before Reuben; Ephraim before Manasseh;

14 And Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Manasseh's head, <sup>f</sup>guiding his hands wittingly; for Manasseh was the first-born.

15 And <sup>g</sup>he blessed Joseph, and said, God, <sup>h</sup>before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day.

16 The Angel <sup>i</sup>which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads; and let <sup>j</sup>my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac; and let them <sup>k</sup>grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth.

17 And when Joseph saw that his father <sup>l</sup>laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it <sup>m</sup>displeased him: and he held up his father's hand, to remove it from Ephraim's head unto Manasseh's head.

Moses before Aaron; and David before his brethren. The grace that converts the soul certainly comes from the mere mercy of God, without any merit on man's part; and a sufficiency of this is offered to every man, Tit. ii. 11, 12. But it is not less certain that God loves those best who are most faithful to this grace.

Verse 15. He blessed Joseph] The father first, and then the sons afterwards. And this is an additional proof to what has been adduced under ver. 12 of Jacob's superiority; for the less is always blessed of the greater.

The God which fed me all my life long] Jacob is now standing on the verge of eternity, with his faith strong in God. He sees his life to be a series of mercies; and as he had been affectionately attentive, provident, and kind to his most helpless child, so has God been unto him; he has fed him all his life long; he plainly perceives that he owes every morsel of food which he has received to the mere mercy and kindness of God.

Verse 16. The angel which redeemed me from all evil] The Messenger, the Redeemer or Kinsman; for so goel signifies; for this term, in the law of Moses, is applied to that person whose right it is, from his being nearest akin, to redeem or purchase back a forfeited inheritance. But of whom does Jacob speak? We have often seen in the preceding chapters an angel of God appearing to the patriarchs; and we have full proof that this was no created angel, but the Messenger of the divine Council, the Lord Jesus Christ. Who then was the angel that redeemed Jacob, and whom he invoked to bless Ephraim and Manasseh? Is it not JESUS? He alone can be called Goel, the redeeming Kinsman; for he alone took part of our flesh and blood that the right of redemption might be his; and that the forfeited possession of the favour and image of God might be redeemed, brought back, and restored to all those who believe in his name. To have invoked any other angel or messenger in such a business would have been impiety. Angels bless not; to GOD alone this prerogative belongs. With what confidence may a truly religious father use these words in behalf of his children: "JESUS, the CHRIST, who hath redeemed me, bless the lads, redeem them also, and save them unto eternal life!"

Let my name be named on them] "Let them be ever accounted as a part of my own family; let them be true Israelites—persons who shall prevail with God as I have done; and the name of Abraham—being partakers of his faith; and the name of Isaac—let them be as remarkable for submissive obedience as he was. Let the virtues of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob be accumulated in them, and invariably displayed by them!" These are the very words of adoption; and by the imposition of hands, the invocation of the Redeemer, and the solemn blessing pronounced, the adoption was completed. From this moment Ephraim and Manasseh had the same rights and privileges as Jacob's sons, which as the sons of Joseph they could never have possessed.

And let them grow into a multitude] Let them increase like fishes into a multitude. FISH are the most prolific of all animals; see the instances produced on chap. i. 20.

18 And Joseph said unto his father, Not so, my father: for this is the first-born: put thy right hand upon his head.

19 And his father refused, and said, 'I know it, my son, I know it: he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great: but truly <sup>b</sup> his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a <sup>c</sup> multitude of nations.

20 And he blessed them that day, saying, <sup>d</sup> In

This prophetic blessing was verified in a most remarkable manner. At one time the tribe of Ephraim amounted to 40,500 effective men, and that of Manasseh to 52,700, amounting in the whole to 93,200.

Verse 18. Joseph said—Not so, my father] Joseph supposed that his father had made a mistake in laying his right hand on the head of the youngest, because the right hand was considered as the most noble, and the instrument of conveying the highest dignities, and thus it has ever been considered among all nations, though the reason of it is not particularly obvious. Even in the heavens the right hand of God is the place of the most exalted dignity. It has been observed that Joseph spoke here as he was moved by natural affection, and that Jacob acted as he was influenced by the Holy Spirit.

Verse 20. In thee shall Israel bless] That is, In future generations the Israelites shall take their form of wishing prosperity to any nation or family from the circumstance of the good which it shall be known that God has done to Ephraim and Manasseh: May God make thee as fruitful as Ephraim, and multiply thee as Manasseh! So, to their daughters when married, the Jewish women are accustomed to say, God make thee as Sarah and Rebekah! The forms are still in use.

Verse 21. Behold, I die! With what composure is this most awful word expressed! Could any person act as the patriarchs did in their last moments, who had no hopes of eternal life, no belief in the immortality of the soul? Impossible! With such a conviction of the being of God, with such proofs of his tenderness and regard, with such experience of his providential and miraculous interferences in their behalf, could they suppose that they were only creatures of a day, and that God had wasted so much care, attention, providence, grace, and goodness, on creatures who were to be ultimately like the beasts that perish? The supposition that they could have no correct notion of the immortality of the soul is as dishonourable to God as to themselves. But what shall we think of Christians who have formed this hypothesis into a system to prove—what? Why, that the patriarchs lived and died in the dark! That either the soul has no immortality, or that God has not thought proper to reveal it. Away with such an opinion! It cannot be said to merit serious refutation.

Verse 22. Moreover I have given to thee one portion] We have already seen the transactions between Jacob and his family on one part, and Shechem and the sons of Hamor on the other. As he uses the word shechem here, I think it likely that he alludes to the purchase of the field or parcel thee shall Israel bless, saying, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh: and he set Ephraim before Manasseh.

21 And Israel said unto Joseph, Behold, I die: but <sup>a</sup> God shall be with you, and bring you again unto the land of your fathers.

22 Moreover <sup>c</sup> I have given to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand <sup>d</sup> of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow.

of ground mentioned chap. xxxiii. 18, 19. It has been supposed that this parcel of ground, which Jacob bought from Shechem, had been taken from him by the Amorites, and that he afterwards had recovered it by his sword and by his bow, i.e. by force of arms. Shechem appears to have fallen to the lot of Joseph's sons (see Josh. xvii. 1, and xx. 7); and in our Lord's time there was a parcel of ground near to Sychar or Shechem which was still considered as that portion which Jacob gave to his son Joseph, John iv. 5; and on the whole it was probably the same that Jacob bought for a hundred pieces of money, chap. xxxiii. 18, 19. But how it could be said that he took this out of the hand of the Amorite with his sword and his bow, we cannot tell. Many attempts have been made to explain this abstruse verse, but they have all hitherto been fruitless. [Probably the passage is to be interpreted prophetically.]

1. The duty of children to their parents only ceases when the parents are laid in their graves, and this duty is the next in order and importance to the duty we owe to God. No circumstances can alter its nature or lessen its importance: Honour thy father and thy mother is the sovereign everlasting command of God. While the relations of parent and child exist, this commandment will be in full force.

2. With what advantage and effect can a dying parent recommend the Lord Jesus to his children, who can testify with his last breath that this Jesus has redeemed him from all evil! Reader, canst thou call Christ thy Redeemer? Hast thou, through him, recovered the forfeited inheritance? Through him, and him alone, will God redeem thee from all thy sins; and as thou knowest not what a moment may bring forth, thou hast not a moment to lose. Acquaint thyself now with him, and be at peace, and thereby good shall come unto thee.

3. We find that the patriarchs ever held the promised land in the most sacred point of view. It was God's gift to them; it was confirmed by a covenant that spoke of and referred to better things. We believe that this land typified the rest which remains for the people of God, and can we be indifferent to the excellence of this rest! A patriarch could not die in peace, however distant from this land, without an assurance that his bones should be laid in it. How can we live, how can we die comfortably, without the assurance that our lives are hid with Christ in God, and that we shall dwell in his presence for ever? There remains a rest for the people of God, and only for the people of God; for those alone who love, serve, reverence, and obey him, in his Son Jesus Christ, shall ever enjoy it.

CHAPTER XLIX.

Jacob, about to die, calls his sons together that he may bless them, or give prophetic declarations concerning their posterity, 1, 2. Prophetic declaration concerning Reuben, 3, 4; concerning Simeon and Levi, 5-7; concerning Judah, 8-12; concerning Zebulun, 13; concerning Issachar, 14, 15; concerning Dan, 16-18; concerning Gad, 19; concerning Asher, 20; concerning Naphtali, 21; concerning Joseph, 22-26; concerning Benjamin, 27. Summary concerning the twelve tribes, 28. Jacob gives directions concerning his being buried in the cave of Machpelah, 29-32. Jacob dies, 33.

AND Jacob called unto his sons, and said, Gather yourselves together, that I may * tell you that which shall befall you <sup>b</sup> in the last days.

2 Gather yourselves together, and hear, ye sons of Jacob: and <sup>c</sup> hearken unto Israel your father.

3 Reuben, thou art <sup>d</sup> my first-born, my might, and the beginning of my strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power:

4 Unstable as water, <sup>e</sup> thou <sup>f</sup> shalt not excel; because thou <sup>g</sup> wentest up to thy father's bed; then defiledst thou it: <sup>h</sup> he went up to my couch.

Verse 1. That which shall befall you in the last days.] It is evident from this, and indeed from the whole complexion of these important prophecies, that the twelve sons of Jacob had very little concern in them, personally considered, as they were to be fulfilled in the last days, i.e. in times remote from that period, and consequently to their posterity, and not to themselves or to their immediate families. The whole of these prophetic declarations, from ver. 2 to ver. 27 inclusive, is delivered in strongly figurative language, and in the poetic form, which, in every translation, should be preserved as nearly as possible, rendering the version line for line with the original. This order I shall pursue in the succeeding notes, always proposing the verse first, in as literal a translation as possible, line for line with the Hebrew after the hemistich form, from which the sense will more readily appear; but to the Hebrew text and the common version the reader is ultimately referred.

2. Come together and hear, O sons of Jacob!
And hearken unto Israel your father.

Some have put themselves to a great deal of trouble and learned labour to show that it was a general opinion of the ancients that the soul, a short time previous to its departure from the body, becomes endued with a certain measure of the prophetic gift or foresight; and that this was probably the case with Jacob. But it would be derogatory to the dignity of the prophecies delivered in this chapter, to suppose that they came by any other means than direct inspiration, as to their main matter, though certain circumstances appear to be left to the patriarch himself, in which he might express his own feelings, both as a father and as a judge. This is strikingly evident, 1. In the case of Reuben, from whom he had received the grossest insult, however the passage relative to him may be understood; and 2. In the case of Joseph, the tenderly beloved son of his most beloved wife Rachel, in the prophecy concerning whom he gives full vent to all those tender and affectionate emotions which, as a father and a husband, do him endless credit.

3. Reuben, my first-born art thou!
My might, and the prime of my strength,
Excelling in eminence, and excelling in power:

4. Pouring out like the waters:—thou shalt not excel,
For thou wentest up to the bed of thy father,—
Then thou didst defile: to my couch he went up!

Verse 3. Reuben as the first-born had a right to a double portion of all that the father had; see Deut. xxi. 17. The eminence or dignity mentioned here may refer to the priesthood; the power, to the regal government or kingdom. In this sense it has been understood by all the ancient Targumists.

Verse 4. Pouring out like the waters] This is an obscure sentence because unfinished. It evidently relates to the defilement of his father's couch; and the word pachaz, here translated pouring out, and in our Version unstable, has a bad meaning in other places of scripture, being applied to dissolute, debauched, and licentious conduct.

Thou shalt not excel] This tribe never rose to any eminence in Israel; was not so numerous by one third as either Judah, Joseph, or Dan, when Moses took the sum of them in the wilderness, and was among the first that were carried into captivity.

Then thou didst defile] Another unfinished sentence, similar to the former, and upon the same subject, passing over a transaction covertly, which delicacy forbade Jacob to enlarge on.

5. Simeon and Levi, brethren:
They have accomplished their fraudulent purposes.

6. Into their secret council my soul did not come;
In their confederacy my honour was not united:
For in their anger they slew a man (ish, a noble),
And in their pleasure they murdered a prince.

7. Cursed was their anger, for it was fierce!
And their excessive wrath, for it was inflexible.
I will divide them out in Jacob,
And I will disperse them in Israel.

Verse 5. Simeon and Levi are brethren] Not only springing from the same parents, but they have the same kind of disposition, headstrong, deceitful, vindictive, and cruel.

They have accomplished, &c.] Our margin has it, Their swords are weapons of violence, i.e. Their swords, which they should have used in defence of their persons or the honourable protection of their families, they have employed in the base and dastardly murder of an innocent people.

Verse 6. Into their secret council, &c.] Jacob here exculpates himself from all participation in the guilt of Simeon and Levi, in the murder of the Shechemites. He most solemnly declares that he knew nothing of the confederacy by which it was executed, nor of the secret council in which it was plotted.

If it should be said that the words tabo and te Chad should be translated in the future tense or in the imperative, as in our translation, I shall not contend; though it is well known that the proterite is often used for the future in Hebrew, and vice versa. Taken thus, the words mark the strong detestation which this holy man's soul felt for the villany of his sons: "My soul shall not come into their secret council. My honour shall not be united to their confederacy."

For in their anger they slew a man] A noble, an honourable man, viz., Shechem.

And in their pleasure] This marks the highest degree of wickedness and settled malice, they were delighted with their deed. As the original word ratson, signifies, in general, pleasure, benevolence, delight, &c., it should neither be translated self-will nor wilfulness, as some have done, but simply as above; and the reasons appear sufficiently obvious. They murdered a prince—Hamor, the father of Shechem. Instead of shor, which we have translated a wall, and others as on, I read sar, a prince, which makes a consistent sense; as there is no evidence whatever, that Simeon and Levi either dug down a wall or houghed the oxen, as some have translated the passage (see the margin).

Verse 7. Cursed was their anger] The first motions of their violence were savage; and their excessive or overflowing wrath, for it was inflexible—neither the supplication of the males, nor the entreaties, tears, cries, and shrieks of the helpless females, could deter them from their murderous purpose; for this, ver. 5, they are said to have accomplished.
I will divide them out, giving a portion of them to one tribe, and a portion to another; but they shall never attain to any political consequence. This appears to have been literally fulfilled. They were not only separated from each other, but even divided from themselves, according to this prediction of Jacob.

8. Judah! thou! Thy brethren shall praise thee.
Thy hand, in the neck of thine enemies:
The sons of thy father shall bow themselves to thee.

9. A lion's whelp is Judah:
From the prey, my son, thou hast ascended.
He couched, lying down like a strong lion,
And like a lioness; who shall arouse him?

10. From Judah the sceptre shall not depart,
Nor a teacher from his offspring,
Until that SHILOH shall come,
And to him shall be assembled the peoples.

11. Binding his colt to the vine,
And to the choice vine the foals of his ass,
He washed his garments in wine,
His clothes in the blood of the grape.

12. With wine shall his eyes be red,
And his teeth shall be white with milk.

Verse 8. Thy brethren shall praise thee.] As the name Judah signifies praise, Jacob takes occasion from its meaning to show that this tribe should be so eminent and glorious, that the rest of the tribes should praise it; that is, they should acknowledge its superior dignity, as in its privileges it should be distinguished beyond all the others. On this prophecy see Hales' Analysis, vol. ii. p. 167, &c.

Verse 10. From Judah the sceptre shall not depart] The Jews have a quibble on the word shebet, which we translate sceptre; they say it signifies a staff or rod, and that the meaning of it is, that "afflictions shall not depart from the Jews till the Messiah comes;" that they are still under affliction, and therefore the Messiah is not come. This is a miserable shift to save a lost cause. Their chief Targumist, Onkelos, understood and translated the word nearly as we do; and the same meaning is adopted by the Jerusalem Targum, and by all the ancient Versions, the Arabic excepted, which has kazeeb, a rod.

Nor a teacher from his offspring] I am sufficiently aware that the literal meaning of the original is from between his feet, and I am as fully satisfied that it should never be so translated; from between the feet and out of the thigh simply mean progeny, natural offspring, for reasons which surely need not be mentioned.

13. At the haven of the seas shall Zebulun dwell.
And he shall be a haven for ships.
And his border shall extend unto Sidon.

Verse 13. Zebulun's lot or portion in the division of the Promised Land extended from the Mediterranean Sea on the West, to the lake of Gennesareth on the East.

14. Issachar is a strong ass
Couching between two burdens.

13 'Zebulun shall dwell at the haven of the sea; and he shall be for an haven of ships; and his border shall be unto Zidon.

15. And he saw the resting place that it was good,
And the land that it was pleasant;
And he inclined his shoulder to the load,
And became a servant unto tribute.

Verse 14. Issachar is a strong ass] Properly a strong-limbed ass; couching between two burdens—bearing patiently, as most understand it, the fatigues of agriculture, and submitting to exorbitant taxes rather than exert themselves to drive out the old inhabitants.

The two burdens literally mean the two sacks or panniers, one on each side of the animal's body; and couching down between these refers to the well-known propensity of the ass, whenever wearied or overloaded, to lie down even with its burden on its back.

Verse 15. He saw that rest] The inland portion that was assigned to him between the other tribes. The pusillanimity which is generally attributed to this tribe, certainly does not agree with the view in which they are exhibited in scripture. In the song of Deborah this tribe is praised for the powerful assistance which it then afforded, Judg. v. 15. And in 1 Chron. vii. 1-5 they are expressly said to have been valiant men of might in all their families, and in all their generations; i.e. through every period of their history. It appears they were a laborious, hardy, valiant tribe, patient in labour, and invincible in war; bearing both these burdens with great constancy whenever it was necessary. When Tola of this tribe judged Israel, the land had rest twenty-three years, Judg. x. 1.

16. Dan shall judge his people,
As one of the tribes of Israel.

17. Dan shall be a serpent on the way,
A cerastes upon the track,
Biting the heels of the horse,
And his rider shall fall backwards.

Verse 16. Dan shall judge] Dan, whose name signifies judgment, was the eldest of Jacob's sons by Bilhah, Rachel's maid, and he is here promised an equal rule with those tribes that sprang from either Leah or Rachel, the legal wives of Jacob.

Some Jewish and some Christian writers understand this prophecy of Samson, who sprang from this tribe, and judged, or as the word might be translated avenged, the people of Israel twenty years.

Verse 17. Dan shall be a serpent] The original word is nachash, and we have seen on chap. iii. that this has a great variety of significations. It is probable that a serpent is here intended, but of what kind we know not; yet as the principal reference in the text is to guile, cunning, &c., the same creature may be intended as in chap. iii.

A cerastes upon the track] The word shephiphon, which is no where else to be found in the Bible, is thus translated by the Vulgate, and Bochart approves of the translation. The cerastes has its name from two little horns upon its head, and is remarkable for the property here ascribed to the shephiphon.

It is intimated that this tribe should gain the principal part of its conquests more by cunning and stratagem than by valour; and this is seen particularly in their conquest of 18. For thy salvation have I waited, O Lord.

This is a remarkable ejaculation, and seems to stand perfectly unconnected with all that went before and all that follows ; though it is probable that certain prophetic views which Jacob now had, and which he does not explain, gave rise to it ; and by this he at once expressed both his faith and hope in God. Both Jewish and Christian commentators have endeavoured to find out the connexion in which these words existed in the mind of the patriarch. As the tribe of Dan was the first that appears to have been seduced from the true worship of God (see Judg. xviii. 30), some have thought that Jacob refers particularly to this, and sees the end of the general apostasy only in the redemption by Jesus Christ, considering the nachash above as the seducer, and the Messiah the promised seed.

19. Gad, an army shall attack him,
And he shall attack in return.

This is one of the most obscure prophecies in the whole chapter ; and no two interpreters agree in the translation of the original words.

The prophecy seems to refer generally to the frequent disturbances to which this tribe should be exposed, and their hostile warlike disposition, that would always lead them to repel every aggression. It is likely that the prophecy had an especial fulfilment when this tribe, in conjunction with that of Reuben and the half-tribe of Manasseh, got a great victory over the Hagarites, taking captive one hundred thousand men, two thousand asses, fifty thousand camels, and two hundred and fifty thousand sheep : see 1 Chron. v. 18-22. Some translate the last word akeb, rear—"He shall invade their rear ;" which contains almost no meaning, as it only seems to state that though the army that invaded Gad should be successful, yet the Gadites would harass their rear as they returned : but this could never be a subject of sufficient consequence for a prophecy. The word is frequently used as a particle, signifying in consequence, because of, on account of. After the Gadites had obtained the victory above mentioned, they continued to possess the land of their enemies till they were carried away captive.

20. From Asher his bread shall be fat,
And he shall produce royal dainties.

This refers to the great fertility of the lot that fell to Asher, and which appears to have corresponded with the name, which signifies happy or blessed. His great prosperity is described by Moses in this figurative way : "Let Asher be blessed with children, let him be acceptable to his brethren, and let him dip his foot in oil ;" Deut. xxxiii. 24.

21. Naphtali is a spreading oak,
Producing beautiful branches.

This is Bochart's translation ; and perhaps no man who understands the genius of the Hebrew language will attempt to dispute its propriety ; it is as literal as it is correct. Our own translation scarcely gives any sense. The fruitfulness of this tribe in children may be here intended. From his four sons, Jahzeel, Guni, Jeker, and Shillem, which he took down into Egypt, chap. xvi. 24, in the course of two hundred and fifteen years there sprang off effective men 53,400 : but as great increase in this way was not an uncommon case in the descendants of Jacob, this may refer particularly to the fruitfulness of their soil, and the especial providential care and blessing of the Almighty ; to which indeed Moses seems particularly to refer, Deut. xxxiii. 23. So that he may be represented under the notion of a tree planted in a rich soil, growing to a prodigious size, extending its branches in all directions, and becoming a shade for men and cattle, and a harbour for the fowls of heaven.

The chief archers had him in hatred.

By the name of the Shepherd, the Rock of Israel ;

25. By the God of thy father, for he helped thee ;
And God All-sufficient, he blessed thee.
The blessing of the heavens from above,
And the blessings lying in the deep beneath.
The blessings of the breasts and of the womb.

26. The blessings of thy father have prevailed
Over the blessings of the eternal mountains,
And the desirable things of the everlasting hills.
These shall be on the head of Joseph,
And on his crown who was separated from his brethren.

Verse 22. The son of a fruitful vine] This appears to me to refer to Jacob himself, who was blessed with such a numerous posterity that in two hundred and fifteen years after this his own descendants amounted to upwards of 600,000 effective men ; and the figures here are intended to point out the continual growth and increase of his posterity. Jacob was a fruitful tree planted by a fountain, which because it was good would yield good fruit ; and because it was planted near a fountain, from being continually watered, would be perpetually fruitful.

The daughters, baneth, put here for branches, shoot over or run upon the wall] Alluding probably to the case of the vine, which requires to be supported by a wall, trees, &c.

Verse 23. The chief archers] The masters of arrows—Joseph's brethren, who either used such weapons, while feeding their flocks in the deserts, for the protection of themselves and cattle, or for the purpose of hunting ; and who probably excelled in archery. It may however refer to the bitter speeches and harsh words that they spoke to and of him, for they hated him, and could not speak peaceably to him, chap. xxxvii. 4. Thus they sorely afflicted him, and were incessantly scolding or finding fault.

Verse 24. But his bow remained in strength] The more he was persecuted, either by his brethren or in Egypt, the more resplendent his uprightness and virtues shone ; and the arms of his hands were all rendered successful by the hand—the powerful succour and protection, of the Mighty One of Jacob—that God who blessed and prospered all the counsels and plans of Jacob, and protected and increased him also when he was in a strange land, and often under the power of those who sought opportunities to oppress and defraud him.

By the name of the Shepherd ; the Rock of Israel] Jehovah, and El-Eloheyy Israel. This appears to me to refer to the subject of the thirty-second chapter, where Jacob wrestled with God, had God's name revealed to him, and his own help thee: "and by the Almighty, "who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the womb:

27 Benjamin shall "ravin as a wolf: in the morning he shall devour the prey, "and at night he shall divide the spoil.

29 And he charged them, and said unto them, I name changed from Jacob to Israel, in consequence of which he built an altar, and dedicated it to God, who had appeared to him under the name of Elohey-Israel, the strong God of Israel; which circumstance led him to use the term Rock, which, as an emblem of power, is frequently given to God in the sacred writings, and may here refer to the stone which Jacob set up. It is very probable that the word shepherd is intended to apply to our blessed Lord, who is the Shepherd of Israel, the good Shepherd; and who, beyond all controversy, was the person with whom Jacob wrestled.

Verse 25. The God of thy father] How frequently God is called the God of Jacob none needs be told who reads the Bible.

God All-sufficient] Instead of Shaddai, THE Almighty or All-sufficient; I read EL Shaddai, God All-sufficient; which is the reading of the Samaritan, Septuagint, Syriac, and Coptic, and of three reputable MSS. in the collections of Kennicott and De Rossi.

The blessing of the heavens from above] A generally pure, clear, serene sky, frequently dropping down fertilizing showers and dews, so as to make a very fruitful soil and salubrious atmosphere.

Blessings lying in the deep beneath] Whatever riches could be gained from the sea or rivers, from mines and minerals in the bowels of the earth, and from abundant springs in different parts of his inheritance. Our translation of this line is excessively obscure: Blessings of the deep that lieth under. What is it that lies under the deep?

The blessings of the breasts and of the womb] A numerous offspring, and an abundance of cattle. The progeny of Joseph, by Ephraim and Manasseh, amounted at the first census or enumeration (Numb. i.) to 75,900 men, which exceeded the sum of any one tribe; Judah, the greatest of the others, amounting to no more than 74,600.

Verse 26. The blessings of thy father, &c.] The blessings which thy father now prays for and pronounces are neither temporal nor transitory; they shall exceed in their duration the eternal mountains, and in their value and spiritual nature all the conveniences, comforts, and delicacies which the everlasting hills can produce. They shall last when the heavens and the earth are no more, and shall extend throughout eternity. They are the blessings which shall be communicated to the world by means of the Messiah.

27. Benjamin is a ravenous wolf:

In the morning he shall devour the prey,
And in the evening he shall divide the spoil.

This tribe is very fitly compared to a ravenous wolf, because of the rude courage and ferocity which they have invariably displayed, particularly in their war with the other tribes, in which they killed more men than the whole of their own numbers amounted to.

Its union with the tribe of Judah seems to be intimated in their joint conquests, expressed nearly in the same terms: "Judah went up from the prey;" "Benjamin devoured the prey." Moses in his parallel prophecy, Deut. xxxiii. 18, confirms this by signifying that the sanctuary should be

"am to be gathered unto my people: "bury me with my fathers<sup>1</sup> in the cave that is in the field of Ephron the Hittite;

30 In the cave that is in the field of Machpelah, (which is before Mamrein the land of Canaan,) "which Abraham bought with the field of Ephron the Hittite, for a possession of a burying-place.

31 ("There they buried Abraham and Sarah his wife; "there they buried Isaac and Rebekah his wife: and there I buried Leah.)

32 The purchase of the field and of the cave that is therein was from the children of Heth.

33 And when Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons, he gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost, and "was gathered unto his people.

fixed in his lot, and that he should continue as long as the existence of the temple itself.

In the morning, &c.] These expressions have been variously understood. [They suggest, according to Delitzsch, the idea of incessant and victorious capture of booty.]

Verse 28. Every one according to his blessing] That is, guided by the unerring Spirit of prophecy, Jacob now foretold to each of his sons all the important events which should take place during their successive generations, and the predominant characteristic of each tribe; and, at the same time made some comparatively obscure references to the advent of the Messiah, and the redemption of the world by him.

Verse 29. Bury me with my fathers, &c.] From this it appears that the cave at Machpelah was a common burying-place for Hebrews of distinction; and indeed the first public burying-place mentioned in history.

Verse 33. He gathered up his feet into the bed] It is very probable that while delivering these prophetic blessings Jacob sat upon the side of his bed, leaning upon his staff; and having finished, he lifted up his feet into the bed, stretched himself upon it, and expired!

And was gathered unto his people.] The testimony that this place bears to the immortality of the soul, and to its existence separate from the body, should not be lightly regarded. In the same moment in which Jacob is said to have gathered up his feet into the bed, and to have expired, it is added, and was gathered unto his people. It is certain that his body was not then gathered to his people, nor till seven weeks after; and it is not likely that a circumstance, so distant in point both of time and place, would have been thus anticipated, and associated with facts that took place in that moment. I cannot help therefore considering this an additional evidence for the immateriality of the soul, and that it was intended by the Holy Spirit to convey this grand and consolatory sentiment, that when a holy man ceases to live among his fellows, his soul becomes an inhabitant of another world, and is joined to the spirits of just men made perfect.

1. It has been conjectured that the eleven stars that bowed down to Joseph might probably refer to the signs of the Zodiac, which were very anciently known in Egypt, and are supposed to have had their origin in Chaldaea. On this supposition Joseph's eleven brethren answered to eleven of these signs, and himself to the twelfth. What likelihood the reader may see in this, I cannot pretend to say; but that the twelve signs were at that time known in Egypt and Chaldaea, there can be little doubt.

2. Through the mercy of God Jacob outlived the shady part of his own character, and his last days were his brightest and his best. He had many troubles and difficulties in life, under which an inferior mind must have necessarily sunk; but being a worker together with the providence of God, his difficulties only served in general to whet his invention, and draw out the immense resources of his own mind. From the time in which God favoured him with that wonderful manifestation of grace at Peniel, chap. xxxii., he became a new man. He had frequent discoveries of God before, to encourage him in journeys, secular affairs, &c.; but none in which the heart-changing power of divine grace was so abundantly revealed. Happy he whose last days are his best! We can scarcely conceive a scene more noble or dignified than that exhibited at the death-bed of Jacob. Having finished his work, with perfect possession of all his faculties, and being determined that while he was able to help himself none should be called in to assist (which was one of the grand characteristics of his life), he, with that dignity which became a great man and a man of God, stretched himself upon his bed, and rather appears to have conquered death than to have suffered it. Who, seeing the end of this illustrious patriarch, can help exclaiming, There is none like the God of Jeshurun! Let Jacob's God be my God! Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his! Reader, God is still the same; and though he may not make thee as great as was Jacob, yet he is ready to make thee as good; and, whatever thy past life may have been, to crown thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies, that thy end also may be peace.

Joseph begs permission from Pharaoh to accompany his father's corpse to Canaan 4, 5. Pharaoh consents, 6. Pharaoh's domestics and elders, the elders of Egypt, Joseph and his brethren, with chariots, horsemen, &c., form the funeral procession, 7-9. They come to the threshing-floor of Atad, and mourn there seven days, 10. The Canaanites call the place Abol-Mizraim, 11. They bury Jacob in the cave of Machpelah, 12, 13. Joseph returns to Egypt, 14. His brethren, fearing his displeasure, send messengers to him to entreat his forgiveness of past wrongs, 15-17. They follow, and prostrate themselves before him, and offer to be his servants, 18. Joseph receives them affectionately, and assures them and theirs of his care and protection, 19-21. Joseph and his brethren dwell in Egypt, and he sees the third generation of his children, 22, 23. Being about to die, he prophesies the return of the children of Israel from Egypt, 24, and causes them to swear that they will carry his bones to Canaan, 25. Joseph dies, aged one hundred and ten years; is embalmed, and put in a coffin in Egypt, 26.*

Verse 1. Joseph fell upon his father's face] Though this act appears to be suspended by the unnatural division of this verse from the preceding chapter, yet we may rest assured it was the immediate consequence of Jacob's death.

Verse 2. The physicians] The healers, those whose business it was to heal or restore the body from sickness by the administration of proper medicines; and when death took place, to heal or preserve it from dissolution by embalming, and thus give it a sort of immortality or everlasting duration. The original word chanat, which we translate to embalm, has undoubtedly the same meaning with the Arabic hanata, which also signifies to embalm, or to preserve from putrefaction by the application of spices, &c., and hence hantat, an embalmer. The word is used to express the reddening of leather; and probably the ideal meaning may be something analogous to our tanning, which consists in removing the moisture, and closing up the pores so as to render them impervious to wet. This probably is the grand principle in embalming; and whatever effects this, will preserve flesh as perfectly as skin.

In the art of embalming [the secret of which is now lost] the Egyptians excelled all nations in the world; with them it was a common practice. Instances of the perfection to which they carried this art may be seen in the numerous mummies, as they are called, which are found in different European cabinets, and which have been all brought from Egypt. This people not only embalmed men and women, but they embalmed useful animals also.

Verse 3. Forty days] The body it appears required this number of days to complete the process of embalming; afterwards it lay in natron thirty days more, making in the whole seventy days, according to the preceding accounts, during which the mourning was continued.

Verse 4. Speak, I pray you, in the ears of Pharaoh] But why did not Joseph apply himself? Because he was now in his mourning habits, and in such none must appear in the presence of the eastern monarchs. See Esth. iv. 2.

Verse 7. The elders of his house] Persons who, by reason of their age, had acquired much experience; and who on this account were deemed the best qualified to conduct the affairs of the king's household. Similar to these were the Eldermen or Aldermen, among our Saxon ancestors, who were senators and peers of the realm.

The funeral procession of Jacob must have been truly grand. Joseph, his brethren and their descendants, the servants of Pharaoh, the elders of his house, and all the elders—all the principal men, of the land of Egypt, with chariots and horsemen, must have appeared a very great company indeed. We have seen LORDS, for their greater honour, buried at the public expense; and all the male branches of the royal family, as well as the most eminent men of the nation, join in the funeral procession; but what was all this in comparison of the funeral solemnity now before us? Here was no conqueror, no mighty man of valour, no person of proud descent; here was only a plain man, who had dwelt almost all his life long in tents, without their flocks, and their herds, they left in the land of Goshen.

9 And there went up with him both chariots and horsemen : and it was a very great company.

10 And they came to the threshing-floor of Atad, which is beyond Jordan, and there they mourned with a great and very sore lamentation : and he made a mourning for his father seven days.

11 And when the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, saw the mourning in the floor of Atad, they said, This is a grievous mourning to the Egyptians : wherefore the name of it was called Abel-mizraim, which is beyond Jordan.

12 And his sons did unto him according as he commanded them :

13 For his sons carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah, (which Abraham bought with the field, for a possession of a burying-place, of Ephron the Hittite,) before Mamre.

14 And Joseph returned into Egypt, he, and his brethren, and all that went up with him to bury his father, after he had buried his father.

15 And when Joseph's brethren saw that their father was dead, they said, Joseph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him.

16 And they sent a messenger unto Joseph, saying, Thy father did command before he died, saying, 17 So shall ye say unto Joseph, Forgive, I pray thee now, the trespass of thy brethren, and their sin ; for they did unto thee evil : and now, we pray thee, forgive the trespass of the servants of the God of thy father. And Joseph wept when they spake unto him.

18 And his brethren also went and fell down before his face ; and they said, Behold, we be thy servants.

19 And Joseph said unto them, Fear not : for am I in the place of God ?

20 But as for you, ye thought evil against me ; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive.

21 Now therefore fear ye not : I will nourish you, and your little ones. And he comforted them, and spake kindly unto them.

22 And Joseph dwelt in Egypt, he, and his any other subjects than his cattle, and whose kingdom was not of this world. Behold this man honoured by a national mourning, and by a national funeral ! It may be said indeed that "all this was done out of respect to Joseph." Be it so ; why was Joseph thus respected ? Was it because he had conquered nations, had made his sword drunk with blood, had triumphed over the enemies of Egypt ? NO ! But because he had saved men alive ; because he was the king's faithful servant, the rich man's counsellor, and the poor man's friend. He was a national blessing ; and the nation mourns in his affliction, and unites to do him honour.

Verse 10. The threshing-floor of Atad] As atad signifies a bramble or thorn, it has been understood by the Arabic, not as a man's name, but as the name of a place ; but all the other Versions and the Targums consider it as the name of a man. Threshing-floors were always in a field, in the open-air ; and Atad was probably what we would call a great farmer or chief of some clan or tribe in that place. Jerome supposed the place to have been about two leagues from Jericho ; but we have no certain information on this point. The funeral procession stopped here, probably as affording pasturage to their cattle while they observed the seven days' mourning which terminated the funeral solemnities, after which nothing remained but the interment of the corpse. The mourning of the ancient Hebrews was usually of seven days' continuance, Numb. xix. 19, 1 Sam. xxxi. 13 ; though on certain occasions it was extended to thirty days, Numb. xx. 29, Deut. xxi. 13, xxxiv. 8, but never longer. The seventy days' mourning mentioned above was that of the Egyptians, and was rendered necessary by the long process of embalming, which obliged them to keep the body out of the grave for seventy days, as we learn both from Herodotus and Diodorus. Seven days by the order of God a man was to mourn for his dead, because during that time he was considered as unclean ; but when those were finished he was to purify himself, and consider the mourning as ended ; Numb. xix. 11, 19. Thus God gave seven days, in some cases thirty, to mourn in : man, ever in his own estimation, wiser than the word of God, has added eleven whole months to the term, which nature itself pronounces to be absurd, because it is incapable of supporting grief for such a time ; and thus mourning is now, except in the first seven or thirty days, a mere solemn ill-conducted FARCE, a grave mimicry, a vain show, that convicts itself of its own hypocrisy. Who will rise up on the side of God and common sense, and restore becoming sorrow on the death of a relative to decency of garb and moderation in its continuance ? Suppose the near relatives of the deceased were to be allowed seven days of seclusion from society, for the purpose of meditating on death and eternity, and after this to appear in a mourning habit for thirty days ; every important end would be accomplished, and hypocrisy, the too common attendant of man, be banished, especially from that part of his life in which deep sincerity is not less becoming than in the most solemn act of his religious intercourse with God.

Verse 12. And his sons did unto him] This and the thirteenth verse have been supposed to belong to the conclusion of the preceding chapter, in which connexion they certainly read more consistently than they do here.

Verse 15. Saw that their father was dead] This at once argues both a sense of guilt in their own consciences, and a want of confidence in their brother. They might have supposed that hitherto he had forbore to punish them merely on their father's account ; but now that he was dead, and Joseph having them completely in his power, they imagined that he would take vengeance on them for their former conduct towards him.

Thus conscience records criminality ; and, by giving birth to continual fears and doubtfulness, destroys all peace of mind, security, and confidence.

Verse 16. Thy father did command] Whether he did or not we cannot tell. Some think they had feigned this story, but that is not so likely. Jacob might have had suspicions too, and might have thought that the best way to prevent evil was to humble themselves before their brother, and get a fresh assurance of his forgiveness.

Verse 17. The servants of the God of thy father] These words were wonderfully well chosen, and spoken in the most forcible manner to Joseph's piety and filial affection. No wonder then that he wept when they spake to him.

Verse 19. Am I in the place of God ?] These words may be understood either as a question, or an affirmative proposition. How should I take any further notice of your transgressions ? I have passed it by ; the matter lies now between God and you. Or, in the order of Divine Providence I am now in God's place ; he has furnished me with means, and made me a distributor of his bounty ; I will therefore not only nourish you, but also your little ones, ver. 21 : and therefore he spake comfortably unto them, as in chap. xlv. 8, telling them that he attributed the whole business to the particular providence of God rather than to any ill will or malice in them, and that as God had honoured him by making him vicegerent in the dispensations of his especial bounty towards so many people, it was impossible he should be displeased with the means by which this was brought about.

Verse 22. Joseph dwelt in Egypt] Continued in Egypt after his return from Canaan till his death ; he, and his father's house: and Joseph lived an hundred and ten years.

23 And Joseph saw Ephraim's children * of the third generation: <sup>b</sup> the children also of Machir, the son of Manasseh, <sup>c</sup> were <sup>d</sup> brought up upon Joseph's knees.

father's house—all the descendants of Israel, till the exodus or departure under the direction of Moses and Aaron, which was one hundred and forty-four years after.

Verse 23. Were brought up upon Joseph's knees.] They were educated by him, or under his direction; his sons and their children continuing to acknowledge him as patriarch, or head of the family, as long as he lived.

Verse 24. Joseph said—I die.] That is, I am dying; and God will surely visit you—he will yet again give you, in the time when it shall be essentially necessary, the most signal proof of his unbounded love towards the seed of Jacob.

And bring you out of this land.] Though ye have here every thing that can render life comfortable, yet this is not the typical land, the land given by covenant, the land which represents the rest that remains for the people of God.

Verse 25. Ye shall carry up my bones.] That I may finally rest with my ancestors in the land which God gave to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; and which is a pledge as it is a type of the kingdom of heaven. Thus says the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. xi. 22: "By FAITH Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departure of the children of Israel; and gave commandment concerning his bones." From this it is evident that Joseph considered all these things as typical, and by this very commandment expressed his faith in the immortality of the soul, and the general resurrection of the dead. This oath, by which Joseph then bound his brethren, their posterity considered as binding on themselves; and Moses took care, when he departed from Egypt, to carry up Joseph's body with him, Exod. xiii. 19; which was afterwards buried in Shechem, Josh. xxiv. 32, the very portion which Jacob had purchased from the Amorites, and which he gave to his son Joseph, Gen. xlviii. 22; Acts vii. 16.

Verse 26. Joseph died, being an hundred and ten years old.] Literally, the son of an hundred and ten years. Here the period of time he lived is personified, all the years of which it was composed being represented as a nurse or father, feeding, nourishing, and supporting him to the end.

They embalmed him.] The same precautions were taken to preserve his body as to preserve that of his father Jacob; and this was particularly necessary in his case, because his body was to be carried to Canaan an hundred and forty-four years after; which was the duration of the Israelites' bondage after the death of Joseph.

Joseph's life was the shortest of all the patriarchs, for which Bishop Patrick gives a sound physical reason—he was the son of his father's old age. It appears from Archbishop Usher's Chronology that Joseph governed Egypt under four kings, Mephramuthosis, Thmosis, Anenophis, and Orus. His government, we know, lasted eighty years; for when he stood before Pharaoh he was thirty years of age, chap. xli. 46, and he died when he was one hundred and ten.

On the character and conduct of Joseph many remarks have already been made in the preceding notes. On the subject of his piety there can be but one opinion. It was truly exemplary, and certainly was tried in cases in which few instances occur of persevering fidelity. His high sense of the holiness of God, the strong claims of justice, and the rights of hospitality and gratitude, led him, in the instance of the solicitations of his master's wife, to act a part which, though absolutely just and proper, can never be sufficiently praised. Heathen authors boast of some persons of such singular constancy; but the intelligent reader will recollect that these relations stand in general in their fabulous histories, and are destitute of those characteristics which truth essentially requires.

His fidelity to his master is not less evident, and God's approbation of his conduct is strongly marked; for he caused whatsoever he did to prosper, whether a slave in the land, unto the land 'which he sware to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob.

25 And * Joseph took an oath of the children of Israel, saying, God will surely visit you, and ye shall carry up my bones from hence.

26 So Joseph died, being an hundred and ten years old: and they <sup>b</sup> embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin in Egypt.

house of his master, a prisoner in the dungeon, or a prime minister by the throne, which is a full proof that his ways pleased him; and this is more clearly seen in the providential deliverances by which he was favoured.

On the political conduct of Joseph there are conflicting opinions. On the one hand it is asserted that "he found the Egyptians a free people, and that he availed himself of a most afflicting providence of God to reduce them all to a state of slavery, destroyed their political consequence, and made their king despotic." In all these respects his political measures have been strongly vindicated, not only as being directed by God, but as being obviously the best, every thing considered, for the safety, honour, and welfare of his sovereign and the kingdom. It is true he bought the lands of the people for the king, but he farmed them to the original occupiers again, at the moderate and fixed crown rent of one-fifth part of the produce. By the original constitution of Egypt established by Menes and Thoth or Hermes his prime minister, the lands were divided into three portions, between the king, the priests, and the military, each party being bound to support its respective establishment by the produce. It is certain, therefore, that the constitution of Egypt was considerably altered by Joseph, and there can be no doubt that much additional power was, by this alteration, vested in the hands of the king; but as we do not find that any improper use of this power was made, we may rest assured that it was so qualified and restricted by wholesome regulations, though they are not here particularized, as completely to prevent all abuse of the regal power, and all tyrannical usurpation of popular rights. That the people were nothing but slaves to the king, the military, and the priests before, appears from the account given by Diodorus. Matters, however, became more regular under the administration of Joseph; and it is perhaps not too much to say, that previously to this Egypt was without a fixed regular constitution, and that it was not the least of the blessings that it owed to the wisdom and prudence of Joseph, that he reduced it to a regular form of government, giving the people such an interest in the safety of the state as was well calculated to ensure their exertions to defend the nation, and render the constitution fixed and permanent.

It is well known that Justin, one of the Roman historians, has made particular and indeed honourable mention of Joseph's administration in Egypt, in the account he gives of Jewish affairs, lib. xxxvi. chap. 2.

Thus terminates the Book of GENESIS, the most ancient record in the world; including the history of two grand subjects, CREATION and PROVIDENCE, of each of which it gives a summary, but astonishingly minute and detailed account. From this book almost all the ancient philosophers, astronomers, chronologists, and historians have taken their respective data; and all the modern improvements and accurate discoveries in different arts and sciences have only served to confirm the facts detailed by Moses; and to show that all the ancient writers on these subjects have approached to or receded from TRUTH and the phenomena of nature, in proportion as they have followed the Mosaic history.

In this book the CREATIVE POWER and ENERGY of GOD are first introduced to the reader's notice, and the mind is overwhelmed with those grand creative acts by which the universe was brought into being. When this account is completed, and the introduction of SIN, and its awful consequences in the destruction of the earth by a flood, noticed, then the Almighty Creator is next introduced as the RESTORER and PRESERVER of the world; and thus the history of Providence commences: a history in which the mind of man is alternately delighted and confounded with the infinitely varied plans of wisdom and mercy in preserving the human species, counteracting the evil propensities of men and devils by means of gracious influences conveyed through religious institutions, planting and watering the seeds of righteousness which himself had sowed in the hearts of men, and leading forward and maturing the grand purposes of his grace in the final salvation of the human race.

After giving a minutely detailed account of the peopling of the earth, ascertaining and settling the bounds of the different nations of mankind, the sacred writer proceeds with the history of one family only; but he chooses that one through which, as from an ever-during fountain, the streams of justice, grace, goodness, wisdom, and truth, should emanate. Here we see a pure well of living water, springing up unto eternal life, restrained in its particular influence to one people, till, in the fulness of time, the fountain should be opened in the house of David for sin and for uncleanness in general, and the earth filled with the knowledge and salvation of God; thus by means of one family, as extensive a view of the economy of providence and grace is afforded as it is possible for the human mind to comprehend.

In this epitome how wonderful do the workings of Providence appear! An astonishing concatenated train of stupendous and minute events is laid before us; and every transaction is so distinctly marked, as every where to exhibit the finger, the hand, or the arm of God! But did God lavish his providential cares and attention on this one family, exclusive of the rest of his intelligent offspring? No: for the same superintendence, providential direction, and influence, would be equally seen in all the concerns of human life, in the preservation of individuals, the rise and fall of kingdoms and states, and in all the mighty REVOLUTIONS, natural, moral, and political, in the universe, were God, as in the preceding instances, to give us the detailed history; but what was done in the family of Abraham, was done in behalf of the whole human race. This specimen is intended to show us that God does work, and that against him and the operations of his hand no might, no counsel, no cunning, of men or devils, can prevail; that he who walks uprightly walks securely; and that all things work together for good to them who love God; that none is so ignorant, low, or lost, that God cannot instruct, raise up, and save. In a word, he shows himself by this history to be the invariable friend of mankind, embracing every opportunity to do them good, and, to speak after the manner of men, rejoicing in the frequent recurrences of such opportunities; that every man, considering the subject, may be led to exclaim in behalf of all his fellows, BEHOLD HOW HE LOVETH THEM!

Observations on the Jewish manner of dividing and reading the Law and the Prophets.

The ancient Jews divided the whole law of Moses into fifty-four sections, which they read in their synagogues in the course of the fifty-two sabbaths in the year, joining two of the shortest twice together, that the whole might be finished in one year's space; but in their intercalated years, in which they added a month, they had fifty-four sabbaths, and then they had a section for each sabbath: and it was to meet the exigency of the intercalated years that they divided the law into fifty-four sections at first. When Antiochus Epiphanes forbade the Jews on pain of death to read their law, they divided the prophets into the same number of sections, and read them in their synagogues in place of the law; and when, under the Asmoneans, they recovered their liberty, and with it the free exercise of their religion, though the reading of the law was resumed, they continued the use of the prophetic sections, reading them conjointly with those in the law. To this first division and mode of reading the law there is a reference, Acts xv. 21: For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being READ IN THE SYNAGOGUES EVERY SABBATH-DAY. To the second division and conjoint reading of the law and the prophets we also find a reference, Acts xiii. 15: And after the reading of the LAW AND THE PROPHETS, the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, &c. And that the prophets were read in this way in our Lord's time, we have a proof, Luke iv. 16, &c., where, going into the synagogue to read on the sabbath day, as was his custom, there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Isaiah: and it appears that the prophetic section for that sabbath was taken from the sixty-first chapter of his prophecies.

Of these sections the book of Genesis contains twelve:

The FIRST, called bereshith, begins chap. i. ver. 1, and ends chap. vi. ver. 8.

The SECOND, called Noach, begins chap. vi. ver. 9, and ends chap. xi.

The THIRD, called lech lecha, begins chap. xii., and ends chap. xvii.

The FOURTH, called vaiyera, begins chap. xviii., and ends chap. xxii.

The FIFTH, called chaiyey Sarah, begins chap. xxiii., and ends chap. xxv. ver. 18.

The SIXTH, called toledoth, begins chap. xxv. ver. 19, and ends chap. xxviii. ver. 9.

The SEVENTH, called vaiyetse, begins chap. xxviii. ver. 10, and ends chap. xxxii. ver. 8.

The EIGHTH, called vaiyishlach, begins chap. xxxii. ver. 4, and ends chap. xxxvi.

The NINTH, called vaiyesheb, begins chap. xxxvii., and ends chap. xl.

The TENTH, called mikkets, begins chap. xli., and ends chap. xlv. ver. 17.

The ELEVENTH, called vaiyiggash, begins chap. xlv. ver. 18, and ends chap. xlvii. ver. 27.

The TWELFTH, called vayecht, begins chap. xlvii. ver. 28, and ends chap. l.

PREFACE TO THE BOOK

EXODUS.

THE name by which this book is generally distinguished is borrowed from the Septuagint, in which it is called EXODUS, the going out or departure; and by the Codex Alexandrinus, the departure from Egypt, because the departure of the Israelites from Egypt is the most remarkable fact mentioned in the whole book. In the Hebrew Bibles it is called VE-ELLEH SHEMOTH, these are the names, which are the words with which it commences. It contains a history [assuming that the chronology of the Septuagint is correct] of the transactions of 145 years, beginning at the death of Joseph, where the book of Genesis ends, and coming down to the erection of the Tabernacle in the wilderness at the foot of Mount Sinai.

CHAPTER I.

The names and number of the children of Israel that went down into Egypt, 1-5. Joseph and all his brethren of that generation die, 6. The great increase of their posterity, 7. The cruel policy of the king of Egypt to destroy them, 8-11. They increase greatly, notwithstanding their affliction, 12. Account of their hard bondage, 13, 14. Pharaoh's command to the Hebrew midwives to kill all the male children, 15, 16. The midwives disobey the king's commandment, and, on being questioned, vindicate themselves, 17-19. God is pleased with their conduct, blesses them, and increases the people, 20, 21. Pharaoh gives a general command to the Egyptians to drown all the male children of the Hebrews, 22.

NOW *these are the names of the children of Israel, which came into Egypt; every man and his household came with Jacob.

2 Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah,

3 Issachar, Zebulun, and Benjamin,

4 Dan, and Naphtali, Gad, and Asher.

5 And all the souls that came out of the <sup>b</sup>loins of Jacob were <sup>c</sup>seventy souls: for Joseph was in Egypt already.

6 And <sup>d</sup>Joseph died, and all his brethren, and all that generation.

7 *And the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them.

8 Now there <sup>f</sup>arose up a new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph.

9 And he said unto his people, Behold, <sup>g</sup>the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we.

Verse 1. These are the names] Though this book is a continuation of the book of Genesis, with which probably it was in former times conjoined, Moses thought it necessary to introduce it with an account of the names and number of the family of Jacob when they came to Egypt, to show that though they were then very few, yet in a short time, under the especial blessing of God, they had multiplied exceedingly; and thus the promise to Abraham had been literally fulfilled.

Verse 6. Joseph died, and all his brethren] That is, Joseph had now been sometime dead, as also all his brethren, and all the Egyptians who had known Jacob and his twelve sons; and this is a sort of reason why the important services performed by Joseph were forgotten.

Verse 7. The children of Israel were fruitful] Paru, a general term, signifying that they were like healthy trees, bringing forth an abundance of fruit.

And increased] They increased like fishes, as the original word implies.

Abundantly] They multiplied; this is a separate term, and should not have been used as an adverb by our translators.

And waxed exceeding mighty] They became strong beyond measure—superlatively, superlatively—so that the land (Goshen) was filled with them. This astonishing increase was, under the providence of God, chiefly owing to two causes: 1. The Hebrew women were exceedingly fruitful, suffered very little in parturition, and probably often brought forth twins. 2. There appear to have been no premature deaths among them. Thus, in about two hundred and fifteen years they were multiplied to upwards of 600,000, independently of old men, women, and children.

Verse 8. There arose up a new king] Who this was it is difficult to say. It was probably Ramesses Miamun, or his son Amenophis, who succeeded him in the government of Egypt.

Which knew not Joseph] The verb yada, which we translate to know, often signifies to acknowledge or approve. We may therefore understand by the new king's not knowing Joseph, his disapproving of that system of government which Joseph had established, as well as his haughtily refusing to acknowledge the obligations under which the whole land of Egypt was laid to this eminent prime minister of one of his predecessors.

Verse 9. He said unto his people] He probably summoned a council of his nobles and elders to consider the subject; and the result was to persecute and destroy them, as is afterwards stated.

Verse 10. They join also unto our enemies] It has been conjectured that Pharaoh had probably his eye on the oppressions which Egypt had suffered under the Hyksos kings, who for a long series of years had, according to falleth out any war, they join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the land.

11 Therefore they did set over them task-masters * to afflict them with their <sup>b</sup>burdens. And they built for Pharaoh treasure cities, Pithom <sup>c</sup>and Raamses.

12 <sup>d</sup>But the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew. And they were grieved because of the children of Israel.

13 And the Egyptians made the children of Israel to serve with rigour.

14 And they <sup>e</sup>made their lives bitter with hard bondage, <sup>f</sup>in mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field : all their service, wherein they made them serve, was with rigour.

15 And the king of Egypt spake to the Hebrew

* Gen. xv. 13. Ch. iii. 7. Deut. xxvi. 6.—<sup>b</sup> Ch. ii. 11. v. 4, 5. Ps. lxxxi. 6.—<sup>c</sup> Gen. xlvii. 11.—<sup>d</sup> Heb. And as they afflicted them so they multiplied, &c.—<sup>e</sup> Ch. ii. 23. vi. 9. Num. xx. 15. Acts

Manetho, governed the land with extreme cruelty. As the Israelites were of the same occupation (viz., shepherds), the jealous, cruel king found it easy to attribute to them the same motives, taking it for granted that they were only waiting for a favourable opportunity to join the enemies of Egypt, and so overrun the whole land.

Verse 11. Set over them task-masters] The persons who appointed them their work, and exacted the performance of it. The work itself being oppressive, and the manner in which it was exacted still more so, there is some room to think that they not only worked them unmercifully, but also obliged them to pay an exorbitant tribute at the same time.

Treasure cities] Public granaries. Calmet supposes this to be the name of a city, and translates the verse thus: "They built cities, viz., Miscenoth, Pithom, and Rameses." Pithom is supposed to be that which Herodotus calls Patumos. Raamses, or rather Rameses (for it is the same Hebrew word as in Gen. xlvii. 11, and should be written the same way here as there), is supposed to have been the capital of the land of Goshen, mentioned in the book of Genesis by anticipation; for it was probably not erected till after the days of Joseph, when the Israelites were brought under that severe oppression described in the book of Exodus.

Some writers suppose that besides these cities the Israelites built the pyramids. If this conjecture be well founded, perhaps they are intended in the word miscenoth, which, from sachan, to lay up in store, might signify places where Pharaoh laid up his treasures; and from their structure they appear to have been designed for something of this kind. If the history of the pyramids be not found in the book of Exodus, it is nowhere else extant; their origin, if not alluded to here, being lost in their very remote antiquity. [There is no reason to suppose that the pyramids were built by the Israelites; nor is it likely that they were used for storing treasures.]

Josephus expressly says that one part of the oppression suffered by the Israelites in Egypt was occasioned by building pyramids.

It may be necessary to observe that all the Egyptian kings, whatever their own name was, took the surname of Pharaoh when they came to the throne; a name which in its general acceptation, signified the same as king or monarch, but in its literal meaning, as Henghart has amply proved, it signifies a crocodile, which being a sacred animal among the Egyptians, the word might be added to their kings in order to procure them the greater reverence and respect.

Verse 12. But the more they afflicted them] The margin has pretty nearly preserved the import of the original: And as they afflicted them, so they multiplied and so they grew. That is, in proportion to their afflictions was their prosperity; and had their sufferings been greater, their increase would have been still more abundant.

Verse 13. To serve with rigour.] With cruelty, great oppression; being ferocious with them. This kind of cruelty to slaves, and ferociousness, unfeelingness, and hard-heartedness, were particularly forbidden to the children of Israel.

midwives, of which the name of the one was Shiphras, and the name of the other Puah :

16 And he said, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools; if it be a son, then ye shall kill him: but if it be a daughter, then she shall live.

17 But the midwives <sup>a</sup>feared God, and did not <sup>b</sup>as the king of Egypt commanded them, but saved the men-children alive.

18 And the king of Egypt called for the midwives, and said unto them, Why have ye done this thing, and have saved the men-children alive?

19 And <sup>c</sup>the midwives said unto Pharaoh, Because the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women: for they are lively, and are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them.

20 <sup>d</sup>Therefore God dealt well with the midwives :

See Lev. xxv. 43, 46, where the same word is used: Thou shalt not rule over him with RIGOUR, but shalt fear thy God.

Verse 14. They made their lives bitter] So that they became weary of life, through the severity of their servitude.

With hard bondage] This was the general character of their life in Egypt; it was a life of the most painful servitude, oppressive enough in itself, but made much more so by the cruel manner of their treatment while performing their tasks.

In mortar, and in brick] First in digging the clay, kneading and preparing it, and secondly forming it into bricks, drying them in the sun, &c.

Service in the field] Carrying these materials to the places where they were to be formed into buildings, and serving the builders while employed in those public works.

Verse 15. Hebrew midwives] Shiphras and Puah, who are here mentioned, were probably certain chiefs, under whom all the rest acted, and by whom they were instructed in the obstetric art. [The midwives were probably Egyptian, though their names are Shemitic.]

Verse 16. Upon the stools] This is a difficult word, and occurs nowhere else in the Hebrew Bible but in Jer. xvii. 3, where we translate it the potter's wheels. As the original signifies a stone, the obnayim has been supposed to signify a stone trough, in which they received and washed the infant as soon as born. Jonathan ben Uzziel gives us a curious reason for the command given by Pharaoh to the Egyptian women: "Pharaoh slept, and saw in his sleep a balance, and behold the whole land of Egypt stood in one scale, and a lamb in the other; and the scale in which the lamb was outweighed that in which was the land of Egypt. Immediately he sent and called all the chief magicians, and told them his dream. And Jannes and Jimbres (see 2 Tim. iii. 8), who were chief of the magicians, opened their mouths and said to Pharaoh, 'A child is shortly to be born in the congregation of the Israelites, whose hand shall destroy the whole land of Egypt.'"

Verse 17. The midwives feared God] Because they knew that God had forbidden murder of every kind; for though the law was not yet given, Exod. xx. 13, being Hebrews they must have known that God had from the beginning declared, Whosoever sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed, Gen. ix. 6. Therefore they saved the male children of all to whose assistance they were called. See ver. 19.

Verse 19. The Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women] This is a simple statement of what general experience knows to be a fact, viz., that women, who during the whole of their pregnancy are accustomed to hard labour, especially in the open air, have comparatively little pain in parturition. At this time the whole Hebrew nation, men and women, were in a state of slavery, and were obliged to work in mortar and brick, and all manner of service in THE FIELD, ver. 14, and this at once accounts for the ease and speediness of their travail. With the strictest truth the midwives might say, The Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women: the latter fare delicately, are not inured to labour, and are kept shut up at home, therefore they have and the people multiplied, and waxed very mighty.

21 And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, * that he made them houses.

* 1 Sam. ii. 35. 2 Sam. vii. 11, 13, 27, 29. 1 Kings ii. 24. xi. 38.

hard, difficult, and dangerous labours; but the Hebrew women are lively, chayoth, are strong, hale and vigorous, and therefore are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them. In such cases we may naturally conclude that the midwives were very seldom even sent for. And this is probably the reason why we find but two mentioned; as in such a state of society there could be but very little employment for persons of that profession, as a mother, an aunt, or any female acquaintance or neighbour, could readily afford all the assistance necessary in such cases. Commentators, pressed with imaginary difficulties, have sought for examples of easy parturition in Æthiopia, Persia, and India, as parallels to the case before us; but they might have spared themselves the trouble, because the case is common in all parts of the globe where the women labour hard, and especially in the open air.

I have entered more particularly into this subject, because, through want of proper information (perhaps from a worse motive), certain persons have spoken very unguardedly against this inspired record: "The Hebrew midwives told palpable lies, and God commends them for it; thus we may do evil that good may come of it, and sanctify the means by the end." Now, I contend that there was neither lie direct nor even prevarication in the case. The midwives boldly state to Pharaoh a fact, and they state it in such a way as to bring conviction to his mind on the subject of his oppressive cruelty on the one hand, and the mercy of Jehovah on the other. Here then is a fact, boldly pronounced in the face of danger; and we see that God was pleased with this frankness of the midwives, and he blessed them for it.

Verse 20. Therefore God dealt well with the midwives: and the people multiplied, and waxed very mighty. This shows an especial providence and blessing of God; for though in all cases where females are kept to hard labour they have comparatively easy and safe travail, yet in a state of slavery the increase is generally very small, as the children die for want of proper nursing, the women, through their labour, being obliged to neglect their offspring; so that in the slave countries the stock is obliged to be recruited by foreign imports; yet in the case above it was not so; there was not any barren among their tribes, and even their women, though constantly obliged to perform their daily tasks, were neither rendered unfruitful by it, nor taken off by premature death through the violence and continuance of their labour, when even in the delicate situation mentioned above.

Verse 21. He made them houses. Dr. Shuckford reads the passage thus, adding the 21st to the 20th verse: "And they multiplied and waxed mighty; and this happened because the midwives feared God; and he (Pharaoh) made them (the Israelites) houses; and commanded all his people, 22 And Pharaoh charged all his people, saying, Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river, and every daughter ye shall save alive.

Ps. cxvii. 1.—<sup>b</sup> Acts vii. 19. Ch. vii. 19-21. Rev. xvi. 4-6.

saying, Every son that is born, &c." The doctor supposes that previously to this time the Israelites had no fixed dwellings, but lived in tents, and therefore had a better opportunity of concealing their children; but now Pharaoh built them houses, and obliged them to dwell in them, and caused the Egyptians to watch over them, that all the male children might be destroyed, which could not have been easily effected had the Israelites continued to live in their usual scattered manner in tents. That the houses in question were not made for the midwives, but for the Israelites in general, the Hebrew text seems pretty plainly to indicate, for the pronoun lahem, to them, is the masculine gender; had the midwives been meant, the feminine pronoun lahen would have been used. Others contend that by making them houses, not only the midwives are intended, but also that the words mark an increase of their families, and that the objection taken from the masculine pronoun is of no weight, because these pronouns are often interchanged; see 1 Kings xxii. 17, where lahem is written, and in the parallel place, 2 Chron. xviii. 6, lahen is used. There is no doubt that God did bless the midwives, his approbation of their conduct is strictly marked; and there can be no doubt of his prospering the Israelites, for it is particularly said that the people multiplied and waxed very mighty. But the words most probably refer to the Israelites, whose houses or families were built up by an extraordinary increase of children, notwithstanding the cruel policy of the Egyptian king. Vain is the counsel of man when opposed to the determinations of God! All the means used for the destruction of this people became in his hand instruments of their prosperity and increase. How true is the saying, If God be for us, who can be against us?

Verse 22. Ye shall cast into the river] As the Nile, which is here intended, was a sacred river among the Egyptians, it is not unlikely that Pharaoh intended the young Hebrews as an offering to his god, having two objects in view: 1. To increase the fertility of the country, by thus procuring, as he might suppose, a proper and sufficient annual inundation; and 2. To prevent an increase of population among the Israelites, and in process of time procure their entire extermination. [This conjecture is not very plausible.]

It is conjectured, with a great show of probability, that the edict mentioned in this verse was not made till after the birth of Aaron, and that it was revoked soon after the birth of Moses; as if it had subsisted in its rigour during the eighty-six years which elapsed between this and the deliverance of the Israelites, it is not at all likely that their males would have amounted to six hundred thousand, and those all effective men.

CHAPTER II.

Amram and Jochebed marry, 1. Moses is born, and is hidden by his mother three months, 2. Is exposed in an ark of bulrushes on the river Nile, and watched by his sister, 3, 4. He is found by the daughter of Pharaoh, who commits him to the care of his own mother, and has him educated as her own son, 5-9. When grown up, he is brought to Pharaoh's daughter, who receives him as her own child, and calls him Moses, 10. Finding an Egyptian smiting a Hebrew, he kills the Egyptian, and hides him in the sand, 11, 12. Reproves two Hebrews that were contending together, one of whom charges him with killing the Egyptians, 13, 14. Pharaoh, hearing of the death of the Egyptian, sought to slay Moses, who, being alarmed, escapes to the land of Midian, 15. Meets with the seven daughters of Reuel, priest or prince of Midian, who came to water their flocks, and assists them, 16, 17. On their return they inform their father Reuel, who invites Moses to his house, 18-20. Moses dwells with him, and receives Zipporah his daughter to wife, 21. She bears him a son, whom he calls Gershom, 22. The children of Israel, grievously oppressed in Egypt, cry for deliverance, 23. God remembers his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and hears their prayer, 24, 25.

AND there went <sup>a</sup> a man of the house of Levi, and took to wife a daughter of Levi.

2 And the woman conceived, and bare a son: and <sup>b</sup> when she saw him that he was a goodly child, she hid him three months.

3 And when she could no longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch, and put the child therein: and she laid it in the flags by the river's brink.

4 <sup>c</sup> And his sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him.

5 And the <sup>d</sup> daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side; and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it.

Verse 1. There went a man] Amram, son of Kohath, son of Levi, chap. vi. 16-20. A daughter of Levi, Jochbed, sister to Kohath, and consequently both the wife and aunt of her husband, Amram, chap. vi. 20; Numb. xxvi. 59. Such marriages were at this time lawful, though they were afterwards forbidden, Lev. xviii. 12. But it is possible that daughter of Levi means no more than a descendant of that family, and that probably Amram and Jochbed were only cousin Germans. [This latter supposition is undoubtedly the correct one.] As a new law was to be given and a new priesthood formed, God chose a religious family out of which the lawgiver and the high-priest were both to spring.

Verse 2. Bare a son] This certainly was not her first child, for Aaron was fourscore and three years old when Moses was but fourscore, see chap. vii. 7; and there was a sister, probably Miriam, who was older than either; see below, ver. 4, and see Numb. xxvi. 59. Miriam and Aaron had no doubt been both born before the decree was passed for the destruction of the Hebrew male children, mentioned in the preceding chapter.

Goodly child] The text simply says that he was good, which signifies that he was not only a perfect, well-formed child, but that he was very beautiful; hence the Septuagint translate the place, Seeing him to be beautiful, which St. Stephen interprets, He was comely to God, or divinely beautiful. This very circumstance was wisely ordained by the kind providence of God to be one means of his preservation. Scarcely any thing interests the heart more than the sight of a lovely babe in distress. His beauty would induce even his parents to double their exertions to save him, and was probably the sole motive which led the Egyptian princess to take such particular care of him, and to educate him as her own son, which in all likelihood she would not have done had he been only an ordinary child.

Verse 3. An ark of bulrushes] A small boat or basket made of the Egyptian reed called papyrus, so famous in all antiquity. This plant grows on the banks of the Nile, and in marshy grounds; the stalk rises to the height of six or seven cubits above the water, is triangular, and terminates in a crown of small filaments resembling hair, which the ancients used to compare to a thyrus. This reed was of the greatest use to the inhabitants of Egypt, the pith contained in the stalk serving them for food, and the woody part to build vessels with; which vessels frequently appear on engraved stones and other monuments of Egyptian antiquity. For this purpose they made it up like rushes into bundles, and by tying them together gave their vessels the necessary figure and solidity.

She laid it in the flags] Not willing to trust it in the stream for fear of a disaster, and probably choosing the place to which the Egyptian princess was accustomed to come for the purposes specified in the note on the following verse.

Verse 5. And the daughter of Pharaoh] Josephus calls her Thermuthis, and says that "the ark was borne along by the current, and that she sent one that could swim after it; that she was struck with the figure and uncommon beauty of the child; that she inquired for a nurse, but that he having refused the prebends of several, and his sister proposing to bring a Hebrew nurse, his own mother was procured." But all this is in Josephus's manner, as well as the long circumstantial dream that he gives to Amram concerning the future

6 And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and, behold, the babe wept. And she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children.

7 Then said his sister to Pharaoh's daughter, Shall I go and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee?

8 And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, Go. And the maid went, and called the child's mother.

9 And Pharaoh's daughter said unto her, Take this child away, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages. And the woman took the child, and nursed it.

10 And the child grew, and she brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter, and he became <sup>e</sup> her son. And greatness of Moses, which cannot be considered in any other light than that of a fable, and not even a cunningly devised one.

To wash herself at the river] Whether the daughter of Pharaoh went to bathe in the river through motives of pleasure, health, or religion, or whether she bathed at all, the text does not specify. It is merely stated by the sacred writer that she went down to the river to wash; for the word herself is not in the original. Mr. Harmer, Observat., vol. iii., p. 529, is of opinion that the time referred to above was that in which the Nile begins to rise; and as the dancing girls in Egypt are accustomed now to plunge themselves into the river at its rising, by which act they testify their gratitude for the inestimable blessing of its inundations, so it might have been formerly; and that Pharaoh's daughter was now coming down to the river on a similar account. I see no likelihood in all this. If she washed herself at all, it might have been a religious ablution, and yet extended no farther than to the hands and face; for the word rachats, to wash, is repeatedly used in the Pentateuch to signify religious ablutions of different kinds. I believe there was no bathing in the case, but simply what the text states, washing, not of her person but of her clothes, which was an employment that even kings' daughters did not think beneath them in those primitive times. [The word rachats is never used to signify the washing of clothes.]

In the text of Moses the Egyptian princess, accompanied by her maids, comes down to the river, not to bathe herself, for this is not intimated, but merely to wash; at the time in which the ark is perceived we may suppose that she and her companions had finished their task, and were amusing themselves walking along by the river's side, when they suddenly and unexpectedly discovered Moses adrift on the flood.

Verse 6. She had compassion on him] The sight of a beautiful babe in distress could not fail to make the impression here mentioned; see on ver. 2. It has already been conjectured that the cruel edict of the Egyptian king did not continue long in force; see chap. i. 22. And it will not appear unreasonable to suppose that the circumstance related here might have brought about its abolition. The daughter of Pharaoh, struck with the distressed state of the Hebrew children from what she had seen in the case of Moses, would probably implore her father to abolish this sanguinary edict.

Verse 7. Shall I go and call—a nurse] Had not the different circumstances marked here been placed under the superintendence of an especial providence, there is no human probability that they could have had such a happy issue. The parents had done every thing to save their child that piety, affection, and prudence could dictate, and having done so, they left the event to God. Because of the king's commandment they were obliged to make use of the most prudent caution to save the child's life; and their faith in God enabled them to risk their own safety, for they were not afraid of the king's commandment—they feared God, and they had no other fear.

Verse 10. And he became her son.] From this time of his being brought home by his nurse his education commenced, and he was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, Acts vii. 22, who in the knowledge of nature probably exceeded all the nations then on the face of the earth.

she called his name * Moses : and she said, Because I drew him out of the water.

11 And it came to pass in those days, <sup>b</sup> when Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their <sup>c</sup> burdens : and he spied an Egyptian smiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren.

12 And he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he <sup>d</sup> slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand.

13 And <sup>e</sup> when he went out the second day, behold, two men of the Hebrews strove together : and he said to him that did the wrong, Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow ?

14 And he said, ' Who made thee <sup>f</sup> a prince and a judge over us ? intendest thou to kill me, as thou killest the Egyptian ? And Moses feared, and said, Surely this thing is known.

15 Now when Pharaoh heard this thing, he sought to slay Moses. But <sup>h</sup> Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of Midian : and he sat down by <sup>i</sup> a well.

16 <sup>j</sup> Now <sup>k</sup> the priest of Midian had seven daughters : and <sup>l</sup> they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their father's flocks.

And she called his name] Mashah signifies to draw out, and mosheh is the person drawn out; the word is used in the same sense Ps. xviii. 17, and 2 Sam. xxii. 17. What name he had from his parents we know not; but whatever it might be, it was ever after lost in the name given to him by the princess of Egypt. [Though there is a strong resemblance in sound between the name Moses and the Hebrew root quoted by Dr. Clarke, there is good reason for the conjecture that the name had an Egyptian origin.]

Verse 11. When Moses was grown.] Being full forty years of age, as St. Stephen says, Acts vii. 23, it came into his heart to visit his brethren, i.e. he was excited to it by a divine inspiration; and seeing one of them suffer wrong, by an Egyptian smiting him, probably one of the task-masters, he avenged him and smote—slew, the Egyptian, supposing that God who had given him commission, had given also his brethren to understand that they were to be delivered by his hand; see Acts vii. 23-25. Probably the Egyptian killed the Hebrew, and therefore on the Noahic precept Moses was justified in killing him; and he was authorized so to do by the commission which he had received from God, as all succeeding events amply prove. Previously to the mission of Moses to deliver the Israelites, Josephus says, "The Æthiopians having made an irruption into Egypt, and subdued a great part of it, a divine oracle advised them to employ Moses the Hebrew. On this the king of Egypt made him general of the Egyptian forces; with these he attacked the Æthiopians, defeated and drove them back into their own land, and forced them to take refuge in the city of Saba, where he besieged them. Tharbis, daughter of the Æthiopian king, seeing him, fell desperately in love with him, and promised to give up the city to him on condition that he would take her to wife, to which Moses agreed, and the city was put into the hands of the Egyptians."—Jos. Ant. lib. ii., chap. 9. St. Stephen probably alluded to something of this kind when he said Moses was mighty in deeds as well as words.

Verse 13. Two men of the Hebrews strove together.] How strange that in the very place where they were suffering a heavy persecution because they were Hebrews, the very persons themselves who suffered it should be found persecuting each other! It has been often seen that in those times in which the ungodly oppressed the church of Christ, its own members have been separated from each other by disputes concerning comparatively unessential points of doctrine and discipline, in consequence of which both they and the truth have become an easy prey to those whose desire was to waste the heritage of the Lord.

Verse 14. And Moses feared.] He saw that the Israelites were not as yet prepared to leave their bondage; and that, though God had called him to be their leader, yet his providence had not yet sufficiently opened the way; and had he staid in Egypt he must have endangered his life. Providence therefore dictated an escape for the present to the land of Midian.

Verse 15. Pharaoh—sought to slay Moses. But Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh.] How can this be reconciled with Heb. xi. 27: By faith he (Moses) forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king? Very easily. The apostle speaks not of this forsaking of Egypt, but of his and the Israelites' final departure from it, and of the bold and courageous manner in which Moses treated Pharaoh and the Egyptians, disregarding his threatenings and the multitudes of them that pursued after the people whom, in the name and strength of God, he led in the face of their enemies out of Egypt.

Dwelt in the land of Midian.] A country generally supposed to have been in Arabia Petraea, on the eastern coast of the Red Sea, not far from Mount Sinai. This place is still called by the Arabs the land of Midian or the land of Jethro.

Verse 16. The priest of Midian.] Or prince, or both; for the original cohen has both meanings.

Verse 17. The shepherds—drove them.] The verb being in the masculine gender, seems to imply that the shepherds drove away the flocks of Reuel's daughters, and not the daughters themselves. The fact seems to be that, as the daughters of Reuel filled the troughs and brought their flocks to drink, the shepherds drove those away, and, profiting by the young women's labour, watered their own cattle. Moses resisted this insolence and assisted them to water their flocks, in consequence of which they were enabled to return much sooner than they were wont to do, var. 18.

Verse 18. Reuel, their father.] The person in question appears to have several names. Here he is called Reuel; in Numb. x. 29, Raguel; in Exod. iii. 1, Jethro; in Judg. iv. 11, Hobab; and in Judg. i. 16 he is called Keniz, which in chap. iv. we translate Kenite. Some suppose that Reuel was father to Hobab, who was also called Jethro.

Verse 20. That he may eat bread.] Bread, among the Hebrews, was used to signify all kinds of food commonly used for the support of man's life.

Verse 21. Zipporah his daughter.] It appears that Moses obtained Zipporah something in the same way that Jacob obtained Rachel; namely, for the performance of certain services, probably keeping of sheep.

Verse 22. Called his name Gershom.] Literally, a stranger; the reason of which Moses immediately adds, for I have been an ALIEN in a strange land.

The Vulgate, the Septuagint as it stands in the Complutensian Polyglot and in several MSS., the Syriac, the Coptic, and the Arabic, add the following words to this verse: And the name of the second he called Eliezer, for the God of my father has been my help, and delivered me from the hand of Pharaoh. These words are found in chap. xviii. 4, but they are certainly necessary here, for it is very likely that these two sons were born within a short space of each other; for in chap. iv. 20 it is said, Moses took his wife and his sons, by which it is plain that he had both Gershom and Eliezer at that time. Notwithstanding the authority of the above name 'Gérshom': for he said, I have been 'a stranger in a strange land.

23 And it came to pass 'in process of time, that the king of Egypt died: and the children of Israel 'sighed by reason of the bondage, and they cried, and 'their cry came up unto God by reason of the bondage.

Versions, the clause is found in no copy printed or MS. of the Hebrew text.

Verse 23. In process of time—the king of Egypt died. According to St. Stephen (Acts vii. 30 compared with Exod. vii. 7) the death of the Egyptian king happened about forty years after the escape of Moses to Midian. The words which we translate, And it came to pass in process of time, signify, And it was in many days from these that the king, &c.

Some suppose that Moses wrote the book of Job during the time he sojourned in Midian, and also the book of Genesis.

Sighed by reason of the bondage. For the nature of their bondage, see on chap. i. 14.

Verse 24. God remembered his covenant. God's covenant is God's engagement; he had promised to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give their posterity a land flowing with milk and honey, &c. They are now under the most oppressive bondage, and this was the most proper time for God to show them his mercy and power in fulfilling his promise. This is all that is meant by God's remembering his covenant, for it was now that he began to give it its effect.

Verse 25. And God had respect unto them. God knew them, i.e. he approved of them, and therefore it is said that their cry came up before God, and he heard their groaning. The word yada, to know, in the Hebrew Bible, is frequently used in the sense of approving; and because God knew—had respect for and approved of them, therefore he was determined to deliver them. For Elohim, GOD, in the last clause of this verse, Houbigant reads aleyhem, UPON THEM, which is countenanced by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Chaldee, Coptic, and Arabic, and appears to have been the original reading. The difference in the original consists in the interchange of two letters. Our translators insert unto them, in order to make up that sense which this various reading gives without trouble.

The farther we proceed in the sacred writings, the more the history both of the grace and providence of God opens to our view. He ever cares for his creatures, and is mindful of his promise. The very means made use of to destroy his work are, in his hands, the instruments of its accomplishment. Pharaoh orders the male children of the Hebrews to be thrown into the river; Moses, who was thus exposed, is found by his daughter, brought up as her own son, and from his Egyptian education becomes much better qualified for the great work which God had called him; and his being obliged to leave Egypt was undoubtedly a powerful means to wean his heart from a land in which he had at his command all the advantages and luxuries of life. His sojourning also in a strange land, where he had to earn his bread by a very painful employment, fitted him for the perious journey he was obliged to take in the wilderness, and enabled him to bear the better the privations to which he was in consequence exposed.

The bondage of the Israelites was also wisely permitted, that they might with less reluctance leave a country where they had suffered the greatest oppression and indignities. Had they not suffered severely previously to their departure, there is much reason to believe that no inducements could have been sufficient to have prevailed on them to leave it. And yet their leaving it was of infinite consequence, in the order both of grace and providence, as it was indispensably necessary that they should be a people separated from all the rest of the world, that they might see the promises of God fulfilled under their own eyes, and thus have the fullest persuasion that their law was divine, their prophets inspired by the Most High, and that the Messiah came according to the prophecies before delivered concerning him.

In the days of primitive simplicity, and in this respect the best days, the daughters of persons in the highest ranks in life were employed in the most laborious offices. Kings' daughters performed the office of the lauress to their own families; and the daughters of princes tended and watered the flocks. We cannot be too pointed in calling the attention of modern delicate females, who are not only above serving their own parents and family, but even their own selves: the consequence of which is, they have neither vigour nor health; their growth, for want of healthy exercise, is generally cramped; their natural powers are prematurely developed, and their whole course is rather an apology for living, than a state of effective life. Parents, who wish to fulfil the intention of God and nature, will doubtless see it their duty to bring up their children on a different plan. A worse than the present can scarcely be found out.

Afflictions, under the direction of God's providence and the influences of his grace, are often the means of leading men to pray to and acknowledge God, who in the time of their prosperity hardened their necks from his fear. When the Israelites were sorely oppressed, they began to pray. If the cry of oppression had not been among them, probably the cry for mercy had not been heard. Though afflictions, considered in themselves, can neither atone for sin nor improve the moral state of the soul, yet God often uses them as means to bring sinners to himself, and to quicken those who, having already escaped the pollutions of the world, were falling again under the influence of an earthly mind. Of many millions besides David it may truly be said, Before they were afflicted they went astray.

CHAPTER III.

Moses keeping the flock of Jethro at Mount Horeb, the angel of the Lord appears to him in a burning bush, 1, 2. Astonished at the sight, he turns aside to examine it, 3, when God speaks to him out of the fire, and declares himself to be the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, 4-6; announces his purpose of delivering the Israelites from their oppression, and of bringing them into the promised land, 7-9; commissions him to go to Pharaoh, and to be the leader of the children of Israel from Egypt, 10. Moses excuses himself, 11; and God to encourage him, promises him his protection, 12. Moses doubts whether the Israelites will credit him, 13, and God reveals to him his NAME, and informs him what he is to say to the people, 14-17, and instructs him and the elders of Israel to apply unto Pharaoh for permission to go three days' journey into the wilderness, to sacrifice unto the Lord, 18; foretells the obstinacy of the Egyptian king, and the miracles which he himself should work in the sight of the Egyptians, 19, 20; and promises that, on the departure of the Israelites, the Egyptians should be induced to furnish them with all necessaries for their journey, 21, 22.

NOW Moses kept the flock of Jethro his father in law, * the priest of Midian : and he led the flock to the backside of the desert, and came to <sup>b</sup> the mountain of God, even to Horeb.

2 And * the angel of the LORD appeared unto him in a flame of fire, out of the midst of a bush : and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed.

3 And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this <sup>d</sup> great sight, why the bush is not burnt.

Verse 1. Jethro his father in law] Learned men are not agreed on the signification of the word chethen, which we translate father-in-law, and which in Gen. xix. 14 we translate son-in-law. It seems to be a general term for a relative by marriage, and the connexion only in which it stands can determine its precise meaning. It is very possible that Reuel was now dead, it being forty years since Moses came to Midian; that Jethro was his son, and had succeeded him in his office of prince and priest of Midian; that Zipporah was the sister of Jethro; and that consequently the word should be translated brother-in-law in this place: as we learn from Gen. xxiv. 9, Deut. vii. 3, Josh. xxiii. 12, and other places, that it simply signifies to contract affinity by marriage. If this conjecture be right, we may well suppose that, Reuel being dead, Moses was continued by his brother-in-law Jethro in the same employment he had under his father.

Mountain of God] Sometimes named Horeb, at other times Sinai. The mountain itself had two peaks; one was called Horeb, the other Sinai. Horeb was probably the primitive name of the mountain, which was afterwards called the mountain of God, because God appeared upon it to Moses; and Mount Sinai, from senah, a bush, because it was in a bush or bramble, in a flame of fire, that this appearance was made.

Verse 2. The angel of the Lord] Not a created angel certainly; for he is called Jehovah, ver. 4, &c., and has the most expressive attributes of the Godhead applied to him, ver. 14, &c. Yet he is an angel, in whom was the name of God, chap. xxxiii. 21; and in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, Col. ii. 9; and who in all these primitive times, was the Messenger of the covenant, Mal. iii. 1. And who was this but Jesus, the Leader, Redeemer, and Saviour of mankind?

A flame of fire, out of the midst of a bush] Fire was not only among the Hebrews but also among many other ancient nations, a very significant emblem of the Deity. God accompanied the Israelites in all their journeyings through the wilderness as a pillar of fire by night; and probably a fire or flame in the Holy of Holies, between the cherubim, was the general symbol of his presence; and traditions of these things, which must have been current in the East, have probably given birth, not only to the pretty general opinion that God appears in the likeness of fire, but to the whole of the Zoroastrian system of fire-worship. It has been reported of Zoroaster, or Zerdusht, that having retired to a mountain for the study of wisdom, and the benefit of solitude, the whole mountain was one day enveloped with flame, out of the midst of which he came without receiving any injury; on which he offered sacrifices to God, who, he was persuaded, had then appeared to him.

Moses wished to see God, but he could behold nothing but an indescribable glory; nothing like mortals, nothing like a human body, appeared at any time to his eye, or to those of the Israelites. "Ye saw no manner of similitude," said Moses, "on the day that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb out of the midst of the FIRE." Deut. iv. 15. But sometimes the divine power and justice were manifested by the indescribable, formless, impetuous, consuming flame; at other times he appeared by the water which he brought out of the flinty rock; and in the thick darkness on Horeb, when the fiery law proceeded from his right hand, then the earth quaked and the mountain trembled; and when his terrible eye looked out upon the Egyptians through the pillar of cloud and fire, their chariot-wheels were struck off, and confusion and dismay were spread through all the hosts of Pharaoh; Exod. xiv. 24, 25.

4 And when the LORD saw that he turned aside to see, God called * unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I.

5 And he said, Draw not nigh hither: 'put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.

6 Moreover he said, * I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face; for <sup>b</sup> he was afraid to look upon God.

Ver. 15. Ch. iv. 5. Mat. xxii. 32. Mark xii. 26. Luke xx. 37. Acts vii. 32.—<sup>b</sup> So 1 Kings xix. 13. Isa. vi. 1, 5. Neh. ix. 9. Ps. cvi. 44. Acts vii. 34.

And the bush was not consumed.] 1. An emblem of the state of Israel in its various distresses and persecutions: it was in the fire of adversity, but was not consumed. 2. An emblem also of the state of the church of God in the wilderness, in persecutions often, in the midst of its enemies, in the region of the shadow of death—yet not consumed. 3. An emblem also of the state of every follower of Christ cast down, but not forsaken; grievously tempted, but not destroyed; walking through the fire, but still unconsumed! Why are all those preserved in the midst of those things which have a natural tendency to destroy them? Because GOD IS IN THE MIST OF THEM; it was this that preserved the bush from destruction; and it was this that preserved the Israelites; and it is this, and this alone, that preserves the church, and holds the soul of every genuine believer in the spiritual life. He in whose heart Christ dwells not by faith, will soon be consumed by the world, the flesh, and the devil.

Verse 5. Put off thy shoes] It is likely that from this circumstance all the eastern nations have agreed to perform all the acts of their religious worship barefooted. All the Mohammedans, Brahmans, and Parsees, do so still. The ancient Greeks and the Jews did the same. One of the maxims of Pythagoras was, Offer sacrifice and worship with your shoes off. It is probable that nealm, in the text, signifies sandals, which was the same as the Roman solea, a sole alone, strapped about the foot. As this sole must let in dust, gravel, and sand about the foot in travelling, and render it very uneasy, hence the custom of frequently washing the feet in those countries where these sandals were worn. Pulling off the shoes was, therefore, an emblem of laying aside the pollutions contracted by walking in the way of sin. Let those who name the Lord Jesus Christ depart from iniquity. In our western countries reverence is expressed by pulling off the hat; but how much more significant is the eastern custom!

The place whereon thou standest is holy ground.] It was now particularly sanctified by the divine presence; but if we may credit Josephus, a general opinion had prevailed that God dwelt on that mountain; and hence the shepherds, considering it as sacred ground, did not dare to feed their flocks there. Moses, however, finding the soil to be rich and the pasturage good, boldly drove his flock thither to feed on it.

Verse 6. I am the God of thy father] Though the word abi, father, is here used in the singular, St. Stephen, quoting this place, Acts vii. 32, uses the plural, The God of thy FATHERS; and that this is the meaning the following words prove: The God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. These were the fathers of Moses in a direct line. This reading is confirmed by the Samaritan and by the Coptic. ABRAHAM was the father of the Ishmaelites, and with him was the covenant first made. ISAAC was the father of the Edomites as well as the Israelites; and with him was the covenant renewed. JACOB was the father of the twelve patriarchs, who were founders of the Jewish nation, and to him were the promises particularly confirmed. Hence we see that the Arabs and Turks in general, who are descendants of Ishmael; the Edomites, now absorbed among the Jews, who are the descendants of Esau; and the Jewish people, wheresoever scattered, who are the descendants of Jacob, are all heirs of the promises included in this primitive covenant; and their gathering in with the fulness of the Gentiles may be confidently expected.

And Moses hid his face] For similar acts, see the pas-

7 And the LORD said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry by reason of their task-masters; for I know their sorrows;

8 And I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land unto a good land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey; unto the place of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites.

9 Now therefore, behold, the cry of the children of Israel is come unto me: and I have also seen the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them.

10 Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt.

sages referred to in the margin. He was afraid to look—he was overawed by God's presence, and dazzled with the splendour of the appearance.

Verse 7. I have surely seen] Seeing, I have seen—I have not only seen the afflictions of this people because I am omniscient, but I have considered their sorrows, and my eye affects my heart.

Verse 8. And I am come down to deliver them] This is the very purpose for which I am now come down upon this mountain, and for which I manifest myself to thee.

Large—land] Canaan, when compared with the small tract of Goshen, in which they were now situated, and where we learn from chap. i. 7, they were straitened for room, might be well called a large land.

A land flowing with milk and honey] Excellent for pasturage, because abounding in the most wholesome herbage and flowers; and from the latter an abundance of wild honey was collected by the bees. Though cultivation is now almost entirely neglected in this land, because of the badness of the government and the scantiness of the inhabitants, yet it is still good for pasturage, and yields an abundance of honey.

Verse 11. Who am I—that I should bring] He was so satisfied that this was beyond his power, and all the means that he possessed, that he is astonished that even God himself should appoint him to this work! Such indeed was the bondage of the children of Israel, and the power of the people by whom they were enslaved, that had not their deliverance come through supernatural means, their escape had been utterly impossible.

Verse 12. Certainly I will be with thee] This great event shall not be left to thy wisdom and to thy power; my counsel shall direct thee, and my power shall bring all these mighty things to pass.

And this shall be a token] Literally, And this to thee for a sign, i.e. this miraculous manifestation of the burning bush shall be a proof that I have sent thee; or, My being with thee to encourage thy heart, strengthen thy hands, and enable thee to work miracles, shall be to thyself and to others the evidence of thy divine mission.

Ye shall serve God upon this mountain.] This was not the sign, but God shows him that in their return from Egypt they should take this mountain in their way, and should worship him in this place. There may be a prophetic allusion here to the giving of the law on Mount Sinai. As Moses received his commands here, so likewise should the Israelites receive theirs in the same place. After all, the Divine Being seems to testify a partial predilection for this mountain, for reasons that are not expressed.

Verse 13. They shall say—What is his name?] It is not likely that the Israelites had much knowledge of God or of his ways at the time to which the sacred text refers; it is certain they had no written word. The book of Genesis, if even written (for some suppose it had been composed by Moses during his residence in Midian), had not yet been communicated to the people: and being so long without any revelation, and perhaps without even the form of divine worship, their minds being degraded by the state of bondage in which they had been so long held, and seeing and hearing little in religion but the superstitions of those among whom they sojourned, they could have no distinct notion of the Divine Being. Moses himself might have been in doubt at first on this subject, and he seems to have been greatly on his guard against illusion; hence he asks a variety of questions, and endeavours, by all prudent means, to assure himself of the truth and certainty of the present appearance and commission. He well knew the power of the Egyptian magicians, and he could not tell from these first views whether there might not have been some delusion in this case. God therefore gives him the fullest proof, not only for the satisfaction of the people to whom he was to be sent, but for his own full conviction, that it was the supreme God who now spoke to him.

Verse 14. I AM THAT I AM] EHEYEH asher EHEYEH. These words have been variously understood. The Vulgate translates, I am who am. The Septuagint, I am he who exists. The Syriac, the Persic, and the Chaldee preserve the original words without any gloss. The Arabic paraphrases them, The Eternal, who passes not away. As the original words literally signify, I will be what I will be, some have supposed that God simply designed to inform Moses, that what he had been to his fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, he would be to him and the Israelites; and that he would perform the promises he had made to his fathers, by giving their descendants the promised land. It is difficult to put a meaning on the words; they seem intended to point out the eternity, and self-existence of God.

Verse 15. This is my name forever] The name here referred to is that which immediately precedes, Yehovah Elohim, which we translate the LORD GOD, the name by which God had been known from the creation of the world (see Gen. ii. 4), and the name by which he is known among the same people to the present day. Even the heathens knew this name of the true God; and hence out of our Yehovah they formed their Jao, Jove, and Jove; so that the word has been literally fulfilled, This is my memorial unto all generations. As to be self-existent and eternal must be attributes of God for ever, does it not follow that the leolam, for ever, in the text, signifies eternity? "This is my name to eternity—and my memorial," ledor dor, "to all succeeding generations." While human generations continue he shall be called the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; but when time shall be no more, he shall be Jehovah Elohim. Hence the first expression refers to his eternal existence, the latter to the discovery he should make of himself as long as time should last.

Verse 16. Elders of Israel] Though it is not likely the Hebrews were permitted to have any regular government at the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, appeared unto me, saying, 'I have surely visited you, and seen that which is done to you in Egypt:

17 And I have said, 'I will bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt unto the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, unto a land flowing with milk and honey.

18 And 'they shall hearken to thy voice: and 'thou shalt come, thou and the elders of Israel, unto the king of Egypt, and ye shall say unto him, The LORD God of the Hebrews hath 'met with us: and now let us go, we beseech thee, three days' journey into the wilderness, that we may sacrifice to the LORD our God.

this time, yet there can be no doubt of their having such a government in the time of Joseph, and for some considerable time after; the elders of each tribe forming a kind of court of magistrates, by which all actions were tried, and legal decisions made, in the Israelitish community.

I have surely visited you] An exact fulfilment of the prediction of Joseph, Gen. i. 24, God will surely visit you, and in the same words too.

Verse 18. They shall hearken to thy voice] This assurance was necessary to encourage him in an enterprise so dangerous and important.

Three days' journey into the wilderness] Evidently intending Mount Sinai, which is reputed to be about three days' journey, the shortest way, from the land of Goshen. In ancient times, distances were computed by the time required to pass over them. Thus, instead of miles, furlongs, &c., it was said, the distance from one place to another was so many days', so many hours' journey; and it continues the same in all countries where there are no regular roads or highways.

Verse 19. I am sure that the king of Egypt will not let you go, no, not by a mighty hand.] When the facts detailed in this history have been considered in connexion with the assertion as it stands in our Bibles, the most palpable contradiction has appeared. That the king of Egypt did let them go, and that by a mighty hand, the book itself amply declares. We should therefore seek for another meaning of the original word. It generally means and not, but has sometimes the meaning of if not, unless, except, &c.; and in Becke's Bible, 1549, it is thus translated: I am sure that the king of Egypt wyl not let you go, EXCEPT wylth a myghty hand. This import of the negative particle was perfectly understood by the Vulgate, where it is translated nisi, unless; the rendering of the Septuagint and also the Coptic is of the same import. The meaning therefore is very plain: The king of Egypt, who now profits much by your servitude, will not let you go till he sees my hand stretched out, and he and his nation be smitten with ten plagues. Hence God immediately adds, ver. 20: I will stretch out my hand and smite Egypt with all my wonders—and after that, he will let you go.

Verse 22. Every woman shall borrow] This is certainly not a very correct translation; the original word shaal signifies simply to ask, request, demand, require, inquire, &c.; but it does not signify to borrow in the proper sense of that word, though in a very few places of scripture it is thus used. In this and the parallel place, chap. xii. 85, the word signifies to ask or demand, and not to borrow, which is a gross mistake into which scarcely any of the Versions, ancient or modern, have fallen, except our own. God commanded the Israelites to ask or demand a certain recompense for their past services, and he inclined the hearts of the Egyptians to give liberally; and this, far from being a matter of oppression, wrong, or even charity, was no more than a very partial recompense for the long and painful services which we may say six hundred thousand Israelites had rendered to Egypt, during a considerable number of years. And there can be no doubt that while their heaviest oppression lasted, they were permitted to accumulate no kind of property, as all their gains went to their oppressors.

19 And I am sure that the king of Egypt 'will not let you go, 'no, not by a mighty hand.

20 And I will 'stretch out my hand, and smite Egypt with 'all my wonders which I will do in the midst thereof: and 'after that he will let you go.

21 And 'I will give this people favour in the sight of the Egyptians: and it shall come to pass, that, when ye go, ye shall not go empty.

22 'But every woman shall borrow of her neighbour, and of her that sojourneth in her house, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment: and ye shall put them upon your sons, and upon your daughters; and 'ye shall spoil 'the Egyptians.

Our exceptionable translation of the original has given some countenance to the desperate cause of infidelity; its abettors have exultingly said: "Moses represents the just God as ordering the Israelites to borrow the goods of the Egyptians under the pretence of returning them, whereas he intended that they should march off 'with the booty.'" Let these men know that there was no borrowing in the case; and that if accounts were fairly balanced, Egypt would be found still in considerable arrears to Israel. Let it also be considered that the Egyptians had never any right to the services of the Hebrews. Egypt owed its policy, its opulence, and even its political existence, to the Israelites. What had Joseph for his important services? NOTHING! All his services were gratuitous; and being animated with a better hope than any earthly possession could inspire, he desired that even his bones should be carried up out of Egypt. Jacob and his family, it is true, were permitted to sojourn in Goshen, but they were not provided for in that place; for they brought their cattle, their goods, and all that they had, into Egypt, Gen. xli. 1, 6; so that they had nothing but the bare land to feed on; and had built treasure-cities or fortresses, we know not how many; and two whole cities, Pithom and Raamses, besides; and for all these services they had no compensation whatever, but were besides cruelly abused, and obliged to witness, as the sum of their calamities, the daily murder of their male infants.

Jewels of silver, &c.] The word keley signifies vessels, instruments, weapons, &c., and may be very well translated by our English term, articles or goods. The Israelites got both gold and silver, probably both in coin and in plate of different kinds; and such raiment as was necessary for the journey which they were about to undertake.

Ye shall spoil the Egyptians.] The verb natsal signifies, not only to spoil, snatch away, but also to get away, to escape, to deliver, to regain or recover. SPOIL signifies what is taken by rapine or violence; but this cannot be the meaning of the original word here, as the Israelites only asked, and the Egyptians, without fear, terror, or constraint, freely gave. It is worthy of remark that the original word is used, 1 Sam. xxx. 22, to signify the recovery of property that had been taken away by violence. In this sense we should understand the word here. The Israelites recovered a part of their property—their wages, of which they had been most unjustly deprived by the Egyptians.

In this chapter we have much curious and important information; but what is most interesting is the name by which God was pleased to make himself known to Moses and to the Israelites, a name by which the Supreme Being was afterwards known among the wisest inhabitants of the earth. HE who IS and who WILL BE what he IS. This is a proper characteristic of the Divine Being, who is, properly speaking, the only BEING, because he is independent and eternal; whereas all other beings, in whatsoever forms they may appear, are derived, finite, changeable, and liable to destruction, decay, and even to annihilation. When God, therefore, announced himself to Moses by this name, he proclaimed his own eternity and immateriality; and the very name itself precluded the possibility of idolatry, because it was impossible for the mind, in considering it, to represent the Divine Being in any assignable shape ; for who could represent BEING or Existence by any limited form ? And who can have any idea of a form that is unlimited ? Thus, then, we find that the first discovery which God made of himself was intended to show the people the simplicity and spirituality of his nature ; that while they considered him as BEING, and the Cause of all BEING, they might be preserved from all idolatry for ever. The very name itself is a proof of a divine revelation ; for it is not possible that such an idea could have ever entered into the mind of man, unless it had been communicated from above. It could not have been produced by reasoning, for there were no premises on which it could be built, nor any analogies by which it could have been formed. We can as easily comprehend eternity as we can being, simply considered in and of itself, when nothing of assignable forms, colours, or qualities existed, besides its infinite and illimitable self.

To this divine discovery the ancient Greeks owed the inscription which they placed above the door of the temple of Apollo at Delphi : the whole of the inscription consisted in the simple monosyllable EI, THOU ART. On this inscription Plutarch, one of the most intelligent of all the Gentile philosophers, made an express treatise, having received the true interpretation in his travels in Egypt, whither he had gone for the purpose of inquiring into their ancient learning, and where he had doubtless seen these words of God to Moses in the Greek Version of the Septuagint, which had been current among the Egyptians (for whose sake it was first made) about four hundred years previously to the death of Plutarch. What beautiful things have the ancient Greek philosophers stolen from the testimonies of God to enrich their own works, without any kind of acknowledgment ! And, strange perversity of man ! these are the very things which we so highly applaud in the heathen copies, while we neglect or pass them by in the divine originals !

CHAPTER IV.

Moses continuing to express his fear that the Israelites would not credit his divine mission, 1, God, to strengthen his faith, and to assure him that his countrymen would believe him, changed his rod into a serpent, and the serpent into a rod, 2-5 ; made his hand leprous, and afterwards restored it, 6, 7 ; intimating that he had now endued him with power to work such miracles, and that the Israelites would believe, 8 ; and further assures him that he should have power to turn the water into blood, 9. Moses excuses himself on the ground of his not being eloquent, 10, and God reproves him for his unbelief, and promises to give him supernatural assistance, 11, 12. Moses expressing his utter unwillingness to go on any account, God is angry, and then promises to give him his brother Aaron to be his spokesman, 13-16, and appoints his rod to be the instrument of working miracles, 17. Moses returns to his relative Jethro, and requests liberty to visit his brethren in Egypt, and is permitted, 18. God appears to him in Midian, and assures him that the Egyptians who sought his life were dead, 19. Moses, with his wife and children, set out on their journey to Egypt, 20. God instructs him what he shall say to Pharaoh, 21-23. He is in danger of losing his life, because he had not circumcised his son, 24. Zipporah immediately circumcising the child, Moses escapes unhurt, 25, 26. Aaron is commanded to go and meet his brother Moses ; he goes and meets him at Horeb, 27. Moses informs him of the commission he had received from God, 28. They both go to their brethren, deliver their message, and work miracles, 29, 30. The people believe and adore God, 31.

AND Moses answered and said, But, behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice : for they will say, The LORD hath not appeared unto thee.

2 And the LORD said unto him, What is that in thine hand ? And he said, A rod.

3 And he said, Cast it on the ground. And he cast it on the ground, and it became a serpent ; and Moses fled from before it.

4 And the LORD said unto Moses, Put forth thine hand, and take it by the tail. And he put forth his hand, and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand :

5 That they may believe that the LORD God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee.

6 And the LORD said furthermore unto him, Put now thine hand into thy bosom. And he put his hand into his bosom : and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous as snow.

7 And he said, Put thine hand into thy bosom

Verse 1. They will not believe me] As if he had said, Unless I be enabled to work miracles, and give them proofs by extraordinary works as well as by words, they will not believe that thou hast sent me.

Verse 2. A rod.] Matteh, a staff, probably his shepherd's crook ; see Lev. xxvii. 32. As it was made the instrument of working many miracles, it was afterwards called the rod of God ; see ver. 20.

Verse 3. A serpent] Of what sort we know not, as the word nachash is a general name for serpents, and also means several other things, see Gen. iii. 1 ; but it was either of a kind that he had not seen before, or one that he knew to be dangerous ; for it is said, he fled from before it. Some suppose the staff was changed into a crocodile ; see on chap. vii. 7.

Verse 4. He put forth his hand, and caught it] Considering the light in which Moses had viewed this serpent, it required considerable faith to induce him thus implicitly to obey the command of God ; but he obeyed, and the noxious serpent became instantly the miraculous rod in his hand ! Implicit faith and obedience conquer all difficulties ; and he who believes in God, and obeys him in all things, has really nothing to fear.

Verse 5. That they may believe] This is an example of what is called an imperfect or unfinished speech, several of which occur in the sacred writings. It may be thus supplied : Do this before them, that they may believe that the Lord—hath appeared unto thee.

Verse 6. His hand was leprous as snow.] The leprosy, at least among the Jews, was a most inveterate and contagious disorder, and deemed by them incurable. Among the heathens it was considered as inflicted by their gods, and it was supposed that they alone could remove it. It is certain that a similar belief prevailed among the Israelites ; hence, when the king of Syria sent his general, Naaman, to the king of Israel to cure him of his leprosy, he rent his clothes, saying, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy ? 2 Kings v. 7. This appears, therefore, to be the reason why God chose this sign, as the instantaneous infliction and removal of this disease were demonstrations which all would allow of the sovereign power of God. We need, therefore, again. And he put his hand into his bosom again ; and plucked it out of his bosom, and, behold, <sup>a</sup> it was turned again as his other flesh.

8 And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that they will believe the voice of the latter sign.

9 And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe also these two signs, neither hearken unto thy voice, that thou shalt take water of the river, and pour it upon the dry land : and <sup>b</sup> the water which thou takest out of the river <sup>c</sup> shall become blood upon the dry land.

10 And Moses said unto the LORD, O my Lord, I am not <sup>d</sup> eloquent, neither <sup>e</sup> heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant : but <sup>f</sup> I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue.

11 And the LORD said unto him, <sup>g</sup> Who hath made man's mouth ? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind ? have not I the LORD ?

12 Now therefore go, and I will be <sup>h</sup> with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say.

seek for no other reasons for this miracle : the sole reason is sufficiently obvious.

Verse 8. If they will not believe—the voice of the first sign, &c.] Probably intimating that some would be more difficult to be persuaded than others : some would yield to the evidence of the first miracle ; others would hesitate till they had seen the second ; and others would not believe till they had seen the water of the Nile turned into blood, when poured upon the dry land ; ver. 9.

Verse 10. I am not eloquent] I am not a man of words ; a periphrasis common in the scriptures. So Job xi. 2, a man of lips, signifies one that is talkative. Psalm cxi. 12, a man of tongue signifies a prattler. But how could it be said that Moses was not eloquent, when St. Stephen asserts, Acts vii. 22, that he was mighty in words as well as in deeds ? There are three ways of solving this difficulty : 1. Moses might have had some natural infirmity, of a late standing, which at that time rendered it impossible for him to speak readily, and which he afterwards overcame ; so that though he was not then a man of words, yet he might afterwards have been mighty in words as well as in deeds. 2. It is possible he was not intimately acquainted with the Hebrew tongue, so as to speak clearly and distinctly in it. The first forty years of his life he had spent in Egypt, chiefly at court ; and though it is very probable there was an affinity between the two languages, yet they certainly were not the same. The last forty he had spent in Midian, and it is not likely that the pure Hebrew tongue prevailed there, though it is probable that a dialect of it was there spoken. 3. Though Moses was slow of speech, yet when acting as the messenger of God his word was with power, for at his command the plagues came and the plagues were stayed ; thus was he mighty in words as well as in deeds : and this is probably the meaning of St. Stephen.

By the expression neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant, he might possibly mean, that the natural inaptitude to speak readily, which he had felt, he continued to feel, even since God had begun to discover himself ; for though he had wrought several miracles for him, yet he had not healed this infirmity.

Verse 11. Who hath made man's mouth ? &c.] Cannot he who formed the mouth, the whole organs of speech, and hath given the gift of speech also, cannot he give utterance ? God can take away those gifts and restore them again. Do not provoke him : he who created the eye, the ear, and the mouth, hath also made the blind, the deaf, and the dumb.

Verse 13. Send—by the hand of him whom thou wilt send.] Many commentators, both ancient and modern, have thought that Moses prays here for the immediate mission of the Messiah ; as if he had said : " Lord, thou hast purposed to send this glorious person at some time or other, I beseech thee send him now, for who can be sufficient to deliver and 13 And he said, O my Lord, 'send, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou wilt send.

14 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Moses, and he said, Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother ? I know that he can speak well. And also, behold, <sup>k</sup> he cometh forth to meet thee ; and when he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart.

15 And <sup>l</sup> thou shalt speak unto him, and <sup>m</sup> put words in his mouth : and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and <sup>n</sup> will teach you what ye shall do.

16 And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people : and he shall be, even he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and <sup>o</sup> thou shalt be to him instead of God.

17 And thou shalt take <sup>p</sup> this rod in thine hand, wherewith thou shalt do signs.

18 And Moses went and returned to <sup>q</sup> Jethro his father in law, and said unto him, Let me go, I pray thee, and return unto my brethren which are in Egypt, and see whether they be yet alive. And Jethro said to Moses, Go in peace.

rule this people but himself alone ?" The Hebrew literally translated is, Send now (or, I beseech thee) by the hand thou wilt send ; which seems to intimate, Send a person more fit for the work than I am. It is right to find out the Messiah wherever he is mentioned in the Old Testament ; but to press scriptures into this service which have not an obvious tendency that way, is both improper and dangerous.

Verse 14. And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Moses] Surely this would not have been the case had he only in modesty, and from a deep sense of his own unworthiness, desired that the Messiah should be preferred before him.

I know that he can speak well.] I know that in speaking he will speak. That is, he is apt to talk, and has a ready utterance.

He cometh forth to meet thee.] He shall meet thee at my mount (ver. 27), shall rejoice in thy mission, and most heartily co-operate with thee in all things. A necessary assurance, to prevent Moses from suspecting that Aaron, who was his elder brother, would envy his superior call and office.

Verse 15. I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth.] Ye shall be both, in all things which I appoint you to do in this business, under the continual inspiration of the Most High.

Verse 16. He shall be thy spokesman.] Literally, He shall speak for thee (or in thy stead) to the people.

He shall be to thee instead of a mouth.] He shall convey every message to the people ; and thou shalt be to him instead of God—thou shalt deliver to him what I communicate to thee.

Verse 17. Thou shalt take this rod.] From the story of Moses's rod the heathens have invented the fables of the thyrsus of Bacchus, and the caduceus of Mercury. Any person acquainted with the birth and exploits of the poetic Bacchus and Mercury, will at once perceive them to be all borrowed from the life and acts of Moses, as recorded in the Pentateuch ; and it would be losing time to show the parallel, by quoting passages from the book of Exodus.

Verse 18. Let me go, I pray thee, and return unto my brethren.] Moses, having received his commission from God, and directions how to execute it, returned to his father-in-law, and asked permission to visit his family and brethren in Egypt, without giving him any intimation of the great errand on which he was going. His keeping this secret has been attributed to his singular modesty : but however true it might be that Moses was a truly humble and modest man, yet his prudence alone was sufficient to have induced him to observe silence on this subject ; for, if once imparted to the family of his father-in-law, the news might have reached Egypt before he could get thither, and a general alarm among the Egyptians would in all probability have been the consequence ; as fame would not fail to represent Moses as coming to stir up sedition and rebellion, and the whole nation would have been armed against them. It was therefore essentially necessary that the business should be kept secret.

Verse 19. In Midian] This was a new revelation, and appears to have taken place after Moses returned to his father-in-law previous to his departure for Egypt.

Verse 20. His wife and his sons] Both Gershom and Eliezer, though the birth of the latter has not yet been mentioned in the Hebrew text.

Set them upon an ass] The Septuagint reads the word in the plural, upon asses, as it certainly required more than one to carry Zipporah, Gershom, and Eliezer.

The rod of God] The sign of sovereign power, by which he was to perform all his miracles; once the badge of his shepherd's office, and now that by which he is to feed, rule, and protect his people Israel.

Verse 21. But I will harden his heart] The case of Pharaoh has given rise to many fierce controversies, and to several strange and conflicting opinions. Would men but look at the whole account without the medium of their respective creeds, they would find little difficulty to apprehend the truth. If we take up the subject in a theological point of view, all sober Christians will allow the truth of this proposition of St. Augustine, when the subject in question is a person who has hardened his own heart by frequently resisting the grace and Spirit of God: "God does not harden men by infusing malice into them, but by not imparting mercy to them." It is but just and right that he should withhold those graces which he had repeatedly offered, and which the sinner had despised and rejected. Thus much for the general principle. The verb chazak, which we translate harden, literally signifies to strengthen, confirm, make bold or courageous; and is often used in the sacred writings to exhort to duty, perseverance, &c. It constitutes an essential part of the exhortation of God to Joshua, chap. i. 7: Only be thou strong. And of Joshua's dying exhortation to the people, chap. xxiii. 6: Be ye therefore very courageous, to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law. Now it would be very strange in these places to translate the word harden: Only be thou hard, Be ye therefore very hard; and yet if we use the word hardy, it would suit the sense and context perfectly well: Only be thou HARDY; Be ye therefore very HARDY. Now suppose we apply the word in this way to Pharaoh, the sense would be good, and the justice of God equally conspicuous. I will make his heart hardy, bold, daring, presumptuous; for the same principle acting against God's order is presumption, which when acting according to it is undaunted courage. It is true that the verb kashah is used, chap. vii. 8, which signifies to render stiff, tough, or stubborn, but it amounts to nearly the same meaning with the above.

All those who have read the scriptures with care and attention, know well that God is frequently represented in them as doing what he only permits to be done. So because a man has grieved his Spirit and resisted his grace, he withdraws that Spirit and grace from him, and thus he becomes bold and presumptuous in sin. Pharaoh made his own heart stubborn against God, chap. ix. 34; and God gave him up to judicial blindness, so that he rushed on stubbornly to his own destruction. From the whole of Pharaoh's conduct we learn that he was bold, haughty, and cruel; and God chose to permit these dispositions to have their full sway in his heart without check or restraint from divine influence: the consequence was what God intended, he did not immediately comply with the requisition to let the people go; and this was done that God might have the 22 And thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD, <sup>a</sup>Israel is my son, <sup>b</sup>even my first-born:

23 And I say unto thee, Let my son go, that he may serve me: and if thou refuse to let him go, behold, <sup>a</sup>I will slay thy son, <sup>b</sup>even thy first-born:

full opportunity of manifesting his power by multiplying signs and miracles, and thus impress the hearts both of the Egyptians and Israelites with a due sense of his omnipotence and justice. The whole procedure was graciously calculated to do endless good to both nations. The Israelites must be satisfied that they had the true God for their protector; and thus their faith was strengthened. The Egyptians must see that their gods could do nothing against the God of Israel; and thus their dependance on them was necessarily shaken. These great ends could not have been answered had Pharaoh at once consented to let the people go. This consideration alone unravels the mystery, and explains every thing. Let it be observed that there is nothing spoken here of the eternal state of the Egyptian king; nor does any thing in the whole of the subsequent account authorise us to believe that God hardened his heart against the influences of his own grace, that he might occasion him so to sin that his justice might consign him to hell. This would be such an act of flagrant injustice as we could scarcely attribute to the worst of men. He who leads another into an offence that he may have a fairer pretence to punish him for it, or brings him into such circumstances that he cannot avoid committing a capital crime, and then hangs him for it, is the most execrable of mortals. What then should we make of the God of justice and mercy should we attribute to him a decree, the date of which is lost in eternity, by which he has determined to cut off from the possibility of salvation millions of millions of unborn souls, and leave them under a necessity of sinning, by actually hardening their hearts against the influences of his own grace and Spirit, that he may, on the pretext of justice, consign them to endless perdition? Whatever may be pretended in behalf of such unqualified opinions, it must be evident to all who are not deeply prejudiced, that neither the justice nor the sovereignty of God can be magnified by them.

Verse 22. Israel is my son, even my first-born] That is, The Hebrew people are unutterably dear to me.

Verse 23. Let my son go, that he may serve me] Which they could not do in Goshen, consistently with the policy and religious worship of the Egyptians; because the most essential part of an Israelite's worship consisted in sacrifice, and the animals which they offered to God were sacred among the Egyptians.

Verse 24. By the way in the inn] The account in this and the following verses is very obscure. Some suppose that the 23d verse is not a part of the message to Pharaoh, but was spoken by the Lord to Moses; and that the whole may thus be paraphrased: "And I have said unto thee (Moses), Send forth my son (Gershom, by circumcising him, that he may serve me (which he cannot do till entered into the covenant by circumcision), but thou hast refused to send him forth; behold (therefore), I will slay thy son, thy first-born. And it came to pass by the way in the inn (when he was on his journey to Egypt), that Jehovah met him, and sought (threatened) to kill him (Gershom). Then Zipporah took a sharp stone, and cut away the foreskin of her son, and caused it to touch his feet (Jehovah's, who probably appeared in a bodily shape, the Septuagint call him the Angel of the Lord), and said unto him, A spouse by blood art thou unto me. Then he (Jehovah) ceased from him (Gershom). Then she said, A spouse by blood art thou unto me, because of this circumcision." That is, I who am an alien have entered as fully into covenant with thee by doing this act, as my son has on whom this act has been performed.

The meaning of the whole passage seems to be this. The son of Moses, Gershom or Eliezer (for it does not appear 25 Then Zipporah took <sup>a</sup> a sharp <sup>b</sup> stone, and cut off the foreskin of her son, and <sup>c</sup> cast it at his feet, and said, Surely a bloody husband art thou to me.

26 So he let him go: then she said, A bloody husband thou art, because of the circumcision.

27 And the Lord said to Aaron, Go into the wilderness <sup>d</sup> to meet Moses. And he went, and met him in <sup>e</sup> the mount of God, and kissed him.

28 And Moses told Aaron all the words of the Lord who had sent him, and all the <sup>f</sup> signs which he had commanded him.

which), had not been circumcised, though it would seem that God had ordered the father to do it; but as he had neglected this, therefore Jehovah was about to have slain the child, because not in covenant with him by circumcision, and thus he intended to have punished the disobedience of the father by the natural death of his son. [The context, however, clearly shows that the pronoun him in the 24th verse refers to Moses, and not to his son.] Zipporah, getting acquainted with the nature of the case, and the danger to which her first-born was exposed, took a sharp stone, and cut off the foreskin of her son. By this act the displeasure of the Lord was turned aside, and Zipporah considered herself as now allied to God because of this circumcision. According to the law (Gen. xvii. 14), the uncircumcised child was to be cut off from his people, so that there should be no inheritance for that branch of the family in Israel. As circumcision was the seal of that justification by faith which comes through Christ, Moses by neglecting it gave a very bad example, and God was about to proceed against him with that severity which the law required.

The sharp stone was probably a knife made of flint, for such were anciently used, even where knives of metal might be had, for every kind of operation about the human body, such as embowelling for the purpose of embalming, circumcision, &c.

It is probable that Zipporah, being alarmed by this circumstance, and fearing worse evils, took the resolution to return to her father's house with her two sons. See chap. xviii. 1, &c. [Dr. Clarke's exposition of this very obscure passage is not happy. It is evident from the construction that Zipporah cast the foreskin of her son at the feet of Moses, and not at the feet of the Angel of the Lord. He, i.e. Moses, was henceforth to her a "bloody husband," or a bridegroom of blood, because she had saved his life by the shedding of her son's blood.]

Verse 27. The Lord said to Aaron] By some secret but powerful movement on Aaron's mind, or by some voice or angelic ministry, he was now directed to go and meet his brother Moses; and so correctly was the information given to both, that they arrived at the same time on the sacred mountain.

Verse 30. Aaron spake all the words] It is likely that Aaron was better acquainted with the Hebrew tongue than his brother, and on this account he became the spokesman.

Did the signs] Turned the rod into a serpent, made the hand leprous, and changed the water into blood.

Verse 31. The people believed] They credited the account given of the divine appointment of Moses and Aaron to be their deliverers out of their bondage, the miracles wrought

29 And Moses and Aaron <sup>h</sup> went and gathered together all the elders of the children of Israel:

30 <sup>i</sup> And Aaron spake all the words which the Lord had spoken unto Moses, and did the signs in the sight of the people.

31 And the people <sup>j</sup> believed: and when they heard that the Lord had <sup>k</sup> visited the children of Israel, and that he <sup>l</sup> had looked upon their affliction, then <sup>m</sup> they bowed their heads and worshipped.

on the occasion confirming the testimony delivered by Aaron. They bowed their heads and worshipped.] The bowing the head, &c., here, may probably refer to the eastern custom of bowing the head down to the knees, then kneeling down and touching the earth with the forehead. This was a very painful posture, and the most humble in which the body could possibly be placed. Those who pretend to worship God, either by prayer or thanksgiving, and keep themselves during the performance of those solemn acts in a state of perfect ease, either carelessly standing or stupidly sitting, surely cannot have a due sense of the majesty of God, and their own sinfulness and unworthiness. Let the feelings of the body put the soul in remembrance of its sin against God. Let a man put himself in such a position (kneeling for instance) as it is generally acknowledged a criminal should assume when coming to his sovereign and judge to bewail his sins, and solicit forgiveness.

The Jewish custom, as we learn from Rabbi Maymon, was to bend the body so that every joint of the back-bone became incurvated, and the head was bent towards the knees, so that the body resembled a bow; and prostration implied laying the body flat upon the earth, the arms and legs extended to the uttermost, the mouth and forehead touching the ground. See Matt. viii. 2, and Luke v. 12.

The backwardness of Moses to receive and execute the commission to deliver the children of Israel, has something very instructive in it. He felt the importance of the charge, his own insufficiency, and the awful responsibility under which he should be laid if he received it. Who then can blame him for hesitating? What should ministers of the gospel feel on such subjects? Is not their charge more important and more awful than that of Moses? How few consider this! It is respectable, it is honourable, to be in the gospel ministry, but who is sufficient to guide and feed the flock of God? If through the pastor's unfitness or neglect any soul should go astray, or perish through want of proper spiritual nourishment, in what a dreadful state is the pastor! That soul, says God, shall die in his iniquities, but his blood will I require at the watchman's hands! Were these things duly considered by those who are candidates for the gospel ministry, who could be found to undertake it? We should then indeed have the utmost occasion to pray the Lord of the harvest, to thrust out labourers into the harvest, as no one, duly considering those things, would go, unless thrust out by God himself. O ye ministers of the sanctuary! tremble for your own souls, and the souls of those committed to your care, and go not into this work unless God go with you. Without his presence, unction, and approbation ye can do nothing.

CHAPTER V.

Moses and Aaron open their commission to Pharaoh, 1. He insultingly asks who Jehovah is, in whose name they require him to dismiss the people, 2. They explain, 3. He charges them with making the people distressed, 4, 5; and commands the task-masters to increase their work, and lessen their means of performing it, 6-9. The task-masters do as commanded, and refuse to give the people straw to assist them in making brick, and yet require the fulfilment of their daily tasks as formerly, when furnished with all the necessary means, 10-18. The Israelites failing to produce the ordinary quantity of brick, their own officers, set over them by the task-masters, are cruelly insulted and beaten, 14. The officers complain to Pharaoh, 15, 16; but find no redress, 17, 18. The officers, finding their case desperate, bitterly reproach Moses and Aaron for bringing them into their present circumstances, 19-21. Moses retires, and lays the matter before the Lord, and pleads with him, 22, 23.

AND afterward Moses and Aaron went in, and told Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Let my people go, that they may hold <sup>a</sup> a feast unto me in the wilderness.

2 And Pharaoh said, <sup>b</sup> Who is the LORD, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the LORD, <sup>c</sup> neither will I let Israel go.

3 And they said, <sup>d</sup> The God of the Hebrews hath met with us: let us go, we pray thee, three days' journey into the desert, and sacrifice unto the LORD our God; lest he fall upon us with pestilence, or with the sword.

4 And the king of Egypt said unto them, Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron, let the people from their works? get you unto your <sup>e</sup> burdens.

5 And Pharaoh said, Behold the people of the land now are <sup>f</sup> many, and ye make them rest from their burdens.

6 And Pharaoh commanded the same day the <sup>g</sup> task-masters of the people, and their officers, saying,

7 Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick, as heretofore: let them go and gather straw for themselves.

<sup>a</sup> Ch. x. 9.—<sup>b</sup> 2 Kings xviii. 35. Job xvi. 15.—<sup>c</sup> Ch. iii. 19.

Verse 1. And afterward Moses and Aaron went] This chapter is properly a continuation of the preceding, as the succeeding is a continuation of this; and to preserve the connexion of the facts they should be read together.

How simply, and yet with what authority, does Moses deliver his message to the Egyptian king! Thus saith JEHOVAH, GOD OF ISRAEL, let my people go. It is well in this, as in almost every other case where Jehovah occurs, to preserve the original word: our using the word LORD is not sufficiently expressive, and often leaves the sense indistinct.

Verse 2. Who is the Lord? Who is Jehovah, that I should obey his voice? What claim has he on me? I am under no obligation to him. Pharaoh spoke here under the common persuasion that every place and people had a tutelary deity, and he supposed that this Jehovah might be the tutelary deity of the Israelites, to whom he, as an Egyptian, could be under no kind of obligation.

Verse 3. Three days' journey] The distance from Goshen to Sinai; see chap. iii. 18.

And sacrifice unto the Lord] Great stress is laid on this circumstance. God required sacrifice; no religious acts which they performed could be acceptable to him without this. He had now showed them that it was their indispensable duty thus to worship him, and that if they did not they might expect him to send the pestilence—some plague or death proceeding immediately from himself, or the sword—extermination by the hands of an enemy. The original word deber, from dabar, to drive off, draw under, &c., which we translate pestilence from the Latin pestis, the plague, signifies any kind of disease by which an extraordinary mortality is occasioned, and which appears from the circumstances of the case to come immediately from God. The Israelites could not sacrifice in the land of Egypt, because the animals they were to offer to God were held sacred by the Egyptians; and they could not omit this duty, because it was essential to religion even before the giving of the law. From the foundation of the world the true religion required sacrifice. Before, under, and after the law, this was deemed essential to salvation. Under the Christian dispensation Jesus is the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world; and being still the Lamb newly slain before the throne, no man cometh unto the Father but by him.

Verse 4. Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron] He hints

8 And the tale of the bricks, which they did make heretofore, ye shall lay upon them; ye shall not diminish ought thereof: for they be idle; therefore they cry, saying, Let us go and sacrifice to our God.

9 <sup>h</sup> Let there more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein; and let them not regard vain words.

10 And the task-masters of the people went out, and their officers, and they spake to the people, saying, Thus saith Pharaoh, I will not give you straw.

11 Go ye, get you straw where ye can find it: ye not ought of your work shall be diminished.

12 So the people were scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt, to gather stubble instead of straw.

13 And the task-masters hastened them, saying, Fulfil your works, your <sup>i</sup> daily tasks, as when there was straw.

14 And the officers of the children of Israel, which Pharaoh's task-masters had set over them, were beaten, and demanded, Wherefore have ye not fulfilled your task, in making brick both yesterday and to-day, as heretofore?

15 Then the officers of the children of Israel came that the Hebrews are in a state of revolt, and charges Moses and Aaron as being ringleaders of the sedition. This unprincipled charge has been, in nearly similar circumstances, often repeated since. Men who have laboured to bring the mass of the common people from ignorance, irreligion, and general profligacy of manners, to an acquaintance with themselves and God, and to a proper knowledge of their duty to him and to each other, have been often branded as being disaffected to the state, and as movers of sedition among the people!

Let the people] Let, from the Anglo-Saxon lettan, to hinder. Ye hinder the people from working. Get ye to your burdens. "Let religion alone, and mind your work." The language, not only of tyranny, but of the basest irreligion also.

Verse 5. The people of the land now are many] The sanguinary edict had no doubt been long before repealed, or they could not have multiplied so greatly.

Verse 6. The task-masters of the people, and their officers] The task-masters were Egyptians, the officers were Hebrews. But it is probable that the task-masters, chap. i. 11, who are called princes of the burdens or taxes, were different from those termed task-masters here, as the words are different; noyesim signifies extractors or oppressors—persons who exacted from them an unreasonable proportion either of labour or money.

Officers.—Those seem to have been an inferior sort of officers, who attended on superior officers or magistrates to execute their orders; something like our sheriffs.

Verse 7. Straw to make brick] The eastern bricks are often made of clay and straw kneaded together, and then not burned, but thoroughly dried in the sun. This is expressly mentioned by Philo in his life of Moses, who says, describing the oppression of the Israelites in Egypt, that some were obliged to work in clay for the formation of bricks, and others to gather straw for the same purpose, because straw is the bond by which the brick is held together. From this we may see the reason of the complaint made to Pharaoh, ver. 16: the Egyptians refused to give the necessary portion of straw for kneading the bricks, and yet they required that the full tale or number of bricks should be produced each day, as they did when all the necessary materials were brought to hand; so the people were driven to go over all and cried unto Pharaoh, saying, Wherefore dealest thou thus with thy servants?

16 There is no straw given unto thy servants, and they say to us, Make brick: and, behold, thy servants are beaten; but the fault is in thine own people.

17 But he said, Ye are idle, ye are idle: therefore ye say, Let us go and do sacrifice to the Lord.

18 Go therefore now, and work; for there shall no straw be given you, yet shall ye deliver the tale of bricks.

19 And the officers of the children of Israel did see that they were in evil case, after it was said, Ye shall not minish ought from your bricks of your daily task.

* Ch. vi. 9.—<sup>b</sup> Heb. to stink. Gen. xxxiv. 80. 1 Sam. xiii. 4. xxvii. 12. 2 Sam. x. 6. 1 Chron. xix. 6.

the corn-fields, and pluck up the stubble, which they were obliged to substitute for straw.

Verse 8. And the tale of the bricks] Tale signifies the number.

For they be idle; therefore they cry—Let us go and sacrifice] Thus their desire to worship the true God in a proper manner was attributed to their unwillingness to work; a reflection which the Egyptians (in principle) of the present day cast on those who, while they are fervent in spirit serving the Lord, are not slothful in business.

Verse 14. And the officers—were beaten] Probably bastinadoed; for this is the common punishment in Egypt to the present day for minor offences. The manner of it is this: the culprit lies on his belly, his legs being turned up behind erect, and the executioner gives him so many blows on the soles of the feet with a stick. This is a very severe punishment, the sufferer not being able to walk for many weeks after, and some are lamed by it through the whole of their lives.

Verse 16. The fault is in thine own people.] Chatath, the sin is in thy own people. 1st, Because they require impossibilities; and 2ndly, because they punish us for not doing what cannot be performed.

Verse 17. Ye are idle—therefore ye say, Let us go, and do sacrifice] It is common for those who feel unconcerned about their own souls to attribute the religious earnestness of others to idleness or a disregard of their secular concerns. Strange that they cannot see there is a medium! He who has commanded them to be diligent in business, has also commanded them to be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. He whose diligence in business is not connected with a true religious fervour of spirit, is a lover of the world; and whatever form he may have he has not the power of godliness, and therefore is completely out of the road to salvation.

Verse 19. Did see that they were in evil case] They saw that they could neither expect justice nor mercy; that their deliverance was very doubtful, and their case almost hopeless.

Verse 21. The Lord look upon you, and judge] These were hasty and unkind expressions; but the afflicted must be allowed the privilege of complaining; it is all the solace that such sorrow can find; and if in such distress words are spoken which should not be justified, yet the considerate and benevolent will hear them with indulgence. God is merciful: and the stroke of this people was heavier even than their groaning.

Put a sword in their hand] Given them a pretence which they had not before, to oppress us even unto death.

Verse 22. And Moses returned unto the Lord] This may imply, either that there was a particular place into which Moses ordinarily went to commune with Jehovah; or it

20 And they met Moses and Aaron, who stood in the way, as they came forth from Pharaoh:

21 * And they said unto them, The Lord look upon you, and judge: because ye have made our savour <sup>b</sup> to be abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of his servants, to put a sword in their hand to slay us.

22 And Moses returned unto the Lord, and said, Lord, wherefore hast thou so evil entreated this people? why is it that thou hast sent me?

23 For since I came to Pharaoh to speak in thy name, he hath done evil to this people; neither hast thou delivered this people at all.

* Heb. delivering thou hast not delivered.

may mean that kind of turning of heart and affection to God, which every pious mind feels itself disposed to practise in any time or place. The old adage will apply here: "A praying heart never lacks a praying place."

Lord, wherefore hast thou so evil entreated this people?] It is certain that in this address Moses uses great plainness of speech. Whether the offspring of a testy impatience and undue familiarity, or of strong faith which gave him more than ordinary access to the throne of his gracious Sovereign, it would be difficult to say. The latter appears to be the most probable, as we do not find, from the succeeding chapter, that God was displeased with his freedom; we may therefore suppose that it was kept within due bounds, and that the principles and motives were all pure and good. However, it should be noted, that such freedom of speech with the Most High should never be used but on very special occasions, and then only by his extraordinary messengers.

Verse 23. He hath done evil to this people] Their misery is increased instead of being diminished.

Neither hast thou delivered thy people at all] The marginal reading is both literal and correct: And delivering thou hast not delivered. Thou hast begun the work by giving us counsels and a commission, but thou hast not brought the people from under their bondage.

1. It is no certain proof of the displeasure of God that a whole people, or an individual, may be found in a state of great oppression and distress; nor are affluence and prosperity any certain signs of his approbation. God certainly loved the Israelites better than he did the Egyptians; yet the former were in the deepest adversity, while the latter were in the height of prosperity.

2. In all our addresses to God we should ever remember that we have sinned against him, and deserve nothing but punishment from his hand. We should therefore bow before him with the deepest humiliation of soul. Many ignorant though well-meaning people use very improper, not to say indecent, freedoms in their addresses to the throne of grace. With such proceedings God cannot be well pleased; and he who has not a proper impression of the dignity and excellence of the Divine Nature, is not in such a disposition as it is essentially necessary to feel, in order to receive help from God. A solemn awe of the Divine Majesty is not less requisite to successful praying, than faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. When we have such a commission as that of Moses, we may make use of his freedom of speech; but till then the publican's prayer will best suit the generality of those who are even dignified by the name of Christian—LORD, be merciful to ME, a SINNER!

CHAPTER VI.

God encourages Moses, and promises to show wonders upon Pharaoh, and to bring out his people with a strong hand, 1. He confirms this by his essential name JEHOVAH, 2, 3; by the covenant he had made with their fathers, 4, 5. Sends Moses with a fresh message to the Hebrews, full of the most gracious promises, and confirms the whole by appealing to the name in which his unchangeable existence is implied, 6-8. Moses delivers the message to the Israelites, but through anguish of spirit they do not believe, 9. He receives a new commission to go to Pharaoh, 10, 11. He excuses himself on account of his unreadiness of speech, 12. The Lord gives him and Aaron a charge both to Pharaoh and to the children of Israel, 13. The genealogy of Reuben, 14; of Simeon, 15; of Levi, from whom descended Gershon, Kohath, and Merari, 16. The sons of Gershon, 17; of Kohath, 18; of Merari, 19. The marriage of Amram and Jochebed, 20. The sons of Izhar and Uzziel, the brothers of Amram, 21, 22. Marriage of Aaron and Elisheba, and the birth of their sons, Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar, 23. The sons of Korah, the nephew of Aaron, 24. The marriage of Eleazar to one of the daughters of Putiel, and the birth of Phinehas, 25. These genealogical accounts introduced for the sake of showing the line of descent of Moses and Aaron, 26, 27. A recapitulation of the commission delivered to Moses and Aaron, 29, and a repetition of the excuse formerly made by Moses, 30.

THEN the LORD said unto Moses, Now shalt thou see what I will do to Pharaoh: for <sup>a</sup>with a strong hand shall he let them go, and with a strong hand <sup>b</sup>shall he drive them out of his land.

2 And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am <sup>c</sup>the LORD:

3 And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of <sup>d</sup>God Almighty, but by my name <sup>e</sup>JEHOVAH was I not known to them.

4 <sup>f</sup>And I have also established my covenant with them, <sup>g</sup>to give them the land of Canaan, the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were strangers.

Verse 1. With a strong hand] Yad chazakah, the same verb which we translate to harden; see on chap. iv. 21. The strong hand here means sovereign power, suddenly and forcibly applied. God purposed to manifest his sovereign power in the sight of Pharaoh and the Egyptians; in consequence of which Pharaoh would manifest his power and authority as sovereign of Egypt, in dismissing and thrusting out the people.

Verse 2. I am the LORD] It should be, I am JEHOVAH, and without this the reason of what is said in the 3rd verse is not sufficiently obvious.

Verse 3. By the name of God Almighty] EL-SHADDAI, God All-sufficient; God the dispenser or pourer out of gifts.

But by my name JEHOVAH was I not known to them.] This passage has been variously explained. It is certain that the name Jehovah was in use long before the days of Abraham, see Gen. ii. 4, where the words Jehovah Elohim occur, as they do frequently afterwards; and see Gen. xv. 2, where Abraham expressly addresses him by the name Adonai JEHOVAH; and the seventh verse, where God reveals himself to Abraham by this very name: And he said unto him, I am JEHOVAH, that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees. How then can it be said that by his name JEHOVAH he was not known unto them? Several answers have been given to this question: the following are the chief: 1. The words should be read interrogatively, for the negative particle, lo, not, has this power often in Hebrew. 2. The name JEHOVAH was not revealed before the time mentioned here, for though it occurs so frequently in the book of Genesis, as that book was written long after the name had come into common use, as a principal characteristic of God, Moses employs it in his history by the figure called prolepsis or anticipation. 3. As the name JEHOVAH signifies existence, it may be understood thus: "I appeared unto Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob by my name God Almighty, or God All-sufficient; in this character I made a covenant with them, supported by great and glorious promises; but as those promises had respect unto their posterity, they could not be fulfilled to those fathers: now, as JEHOVAH, I am about to give existence to all those promises." 4. The words may be considered as used com-

5 And <sup>h</sup>I have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel, whom the Egyptians keep in bondage; and I have remembered my covenant.

6 Wherefore say unto the children of Israel, <sup>i</sup>I am the LORD, and <sup>j</sup>I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, and I will <sup>k</sup>redeem you with a stretched-out arm, and with great judgments:

7 And I will <sup>l</sup>take you to me for a people, and <sup>m</sup>I will be to you a God: and ye shall know that I am the LORD your God, which bringeth you out <sup>n</sup>from under the burdens of the Egyptians.

paratively: though God did appear to those patriarchs as JEHOVAH, and they acknowledged him by this name, yet it was but comparatively known unto them; they knew nothing of the power and goodness of God, in comparison of what the Israelites were now about to experience.

I believe the simple meaning is this, that though from the beginning the name JEHOVAH was known as one of the names of the Supreme Being, yet what it really implied they did not know. God All-sufficient, they knew well by the continual provision he made for them, and the constant protection he afforded them: but the name JEHOVAH in its power and significance was not known unto them; nor fully known unto their descendants till the deliverance from Egypt and settlement in the promised land.

Verse 4. I have also established my covenant] I have now fully purposed to give present effect to all my engagements with your fathers, in behalf of their posterity.

Verse 6. Say unto the children of Israel, I am the LORD, and I will bring you out, &c.] This confirms the explanation given of ver. 3, which see.

Verse 7. I will take you to me for a people, &c.] This was precisely the covenant that he had made with Abraham. And ye shall know that I am the LORD your God.] By thus fulfilling my promises ye shall know what is implied in my name.

But why should God take such a most stupid, refractory, and totally worthless people for his people? 1. Because he had promised to do so to their noble ancestors Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Judah, &c., men worthy of all praise, because in general friends of God, devoted to his will and to the good of mankind.

2. "That (as Bishop Warburton properly observes) the extraordinary providence by which they were protected, might become the more visible and illustrious; for had they been endowed with the shining qualities of the more polished nations, the effects of that providence might have been ascribed to their own wisdom."

3. That God might show to all succeeding generations that he delights to instruct the ignorant, help the weak, and save the lost. He seems to have chosen the worst people in the universe, to give by them unto mankind the highest and most expressive proofs, that he wills not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may turn from his iniquity and live.

Verse 8. Which I did swear] I have lifted up my hand. The usual mode of making an appeal to God, and hence considered to be a form of swearing. It is thus that Isa. lxii. 8 is to be understood: The Lord hath sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength.

Verse 9. But they hearkened not] Their bondage was become so extremely oppressive that they had lost all hope of ever being redeemed from it.

Anguish of spirit] Shortness of spirit or breath. The words signify that their labour was so continual, and their bondage so cruel and oppressive, that they had scarcely time to breathe.

Verse 12. Uncircumcised lips] The word aral, which we translate uncircumcised, seems to signify any thing exuberant or superfluous. Had not Moses been remarkable for his excellent beauty, I should have thought the passage might be rendered protuberant lips; but as this sense cannot be admitted for the above reason, the word must refer to some natural impediment in his speech; and probably means a want of distinct and ready utterance, either occasioned by some defect in the organs of speech, or impaired knowledge of the Egyptian language after an absence of forty years.

Verse 14. These be the heads] The following genealogy was simply intended to show that Moses and Aaron came in a direct line from Abraham, and to ascertain the time of Israel's deliverance. The whole account from this verse to ver. 26 is a sort of parenthesis, and does not belong to the narration; and what follows from ver. 28 is a recapitulation of what was spoken in the preceding chapters.

Verse 20. His father's sister] The true meaning of this word is uncertain. The best critics suppose that Jochebed was the cousin-german of Amram, and not his aunt.

Bare him Aaron and Moses] The Samaritan, Septuagint, Syriac, and one Hebrew MS. add, And Miriam their sister. Some of the best critics suppose these words to have been originally in the Hebrew text.

Verse 21. Korah] Though he became a rebel against God and Moses, yet Moses, in his great impartiality, inserts his name among those of his other progenitors.

Verse 22. Uzziel] He is called Aaron's uncle, Levit. x. 4.

Verse 23. Elisheba] The oath of the Lord. It is the same name as Elizabeth, so very common among Christians. She was of the royal tribe of Judah, and was sister to Naashon, one of the princes; see Num. ii. 8.

Eleazar] He succeeded to the high-priesthood on the death of his father Aaron, Numb. xx. 25, &c.

Verse 25. Phinehas] Of the celebrated act of this person, and the most honourable grant made to him and his posterity, see Numb. xxv. 7-13.

Verse 26. According to their armies] Tsibotham, their battalions—regularly arranged troops. As God had these particularly under his care and direction, he had the name of Yehovah tsebaoth, Lord of hosts or armies. [This is a very limited interpretation of the title "Jehovah of Hosts."]

Verse 28. And it came to pass] Here the seventh chapter should commence, as there is a complete ending of the sixth with ver. 27, and the 30th verse of this chapter is intimately connected with the 1st verse of the succeeding.

Supposing Moses to have really laboured under some defect in speech, we may consider it as wisely designed to be a sort of counterbalance to his other excellences: at least this is an ordinary procedure of Divine Providence: personal accomplishments are counterbalanced by mental defects, and mental imperfections often by personal accomplishments. Thus the head cannot say to the foot, I have no need of thee. And God does all this in great wisdom to hide pride from man, and that no flesh may glory in his presence. To be contented with our formation, endowments, and external circumstances, requires not only much submission to the providence of God, but also much of the mind of Christ. On the other hand, should we feel vanity because of some personal or mental accomplishment, we have only to take a view of our whole, to find sufficient cause of humiliation; and after all, the meek and gentle spirit only is, in the sight of God, of great price.

CHAPTER VII.

The dignified mission of Moses and Aaron to Pharaoh—the one to be as God, the other as a prophet of the Most High, 1, 2. The prediction that Pharaoh's heart should be hardened, that God might multiply his signs and wonders in Egypt, that the inhabitants might know he alone was the true God, 3-6. The age of Moses and Aaron, 7. God gives them directions how they should act before Pharaoh, 8, 9. Moses turns his rod into a serpent, 10. The magicians imitate this miracle, and Pharaoh's heart is hardened, 11-13. Moses is commanded to wait upon Pharaoh next morning when he should come to the river, and threaten to turn the waters into blood if he did not let the people go, 14-18. The waters in all the land of Egypt are turned into blood, 19, 20. The fish die, 21. The magicians imitate this, and Pharaoh's heart is again hardened, 22, 23. The Egyptians sorely distressed because of the bloody waters, 24. This plague endures seven days, 25.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, Sec, I have made thee <sup>a</sup> a god to Pharaoh: and Aaron thy brother shall be <sup>b</sup> thy prophet.

2 Thou <sup>c</sup> shalt speak all that I command thee: and Aaron thy brother shall speak unto Pharaoh, that he send the children of Israel out of his land.

3 And <sup>d</sup> I will harden Pharaoh's heart, and <sup>e</sup> multiply my <sup>f</sup> signs and my wonders in the land of Egypt.

4 But Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you, <sup>g</sup> that I may lay my hand upon Egypt, and bring forth mine armies, and my people the children of Israel, out of the land of Egypt, <sup>h</sup> by great judgments.

5 And the Egyptians <sup>i</sup> shall know that I am the LORD, when I <sup>j</sup> stretch forth mine hand upon Egypt, and bring out the children of Israel from among them.

6 And Moses and Aaron <sup>k</sup> did as the LORD commanded them, so did they.

7 And Moses was <sup>l</sup> fourscore years old, and Aaron fourscore and three years old, when they spake unto Pharaoh.

8 And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

9 When Pharaoh shall speak unto you, saying, <sup>m</sup> Shew a miracle for you: then thou shalt say unto Aaron, <sup>n</sup> Take thy rod, and cast it before Pharaoh, and it shall become a serpent.

Verse 1. I have made thee a god.] At thy word every plague shall come, and at thy command each shall be removed. Thus Moses must have appeared as a god to Pharaoh.

Shall be thy prophet.] Shall receive the word from thy mouth, and communicate it to the Egyptian king, ver 2.

Verse 3. I will harden Pharaoh's heart.] I will permit his stubbornness and obstinacy still to remain, that I may have the greater opportunity to multiply my wonders in the land, that the Egyptians may know that I only am Jehovah, the self-existent God.

Verse 5. And bring out the children of Israel.] Pharaoh's obstinacy was either caused or permitted in mercy to the Egyptians, that he and his magicians being suffered to oppose Moses and Aaron to the uttermost of their power, the Israelites might be brought out of Egypt in so signal a manner, in spite of all the opposition of the Egyptians, their king, and their gods, that Jehovah might appear to be All-mighty and All-sufficient.

Verse 7. Moses was fourscore years old.] He was forty years old when he went to Midian, and he had tarried forty years in Midian; and from this verse it appears that Aaron was three years older than Moses.

Verse 9. Shew a miracle for you.] A miracle, mopheth, signifies an effect produced in nature which is opposed to its laws, or such as its powers are inadequate to produce. As Moses and Aaron professed to have a divine mission, and to come to Pharaoh on the most extraordinary occasion, making a most singular and unprecedented demand; it was natural to suppose, if Pharaoh should even give them an audience, that he would require them to give him some proof by an extraordinary sign that their pretensions to such a divine mission were well founded and incontestable. For it appears to have ever been the sense of mankind, that he who has a divine mission to effect some extraordinary purpose can give a supernatural proof that he has got this extraordinary commission.

Take thy rod.] This rod was now consecrated for the purpose of working miracles; and is indifferently called the rod of God, the rod of Moses, and the rod of Aaron. God gave it the miraculous power, and Moses and Aaron used it indifferently.

Verse 10. It became a serpent.] Tannin.<sup>o</sup> From the manner in which the original word is used in Psa. lxxiv 13, Isa. xxvii. 1, li. 9, Job vii. 12, some very large creature, either aquatic or amphibious, is probably meant; some have thought that the crocodile, a well-known Egyptian animal, is here intended. In chap. iv. 8 it is said that this rod was changed into a serpent, but the original word there is nachash, and here tannin, the same word which we translate whale, Gen. i. 21.

As nachash seems to be <sup>a</sup> arm restricted to no one particular meaning, so the word tannin is used to signify different kinds of animals in the scriptures. As it was a rod or staff that was changed into the tannin in the cases mentioned here, it has been supposed that an ordinary serpent is what is intended by the word, because the size of both might be then pretty nearly equal: but as a miracle was wrought on the occasion, this circumstance is of no weight; it was as easy for God to change the rod into a crocodile, or any other creature, as to change it into an adder or common snake.

Aaron cast down his rod before Pharaoh, and before his servants, and it <sup>a</sup> became a serpent.

11 Then Pharaoh also <sup>b</sup> called the wise men and <sup>c</sup> the sorcerers: now the magicians of Egypt, they also <sup>d</sup> did in like manner with their enchantments.

12 For they cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents: but Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods.

13 And he hardened Pharaoh's heart, that he hearkened not unto them; <sup>e</sup> as the LORD had said.

14 And the LORD said unto Moses, 'Pharaoh's heart is hardened, he refuseth to let the people go.

15 Get thee unto Pharaoh in the morning; lo, he goeth out unto the water; and thou shalt stand by the river's brink against he come; and <sup>f</sup> the rod which was turned to a serpent shalt thou take in thine hand.

16 And thou shalt say unto him, <sup>g</sup> The LORD God of the Hebrews hath sent me unto thee, saying, Let my people go, <sup>h</sup> that they may serve me in the wilderness: and, behold, hitherto thou wouldest not hear.

Verse 11. Pharaoh—called the wise men] Chacamin, the men of learning. Sorcerers, Cashisephim, those who reveal hidden things; probably from the Arabic root, kashafa, to reveal, uncover, &c., signifying diviners, or those who pretended to reveal what was in futurity, to discover things lost, to find hidden treasures, &c. Magicians, chartumney, decypherers of abstruse writings.

They also did in like manner with their enchantments.] The word lahatim, comes from lahat, to burn, to set on fire; and probably signifies such incantations as required lustral fires, sacrifices, fumigations, burning of incense, aromatic and odoriferous drugs, &c., as the means of evoking departed spirits or assistant demons, by whose ministry, it is probable, the magicians in question wrought some of their deceptive miracles; for as the term miracle signifies properly something which exceeds the powers of nature or art to produce, hence there could be no miracle in this case but those wrought, through the power of God, by the ministry of Moses and Aaron. There can be no doubt that real serpents were produced by the magicians. On this subject there are two opinions: 1st, That the serpents were such as they, either by juggling or sleight of hand, had brought to the place, and had secreted till the time of exhibition, as our common conjurors do in the public fairs, &c. 2ndly, That the serpents were brought by the ministry of a familiar spirit, which, by the magic flames already referred to, they had evoked for the purpose. Both these opinions admit the serpents to be real.

The first opinion appears to me insufficient to account for the phenomena of the case referred to. If the magicians threw down their rods, and they became serpents after they were thrown down, juggling or sleight of hand had nothing farther to do in the business, as the rods were then out of their hands. If Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods, their sleight of hand was no longer concerned. A man, by dexterity of hand, may so far impose on his spectators as to appear to eat a rod; but for rods lying on the ground to become serpents, and one of these to devour all the rest so that it alone remained, required something more than juggling. How much more rational at once to allow that these magicians had familiar spirits who could assume all shapes, change the appearances of the subjects on which they operated, or suddenly convey one thing away and substitute another in its place! [All miraculous endowment must come from God. If evil spirits were thus endowed on the occasion referred to, then God appears in a conflict of rivalry with those whom he had invested with power to oppose him! Such a notion is derogatory.]

Verse 12. Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods.] As Egypt was remarkably addicted to magic, sorcery, &c., it was necessary that God should permit Pharaoh's wise men to act to the utmost of their skill in order to imitate the work of 17 Thus saith the LORD, In this <sup>i</sup> thou shalt know that I am the LORD: behold, I will smite with a rod that is in mine hand upon the waters which are in the river, and <sup>j</sup> they shall be turned <sup>k</sup> to blood.

18 And the fish that is in the river shall die, and the river shall stink; and the Egyptians shall <sup>l</sup> lothe to drink of the water of the river.

19 And the LORD spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Take thy rod, and <sup>m</sup> stretch out thine hand upon the waters of Egypt, upon their streams, upon their rivers, and upon their ponds, and upon all their <sup>n</sup> pools of water, that they may become blood; and that there may be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in vessels of wood, and in vessels of stone.

20 And Moses and Aaron did so, as the LORD commanded; and he <sup>o</sup> lifted up the rod, and smote the waters that were in the river, in the sight of Pharaoh, and in the sight of his servants; and all the <sup>p</sup> waters that were in the river were turned to blood.

21 And the fish that was in the river died; and

God, that his superiority might be clearly seen, and his powerful working incontestably ascertained; and this was fully done when Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods.

Verse 13. And he hardened Pharaoh's heart] "And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened," the identical words which in ver. 22 are thus translated, and which should have been rendered in the same way here, lest the hardening, which was evidently the effect of his own obstinate shutting of his eyes against the truth, should be attributed to God.

Verse 14. Pharaoh's heart is hardened] Caved, is become heavy or stupid; he receives no conviction, notwithstanding the clearness of the light which shines upon him. We well know the power of prejudice; where persons are determined to think and act after a pre-determined plan, arguments, demonstrations, and even miracles themselves, are lost on them, as in the case of Pharaoh here, and that of the obstinate Jews in the days of our Lord and his apostles.

Verse 15. Lo, he goeth out unto the water] Probably for the purpose of bathing, or of performing some religious ablution. Some suppose he went out to pay adoration to the river Nile, which was an object of religious worship among the ancient Egyptians. Some of the ancient Jews supposed that Pharaoh himself was a magician and that he walked by the river early each morning for the purpose of preparing magical rites, &c.

Verse 17. Behold I will smite] Here commences the account of the TEN plagues which were inflicted on the Egyptians by Moses and Aaron, by the command and through the power of God. According to Archbishop Usher these ten plagues took place in the course of one month.

Verse 18. The Egyptians shall lothe to drink of the water] The force of this expression cannot be well felt without taking into consideration the peculiar pleasantness and great salubrity of the waters of the Nile. "The water of Egypt," says the Abbé Mascricr, "is so delicious, that one would not wish the heat to be less, or to be delivered from the sensation of thirst. The Turks find it so exquisite that they excite themselves to drink of it by eating salt. It is a common saying among them, that if Mohammed had drank of it, he would have besought God that he might never die, in order to have had this continual gratification."

Verse 19. That there may be blood—both in vessels of wood, and in vessels of stone.] Not only the Nile itself was to be thus changed into blood in all its branches, and the canals issuing from it, but all the water of lakes, ponds, and reservoirs, was to undergo a similar change. And this was to extend even to the water already brought into their houses for culinary and other domestic purposes. As the water of the Nile is known to be very thick and muddy, and the Egyptians are obliged to filter it through pots of a kind of white earth, and sometimes through a paste made of almonds, it the river stank, and the Egyptians * could not drink of the water of the river; and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt.

22 <sup>b</sup> And the magicians of Egypt did so with their enchantments; and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, neither did he hearken unto them; * as the LORD had said.

* Ver. 18.—<sup>b</sup> Ver. 11. Ch. viii. 7, 8. Wisd. xvii. 7.—<sup>c</sup> Prov. xxix. 1. Isa. xxvii. 11. Jer. v. 3. xxxvi. 24.

has been supposed that the vessels of wood and stone mentioned above may refer to the process of filtration, which no doubt has been practised among them from the remotest period. The meaning given above I think to be more natural.

Verse 20. All the waters—were turned to blood. Not merely in appearance, but in reality; for these changed waters became corrupt and insalubrious, so that even the fish that were in the river died; and the smell became highly offensive, so that the waters could not be drunk; ver. 21.

Verse 22. And the magicians—did so. But if all the water in Egypt was turned into blood by Moses, where did the magicians get the water which they changed into blood? This question is answered in verse 24. The Egyptians digged round about the river for water to drink, and it seems that the water obtained by this means was not bloody like that in the river: on this water therefore the magicians might operate. Again, though a general commission was given to Moses, not only to turn the waters of the river (Nile) into blood, but also those of their streams, rivers, ponds, and pools; yet it seems pretty clear from verse 20 that he did not proceed thus far, at least in the first instance; for it is there stated that only the waters of the river were turned into blood. At the commencement therefore of this plague, the magicians might obtain other water to imitate the miracle; and it would not be difficult for them, by juggling tricks or the assistance of a familiar spirit (for we must not abandon the possibility of this use), to give it a bloody appearance, a fetid smell, and a bad taste.

The plague of the bloody waters may be considered as a display of retributive justice against the Egyptians, for the murderous decree which enacted that all the male children of the Israelites should be drowned in that river the waters of which, so necessary to their support and life, were now rendered not only insalubrious but deadly, by being turned into blood. As it is well known that the Nile was a chief object of Egyptian idolatry, and that annually they sacrificed a girl, or as others say both a boy and a girl, to this river, in gratitude for the benefits received from it, God might have designed this plague as a punishment for such cruelty; and the contempt poured upon this object of their adoration, by turning its waters into blood, and rendering them fetid and corrupt, must have had a direct tendency to correct their idolatrous notions, and lead them to acknowledge the power and authority of the true God.

Verse 25. And seven days were fulfilled. So we learn that this plague continued at least a whole week.

The contention between Moses and Aaron and the magicians of Egypt has become famous throughout the world. Tradition in various countries has preserved, not only the account, but also the names of the chief persons concerned in the opposition made by the Egyptians to these messengers of God. Though their names are not mentioned in the sacred text, yet tradition had preserved them in the Jewish records, from which St. Paul undoubtedly quotes, 2 Tim. iii. 8, where, speaking of the enemies of the gospel, he compares them to Jannes and Jambres who withstood Moses. That these names existed in the ancient Jewish records, their own writings show.

When all the circumstances of the case are considered, it seems strange that God should enter into any contest with such persons as the Egyptian magicians; but a little reflection will show the absolute necessity of this. The following judicious reasons have been given for this: 1. It was necessary that these magicians should be suffered to exert the utmost of their power against Moses, in order to clear him from the imputation of magic or sorcery; for as the notion of such an extraordinary art was very rife, not only among the Egyptians, but all other nations, if they had not entered into this strenuous competition with him, and been at length overcome by him, both the Hebrews and the Egyptians would have been apter to have attributed all his miracles to his skill in magic, than to the divine power.

2. It was necessary, in order to confirm the faith of the wavering and desponding Israelites, by making them see the difference between Moses acting by the power of God, and the sorcerers by that of Satan.

3. It was necessary, in order to preserve them afterwards from being seduced by any false miracles from the true worship of God.

To these a fourth reason may be added: God permitted this in mercy to the Egyptians, that they might see that the gods in whom they trusted were utterly incapable of saving them; that they could not undo or counteract one of the plagues sent on them by the power of Jehovah; the whole of their influence extending only to some superficial imitations of the genuine miracles wrought by Moses in the name of the true God. By these means it is natural to conclude that many of the Egyptians, and perhaps several of the servants of Pharaoh, were cured of their idolatry; though the king himself hardened his heart against the evidences which God brought before his eyes. Thus God is known by his judgments: for in every operation of his hand his design is to enlighten the minds of men, to bring them from false dependences to trust in himself alone. When his judgments are abroad in the earth, the inhabitants learn righteousness.

The plague of frogs threatened, 1, 2. The extent of this plague, 3, 4. Aaron commanded to stretch out his hand, with the rod, over the river and waters of Egypt, in consequence of which the frogs came, 5, 6. The magicians imitate this miracle, 7. Pharaoh entreats Moses to remove the frogs, and promises to let the people go, 8. Moses promises that they shall be removed from every part of Egypt, the river excepted, 9-11. Moses prays to God, and the frogs die throughout the land of Egypt, 12-14. Pharaoh, finding himself respited, hardens his heart, 15. The plague of lice on man and beast, 16, 17. The magicians attempt to imitate this miracle, but in vain, 18. They confess it to be the finger of God, and yet Pharaoh continues obstinate, 19. Moses is sent again to him to command him to let the people go, and in case of disobedience he is threatened with swarms of flies, 20, 21. A promise made that the land of Goshen, where the Israelites dwelt, should be exempted from this plague, 22, 23. The flies are sent, 24. Pharaoh sends for Moses and Aaron, and offers to permit them to sacrifice in the land, 25. They refuse, and desire to go three days' journey into the wilderness, 26, 27. Pharaoh consents to let them go a little way, provided they would entreat the Lord to remove the flies, 28. Moses consents, prays to God, and the flies are removed, 29-31. After which Pharaoh yet hardened his heart, and refused to let the people go, 32.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, Go unto Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Let my people go, * that they may serve me.

2 And if thou <sup>b</sup> refuse to let them go, behold, I will smite all thy borders with *frogs :

Verse 1. Let my people go] God, in great mercy to Pharaoh and the Egyptians, gives them notice of the evils he intended to bring upon them if they continued in their obstinacy. Having had therefore such warning, the evil might have been prevented by a timely humiliation and return to God.

Verse 2. If thou refuse] Nothing can be plainer than that Pharaoh had it still in his power to have dismissed the people, and that his refusal was the mere effect of his own wilful obstinacy.

With frogs] This word is of doubtful etymology : almost all interpreters, both ancient and modern, agree to render it as we do, though some think the crocodile is meant ; but these can never weigh against the conjoint testimony of the ancient Versions.

A frog is in itself a very harmless animal ; but to most people who use it not as an article of food, exceedingly loathsome. God, with equal ease, could have brought crocodiles, bears, lions, or tigers to have punished these people and their impious king, instead of frogs, lice, flies, &c. But had he used any of those formidable animals, the effect would have appeared so commensurate to the cause, that the hand of God might have been forgotten in the punishment ; and the people would have been exasperated without being humbled. In the present instance he shows the greatness of his power by making an animal devoid of every evil quality the means of a terrible affliction to his enemies. How easy it is both to the justice and mercy of God, to destroy or save by means of the most despicable and insignificant of instruments ! Though he is the Lord of Hosts he has no need of powerful armies, the ministry of angels, or the thunderbolts of justice, to punish a sinner or a sinful nation ; the frog or the fly in his hands is a sufficient instrument of vengeance.

Verse 3. The river shall bring forth frogs abundantly] The river Nile, which was an object of their adoration, was here one of the instruments of their punishment. The expression bring forth abundantly, not only shows the vast numbers of those animals, which should now infest the land, but it seems also to imply that all the spawn or ova of those animals which were already in the river and marshes, should be brought miraculously to a state of perfection. This supposition will appear the more natural when it is considered said, 'Entreat the LORD that he may take away the frogs from me, and from my people ; and I will let the people go, that they may do sacrifice unto the LORD.

9 And Moses said unto Pharaoh, 'Glory over me : <sup>k</sup> when shall I entreat for thee, and for thy servants, and for thy people, <sup>l</sup> to destroy the frogs from thee and thy houses, that they may remain in the river only ?

10 And he said, <sup>m</sup> To-morrow. And he said, Be it according to thy word ; that thou mayest know that <sup>n</sup> there is none like unto the LORD our God.

11 And the frogs shall depart from thee, and from thy houses, and from thy servants, and from thy people ; they shall remain in the river only.

12 And Moses and Aaron went out from Pharaoh : and Moses <sup>c</sup> cried unto the LORD, because of the frogs which he had brought against Pharaoh.

13 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses ; and the frogs died out of the houses, out of the villages, and out of the fields.

14 And they gathered them together upon heaps : and the land stank.

that the Nile was remarkable for breeding frogs, and such other animals as are principally engendered in such marshy places as must be left in the vicinity of the Nile after its annual inundations.

Into thine ovens] In various parts of the East, instead of what we call ovens they dig a hole in the ground, in which they insert a kind of earthen pot, which having sufficiently heated they stick their cakes to the inside, and when baked remove them and supply their places with others, and so on. To find such places full of frogs when they came to heat them in order to bake their bread, must have been both disgusting and distressing in the extreme.

Verse 5. Stretch forth thine hand—over the streams, over the rivers] The streams and rivers here may refer to the grand divisions of the Nile in the lower Egypt, which were at least seven, and to the canals by which these were connected ; as there were no other streams, &c., but what proceeded from this great river.

Verse 7. The magicians did so] A little juggling or dexterity of hand might have been quite sufficient for the imitation of this miracle, because frogs in abundance had already been produced ; and some of these kept in readiness might have been brought forward by the magicians, as proofs of their pretended power and equality in influence to Moses and Aaron.

Verse 9. Glory over me] These words have greatly puzzled commentators in general ; and it is not easy to assign their true meaning. The Septuagint render the words thus : Appoint unto me when I shall pray, &c. The Vulgate is exactly the same ; and in this sense almost all the Versions understood this place. We may conceive Moses addressing Pharaoh in this way : "That thou mayest be persuaded that Jehovah alone is the inflicter of these plagues, appoint the time when thou wouldst have the present calamity removed, and I will pray unto God, and thou shalt plainly see from his answer that this is no casual affliction, and that in continuing to harden thy heart and resist thou art sinning against God." Nothing could be a fuller proof that this plague was supernatural than the circumstance of Pharaoh's being permitted to assign himself the time of its being removed, and its removal at the intercession of Moses according to that appointment. [More recent criticism has failed to throw much light on this obscure passage. The expres-

* he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

16 And the LORD said unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Stretch out thy rod, and smite the dust of the land, that it may become lice throughout all the land of Egypt.

17 And they did so; for Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod, and smote the dust of the earth, and it became lice in man, and in beast; all the dust of the land became lice, throughout all the land of Egypt.

18 And the magicians did so with their enchantments, to bring forth lice, but they could not: so there were lice upon man, and upon beast.

19 Then the magicians said unto Pharaoh, This is the finger of God: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

20 And the LORD said unto Moses, Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh; (lo, he cometh forth to the water;) and say unto him, Thus sion, Glory over me, is probably elliptical; and it may be taken as one of respect, signifying, "I am at thy command."

Verse 14. They gathered them together upon heaps] The killing of the frogs was a mitigation of the punishment; but the leaving them to rot in the land was a continual proof that such a plague had taken place, and that the displeasure of the Lord still continued.

Cabmet conjectured that the plague of flies originated from the plague of frogs. God never works a miracle when the end can be accomplished by merely natural means; and in the operations of Divine Providence we always find that the greatest number of effects possible are accomplished by the fewest causes. As therefore the natural means for this fourth plague had been miraculously provided by the second, the Divine Being had a right to use the instruments which he had already prepared.

Verse 16. Smite the dust of the land, that it may become lice] If the vermin commonly designed by this name be intended, it must have been a very dreadful and afflicting plague to the Egyptians, and especially to their priests, who were obliged to shave the hair off every part of their bodies, and to wear a single tunic, that no vermin of this kind might be permitted to harbour about them. Of the nature of these insects it is not necessary to say much.

But learned men are not agreed on the signification of the original word kinnim. The Septuagint and the Vulgate render the word "gnats."

The circumstance of their being in man and in beast agrees so well with the nature of the acarus sanguisugus, commonly called the tick, belonging to the seventh order of insects called APTERA, that I am ready to conclude this is the insect meant. This animal buries both its sucker and head equally in man or beast; and can with very great difficulty be extracted before it is grown to its proper size, and filled with the blood and juices of the animal on which it preys. When fully grown, it has a glossy black oval body; not only horses, cows, and sheep, are infested with it in certain countries, but even the common people, especially those who labour in the field, in woods, &c. I know no insect to which the Hebrew term so properly applies. [It is now generally acknowledged that the third plague was a plague of gnats.]

Verse 18. The magicians did so] That is, They tried the utmost of their skill, either to produce these insects or to remove this plague; but they could not, no juggling could avail here, because insects must be produced which would stick to and infest themselves in man and beast, which no kind of trick could possibly imitate; and to remove them, as some would translate the passage, was to their power equally impossible. If the magicians even acted by spiritual agents, we find from this case that these agents had assigned limits, beyond which they could not go; for every agent in the universe is acting under the direction or control of the Almighty.

saith the LORD, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

21 Else, if thou wilt not let my people go, behold, I will send swarms of flies upon thee, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thy houses: and the houses of the Egyptians shall be full of swarms of flies, and also the ground whereon they are.

22 And I will sever in that day the land of Goshen, in which my people dwell, that no swarms of flies shall be there; to the end thou mayest know that I am the LORD in the midst of the earth.

23 And I will put a division between my people and thy people: to-morrow shall this sign be.

24 And the LORD did so: and there came a grievous swarm of flies into the house of Pharaoh, and into his servants' houses, and into all the land of Egypt: the land was corrupted by reason of the swarm of flies.

25 And Pharaoh called for Moses and for Aaron, and said, Go ye, sacrifice to your God in the land.

of noisome beasts, &c.—Ch. ix. 4, 6, 26. x. 23. xi. 6, 7. xii. 13.—1 Heb. a redemption.—Or, by to-morrow.—Ps. lxxviii. 45. cv. 31. Wisd. xvi. 9.—Or, destroyed.

Verse 19. This is the finger of God] That is, The power and skill of God are here evident. Probably before this the magicians supposed Moses and Aaron to be conjurers, like themselves; but now they are convinced that no man could do these miracles which these holy men did, unless God were with him. God permits evil spirits to manifest themselves in a certain way, that men may see that there is a spiritual world, and be on their guard against seduction. He at the same time shows that all these agents are under his control, that men may have confidence in his goodness and power.

Verse 21. Swarms of flies upon thee] It is not easy to ascertain the precise meaning of the original word hearob; as the word comes from arab, he mingled, it may be supposed to express a multitude of various sorts of insects. And if the conjecture be admitted that the putrid frogs became the occasion of this plague, then the supposition that a multitude of different kinds of insects is meant, will seem the more probable.

Bochart follows the Septuagint, explaining the original by dog-fly; which must be particularly hateful to the Egyptians, because they hold dogs in the highest veneration, and worshipped Anubis under the form of a dog. I am inclined to favour the literal construction of the word: for as ereb, chap. xii. 88, expresses that mixed multitude of different kinds of people who accompanied the Israelites in their departure from Egypt; so here, the same term being used, it may have been designed to express a multitude of different kinds of insects, such as flies, wasps, hornets, &c., &c. As to the objection against this opinion, drawn from ver. 31, there remained not one, it can have very little weight, when it is considered that this may as well be spoken of one of any of the different kinds, as of an individual of one species. [Neither the dog-fly nor the various insects mentioned by Dr. Clarke seem to fulfil the description so well as the Batta Orientalis, or beetle.]

Verse 22. I will sever in that day] This has been translated by some good critics, I will miraculously separate; so the Vulgate: "I will do a marvellous thing." And the Septuagint, I will render illustrious the land of Goshen in that day; and this he did, by exempting the land, and its inhabitants, the Israelites, from the plagues by which he afflicted the land of Egypt.

Verse 23. And I will put a division] A redemption, between my people and thy people; God hereby showing that he had redeemed them from those plagues to which he had abandoned the others.

Verse 24. The land was corrupted] Every thing was spoiled, and many of the inhabitants destroyed, being probably stung to death by these venomous insects. This seems to be intimated by the Psalmist, "He sent divers sorts of flies among them, which devoured them." Ps. lxxviii. 46.

Verse 25. Sacrifice to your God in the land.] That is, Ye 26 And Moses said, It is not meet so to do; for we shall sacrifice *the abomination of the Egyptians to the LORD our God: lo, shall we sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians before their eyes, and will they not stone us?

shall not leave Egypt, but I shall cause your worship to be tolerated here.

Verse 26. We shall sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians] This is, The animals which they hold sacred, and will not permit to be slain, are those which our customs require us to sacrifice to our God; and should we do this in Egypt the people would rise in a mass, and stone us to death. Perhaps few people were more superstitious than the Egyptians. Almost every production of nature was an object of their religious worship: the sun, moon, planets, stars, the river Nile, animals of all sorts, from the human being to the monkey, dog, cat, and ibis, and even the onions and leeks which grew in their gardens. Jupiter was adored by them under the form of a ram, Apollo under the form of a crow, Bacchus under that of a goat, and Juno under that of a heifer. The reason why the Egyptians worshipped those animals is given by Eusebius, viz.: that when the giants made war on the gods they were obliged to take refuge in Egypt, and assume the shapes or disguise themselves under different kinds of animals in order to escape. Jupiter hid himself in the body of a ram, Apollo in that of a crow, Bacchus in a goat, Diana in a cat, Juno in a white heifer, Venus in a fish, and Mercury in the bird ibis.

These animals therefore became sacred to them on account of the deities, who, as the fable reports, had taken refuge in them. Others suppose that the reason why the Egyptians would not sacrifice or kill those creatures was their belief in the doctrine of the metempsychosis, or transmigration of souls; for they feared lest in killing an animal they should kill a relative or a friend.

Verse 27. And sacrifice to the Lord—as he shall command us.] It is very likely that neither Moses nor Aaron knew as yet in what manner God would be worshipped; and they expected to receive a direct revelation from him relative to this subject, when they should come into the wilderness.

Verse 28. I will let you go—only ye shall not go very far away] Pharaoh relented because the hand of God was heavy upon him; but he was not willing to give up his gain. The Israelites were very profitable to him; hence he professed a willingness, first to tolerate their religion in the land or to permit them to go into the wilderness, so that they went not far away, and would soon return. How ready is foolish man when the hand of God presses him sore, to compound with his Maker! He will consent to give up some sins, provided God will permit him to keep others.

Entreat for me.] Exactly similar to the case of Simon Magus, who, like Pharaoh, fearing the divine judgments, begged an interest in the prayers of Peter.

Verse 31. The Lord did according to the word of Moses] How powerful is prayer! God permits his servant to prescribe even the manner and time in which he shall work.

He removed the swarms] Probably by means of a strong wind, which swept them into the sea.

Verse 32. Pharaoh hardened his heart at this time also] This hardening was the mere effect of his self-determining obstinacy. He preferred his gain to the will and command of Jehovah, and God made his obstinacy the means of showing forth his own power and providence in a supereminent degree.

1. As every false religion proves there is a true one, as a copy, however marred or imperfect, shows there was an

30 And Moses went out from Pharaoh, and <sup>e</sup>entreated the LORD.

31 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses; and he removed the swarms of flies from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people; there remained not one.

32 And Pharaoh <sup>f</sup>hardened his heart at this time also, neither would he let the people go.

original from which it was taken, so false miracles prove that there were genuine miracles, and that God chooses at particular times, for the most important purposes, to invert the established order of nature, and thus prove his omnipotence and universal agency. That the miracles wrought at this time were real we have the fullest proof.

2. No human power or ingenuity could produce such frogs as annoyed the land of Egypt. This also was a real, not an imaginary, plague.

3. The lice both on man and beast through the whole land, and the innumerable swarms of flies, gave such proofs of their reality as to put the truth of these miracles out of question for ever.

4. To superficial observers only do "Moses and the magicians appear to be nearly matched." The power of God was shown in producing and removing the plagues. In certain cases the magicians imitated the production of a plague, but they had no power to remove any. They could not seem to remove the bloody colour, nor the putrescency from the waters through which the fish were destroyed, though they could imitate the colour itself; they could not remove the frogs, the lice, or swarms of flies, though they could imitate the former and latter; they could by dexterity of hand or diabolic influence produce serpents, but they could not bring one forward that could swallow up the rod of Aaron. In every respect they fell infinitely short of the power and wonderful energy evidenced in the miracles of Moses and Aaron. The opposition therefore of those men served only as a foil to set off the excellence of that power by which these messengers of God acted.

5. The courage, constancy, and faith of Moses, are worthy of the most serious consideration. Had he not been fully satisfied of the truth and certainty of his divine mission, he could not have encountered such a host of difficulties; had he not been certain of the issue, he could not have persevered amidst so many discouraging circumstances; and had he not had a deep acquaintance with God, his faith in every trial must have necessarily failed. So strong was this grace in him that he could even pledge his Maker to the performance of works concerning which he had not as yet consulted him! He therefore let Pharaoh fix the very time on which he would wish to have the plague removed; and when this was done, he went to God by faith and prayer to obtain this new miracle; and God in the most exact and circumstantial manner fulfilled the word of his servant.

6. From all this let us learn that there is a God who worketh in the earth; that universal nature is under his control; that he can alter, suspend, counteract, or invert its general laws whensoever he pleases; and that he can save or destroy by the most feeble and most contemptible instruments. We should therefore deeply reverence his eternal power and Godhead, and look with respect on every creature he has made, as the meanest of them may, in his hand, become the instrument of our salvation or our ruin.

7. Let us not imagine that God has so bound himself to work by general laws, that those destructions cannot take place which designate a particular providence. Pharaoh and the Egyptians are confounded, afflicted, routed, and ruined, while the land of Goshen and the Israelites are free from every plague! No blood appears in their streams; no frogs, lice, nor flies, in all their borders! They trusted in the true God, and could not be confounded.

CHAPTER IX.

The Lord sends Moses to Pharaoh to inform him that, if he did not let the Israelites depart, a destructive pestilence should be sent among his cattle, 1-3; while the cattle of the Israelites should be preserved, 4. The next day this pestilence, which was the fifth plague, is sent, and all the cattle of the Egyptians die, 5, 6. Though Pharaoh finds that not one of the cattle of the Israelites had died, yet, through hardness of heart, he refuses to let the people go, 7. Moses and Aaron are commanded to sprinkle handfuls of ashes from the furnace, that the sixth plague, that of boils and blains, might come on man and beast, 8, 9; which having done, the plague takes place, 10. The magicians cannot stand before this plague, which they can neither imitate nor remove, 11. Pharaoh's heart is again hardened, 12. God's awful message to Pharaoh, with the threat of more severe plagues than before, 13-17. The seventh plague of rein, hail, and fire threatened, 18. The Egyptians commanded to house their cattle that they might not be destroyed, 19. Those who feared the word of the Lord brought home their servants and cattle, and those who did not regard that word left their cattle and servants in the fields, 20, 21. The storm of hail, thunder, and lightning takes place, 22-24. It nearly desolates the whole land of Egypt, 25, while the land of Goshen escapes, 26. Pharaoh confesses his sin, and begs an interest in the prayers of Moses and Aaron, 27, 28. Moses promises to intercede for him, and while he promises that the storm shall cease, he foretells the continuing obstinacy of both himself and his servants, 29, 30. The flax and barley, being in a state of maturity, are destroyed by the tempest, 31; while the wheat and the rye, not being grown up, are preserved, 32. Moses obtains a cessation of the storm, 33. Pharaoh and his servants seeing this, harden their hearts, and refuse to let the people go, 34, 35.

THEN the LORD said unto Moses, "Go in unto Pharaoh, and tell him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

2 For if thou<sup>b</sup> refuse to let them go, and wilt hold them still,

3 Behold, the "hand of the LORD is upon thy cattle which is in the field, upon the horses, upon the asses, upon the camels, upon the oxen, and upon the sheep: there shall be a very grievous murrain.

4 And "the LORD shall sever between the cattle of Israel and the cattle of Egypt: and there shall nothing die of all that is the children's of Israel.

5 And the LORD appointed a set time, saying, To-morrow the LORD shall do this thing in the land.

6 And the LORD did that thing on the morrow, and "all the cattle of Egypt died: but of the cattle of the children of Israel died not one.

7 And Pharaoh sent, and, behold, there was not one of the cattle of the Israelites dead. And "the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, and he did not let the people go.

8 And the LORD said unto Moses and unto Aaron, Take to you handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it toward the heaven in the sight of Pharaoh.

9 And it shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be "a boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast, throughout all the land of Egypt.

Verse 1. The LORD God of the Hebrews] It is very likely that the term LORD, Yehovah, is used here to point out particularly his eternal power and Godhead; and that the term God, Elohey, is intended to be understood in the sense of Supporter, Defender, Protector, &c. Thus saith the self-existent, omnipotent, and eternal Being, the Supporter and Defender of the Hebrews, "Let my people go, that they may worship me."

Verse 3. The hand of the Lord] The power of God manifested in judgment.

Upon the horses] This is the first place the horse is mentioned; a creature for which Egypt and Arabia were always famous. The original word is supposed to signify to be active, brisk, or lively, all which are proper appellatives of the horse, especially in Arabia and Egypt. Because of their activity and swiftness they were sacrificed and dedicated to the sun, and perhaps it was principally on this account that God prohibited the use of them among the Israelites.

A very grievous murrain.] The murrain is a very contagious disease among cattle, the symptoms of which are a hanging down and swelling of the head, abundance of gum in the eyes, rattling in the throat, difficulty of breathing, palpitation of the heart, staggering, a hot breath, and a shining tongue; which symptoms prove that a general inflammation has taken place.

Verse 5. To-morrow the Lord shall do this] By "thus foretelling the evil, he showed his prescience and power; and from this both the Egyptians and Hebrews must see that the mortality that ensued was no casualty, but the effect of a predetermined purpose in the divine justice.

Verse 6. All the cattle of Egypt died] That is, All the cattle that did die belonged to the Egyptians, but not one died that belonged to the Israelites, ver. 4 and 6. That the whole stock of cattle belonging to the Egyptians did not die we have the fullest proof, because there were cattle both to be killed and saved alive in the ensuing plague, ver. 19-25. By this judgment the Egyptians must see the vanity of the whole of their national worship, when they found the animals which they not only held sacred, but deified, slain without distinction among the common herd, by a pestilence sent from the hand of Jehovah.

Verse 7. And Pharaoh sent, &c.] Probably designing to replace the lost cattle of the Egyptians with those of the Israelites.

Verse 8. Handfuls of ashes of the furnace] As one part of the oppression of the Israelites consisted in their labour in the brick-kilns, some have observed a congruity between the crime and the punishment. The furnaces, in the labour of which they oppressed the Hebrews, now yielded the instruments of their punishment; for every particle of those ashes, formed by unjust and oppressive labour, seemed to be a boil or a blain on the tyrannic king and his cruel and hard-hearted people.

Verse 9. Shall be a boil] This word is generally expounded, an inflammatory swelling, a burning boil; one of the most poignant afflictions, not immediately mortal, that can well affect the surface of the human body. If a single boil on any part of the body throws the whole system into a fever, what anguish must a multitude of them on the body at the same time occasion.

Breaking forth with blains] It seems to have been a disorder of an uncommon kind, and hence it is called by way of distinction, the botch of Egypt, Deut. xxviii. 27, perhaps never known before in that or any other country.

Verse 11. The boil was upon the magicians] They could not produce a similar malady by throwing ashes in the air; and they could neither remove the plague from the people, nor from their own tormented flesh. Whether they perished

10 And they took ashes of the furnace, and stood before Pharaoh; and Moses sprinkled it up toward heaven; and it became <sup>a</sup> a boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast.

11 And the <sup>b</sup> magicians could not stand before Moses, because of the boils; for the boil was upon the magicians, and upon all the Egyptians.

12 And the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he hearkened not unto them; <sup>c</sup> as the LORD had spoken unto Moses.

13 And the LORD said unto Moses, <sup>d</sup> Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

14 For I will at this time send all my plagues upon thine heart, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people; <sup>e</sup> that thou mayest know that there is none like me in all the earth.

15 For now I will <sup>f</sup> stretch out my hand, that I may smite thee and thy people with pestilence: and thou shalt be cut off from the earth.

16 And in very deed for <sup>g</sup> this cause have I <sup>h</sup> raised thee up, for to show in thee my power; and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth.

17 As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go?

in this plague we know not, but they are no more mentioned. If they were not destroyed by this awful judgment, they at least left the field, and no longer contended with these messengers of God. The triumph of God's power was now complete, and both the Hebrews and Egyptians must see that there was neither might, nor wisdom, nor counsel against the Lord; and that, as universal nature acknowledged his power, devils and men must fail before him.

Verse 15. For now I will stretch out my hand] In the Hebrew the verbs are in the past tense, and not in the future, as our translation improperly expresses them, by which means a contradiction appears in the text; for neither Pharaoh nor his people were smitten by a pestilence, nor was he by any kind of mortality cut off from the earth. It is true the first-born were slain by a destroying angel, and Pharaoh himself was drowned in the Red Sea; but these judgments do not appear to be referred to in this place. If the words be translated, as they ought, in the subjunctive mood, or in the past instead of the future, this seeming contradiction to facts, as well as all ambiguity, will be avoided: For if now I HAD STRETCHED OUT my hand, and had smitten thee and thy people with the pestilence, thou SHOULDST HAVE BEEN cut off from the earth. 16. But truly on this very account, have I caused thee to SUBSIST, that I MIGHT cause thee to see my power, and that my name MIGHT be declared throughout all the earth.

Judicious critics of almost all creeds have agreed to translate the original as above, a translation which it not only can bear, but requires, and which is in strict conformity to both the Septuagint and Targum. Neither the Hebrew heemad-ticha, I have caused thee to stand; nor the apostle's translation of it, Rom. ix. 17, I have raised thee; nor that of the Septuagint, on this account art thou preserved, viz., in the past plagues; can countenance that most exceptionable meaning put on the words by certain commentators, viz., "That God ordained or appointed Pharaoh from all eternity, by certain means, to this end; that he made him to exist in time; that he raised him to the throne; promoted him to that high honour and dignity; that he preserved him, and did not cut him off as yet; that he strengthened and hardened his heart; irritated, provoked and stirred him up against his people Israel, and suffered him to go all the lengths he did go in his obstinacy and rebellion; all which was done to show in him his power in destroying him in the Red Sea. The sum of which is, that this man was raised up by God in every sense for God to show his power in his destruction." So man speaks; thus God hath not spoken.

18 Behold, to morrow about this time I will cause it to rain a very grievous hail, such as hath not been in Egypt since the foundation thereof even until now.

19 Send therefore now, and gather thy cattle, and all that thou hast in the field; for upon every man and beast which shall be found in the field, and shall not be brought home, the hail shall come down upon them, and they shall die.

20 He that feared the word of the LORD among the servants of Pharaoh made his servants and his cattle flee into the houses:

21 And he that regarded not the word of the LORD left his servants and his cattle in the field.

22 And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch forth thine hand toward heaven, that there may be <sup>i</sup> hail in all the land of Egypt, upon man, and upon beast, and upon every herb of the field, throughout the land of Egypt.

23 And Moses stretched forth his rod toward heaven: and <sup>j</sup> the LORD sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground; and the LORD rained hail upon the land of Egypt.

24 So there was hail, and fire mingled with the hail, very grievous, such as there was none like it in all the land of Egypt since it became a nation.

<sup>i</sup> Heb. set not his heart unto. Ch. vii. 23.—<sup>j</sup> Rev. xvi. 21.—<sup>k</sup> Josh. x. 11. Ps. xlviii. 18. lxxviii. 47. cv. 32. cxlviii. 8. Isa. xxx. 30. Ezek. xxxviii. 22. Rev. viii. 7.

Verse 17. As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people] So it appears that at this time he might have submitted, and thus prevented his own destruction.

Verse 18. To morrow about this time] The time of this plague is marked thus circumstantially to show Pharaoh that Jehovah was Lord of heaven and earth, and that the water, the fire, the earth, and the air, which were all objects of Egyptian idolatry, were the creatures of his power, and subservient to his will; and that, far from being able to help them, they were now, in the hands of God, instruments of their destruction.

To rain a very grievous hail] To rain hail may appear to some superficial observers as an unphilosophical mode of expression, but nothing can be more correct. "Drops of rain falling through a cold region of the atmosphere are frozen and converted into hail;" and thus the hail is produced by rain. When it begins to fall it is rain; when it is falling it is converted into hail; thus it is literally true that it rains hail. The farther a hail-stone falls the larger it generally is, because in its descent it meets with innumerable particles of water, which, becoming attached to it, are also frozen, and thus its bulk is continually increasing till it reaches the earth. In the case in question, if natural means were at all used, we may suppose a highly electrified state of an atmosphere loaded with vapours, which, becoming condensed and frozen, and having a considerable space to fall through, were of an unusually large size. While God has such artillery at his command, how soon may he desolate a country or a world!

Verse 19. Send—now, and gather thy cattle] So in the midst of judgment, God remembered mercy. The miracle should be wrought, that they might know he was the Lord; but all the lives both of men and beasts might have been saved, had Pharaoh and his servants taken the warning so mercifully given them.

Verse 23. The LORD sent thunder] Voices; but loud, repeated peals of thunder are meant.

And the fire ran along upon the ground] It was not a sudden flash of lightning, but a devouring fire, walking through every part, destroying both animals and vegetables; and its progress was irresistible.

Verse 24. Hail, and fire mingled with the hail] It is generally allowed that the electric fluid is essential to the formation of hail. On this occasion it was supplied in a supernatural abundance; for streams of fire seem to have accompanied the descending hail, so that herbs and trees, beasts and men, were all destroyed by them.

5 And they shall cover the <sup>a</sup> face of the earth, that one cannot be able to see the earth: and <sup>b</sup> they shall eat the residue of that which is escaped, which remaineth unto you from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth for you out of the field:

6 And they <sup>c</sup> shall fill thy houses, and the houses of all thy servants, and the houses of all the Egyptians; which neither thy fathers, nor thy fathers' fathers have seen, since the day that they were upon the earth unto this day. And he turned himself, and went out from Pharaoh.

7 And Pharaoh's servants said unto him, How long shall this man be <sup>a</sup> a snare unto us? let the men go, that they may serve the LORD their God: knowest thou not yet that Egypt is destroyed?

8 And Moses and Aaron were brought again unto Pharaoh: and he said unto them, Go, serve the LORD your God: but <sup>a</sup> who are they that shall go?

9 And Moses said, We will go with our young and with our old, with our sons and with our daughters, with our flocks and with our herds will we go; for <sup>a</sup> we must hold a feast unto the LORD.

10 And he said unto them, Let the LORD be so with you, as I will let you go, and your little ones: look to it; for evil is before you.

11 Not so: go now ye that are men, and serve the LORD; for that ye did desire. And they were driven out from Pharaoh's presence.

12 And the LORD said unto Moses, <sup>a</sup> Stretch out thine hand over the land of Egypt for the locusts, that they may come up upon the land of Egypt, and <sup>b</sup> eat every herb of the land, even all that the hail hath left.

13 And Moses stretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, and the LORD brought an east wind upon the land all that day, and all that night; and when it was morning, the east wind brought the locusts.

14 And <sup>a</sup> the locusts went up over all the land of Egypt, and rested in all the coasts of Egypt: very grievous were they; <sup>b</sup> before them there were no such as they, neither after them shall be such.

15 For they <sup>a</sup> covered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened; and they <sup>b</sup> did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left: and there remained not any green thing in the trees, or in the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt.

16 Then Pharaoh <sup>a</sup> called for Moses and Aaron in haste; and he said, <sup>a</sup> I have sinned against the LORD your God, and against you.

17 Now therefore forgive, I pray thee, my sin only this once, and <sup>a</sup> entreat the LORD your God, that he may take away from me this death only.

18 And he <sup>a</sup> went out from Pharaoh, and entreated the LORD.

plied, became great, mighty, &c., because of the immense swarms of these animals by which different countries, especially the East, are infested. The locust, in entomology, belongs to a genus of insects known among naturalists by the term GRYLLE; and includes three species, crickets, grasshoppers, and those commonly called locusts; and as they multiply faster than any other animal in creation, they are properly entitled to the name arbel, which might be translated the numerous or multiplied insect. The locust has a large open mouth; and in its two jaws it has four incisive teeth, which traverse each other like scissors, being calculated, from their mechanism, to gripe or cut.

The descriptions given by travellers show that God's army, described by the prophet Joel, chap. ii., was innumerable swarms of locusts, to which their accounts exactly agree.

Verse 5. They shall cover the face of the earth] They sometimes cover the whole ground to the depth of six or eight inches.

Verse 7. How long shall this man be a snare unto us?] As there is no noun in the text, the pronoun zeh may either refer to the Israelites, to the plague by which they were then afflicted, or to Moses and Aaron, the instruments used by the Most High in their chastisement. The Vulgate translates, "How long shall we suffer this scandal or reproach?"

Let the men go, that they may serve the Lord their God] Much of the energy of several passages is lost in translating Jehovah by the term Lord. The Egyptians had their gods, and they supposed that the Hebrews had a god like unto their own; that this Jehovah required their services, and would continue to afflict Egypt till his people were permitted to worship him in his own way.

Egypt is destroyed?] This last plague had nearly ruined the whole land.

Verse 8. Who are they that shall go?] Though the Egyptians, about fourscore years before, wished to destroy the Hebrews, yet they found them now so profitable to the state that they were unwilling to part with them.

Verse 9. We will go with our young and with our old, &c.] As a feast was to be celebrated to the honour of Jehovah, all who were partakers of his bounty and providential kindness must go and perform their part in the solemnity. The men and the women must make the feast, the children must witness it, and the cattle must be taken along with them to furnish the sacrifices necessary on this occasion. This must have appeared reasonable to the Egyptians, because it was their own custom in their religious assemblies. Men, women, and children attended them, often to the amount of several hundred thousand.

Verse 10. Let the Lord be so with you] This is an obscure sentence. Some suppose that Pharaoh meant it as a curse, as if he had said, "May your God be as surely with you, as I shall let you go!" For as he purposed not to permit them to go, so he wished them as much of the divine help as they should have of his permission.

Look—for evil is before you] See ye that evil is before your faces—if you attempt to go, ye shall meet with the punishment ye deserve. Probably Pharaoh intended to insinuate that they had some sinister designs, and that they wished to go in a body that they might the better accomplish their purpose; but if they had no such designs, they would be contented for the males to go, and leave their wives and children behind; for he well knew if the men went and left their families they would infallibly return, but that if he permitted them to take their families with them, they would undoubtedly make their escape; therefore he says, ver. 11, Go now ye that are men, and serve the Lord.

Verse 13. The Lord brought an east wind] As locusts abounded in those countries, and particularly in Æthiopia, and more especially at this time of the year, God had no need to create new swarms for this purpose; all that was requisite was to cause such a wind to blow as would bring those which already existed over the land of Egypt. The miracle in this business was the bringing the locusts at the appointed time, and causing the proper wind to blow for that purpose; and then taking them away after a similar manner.

Verse 14. Before them there were no such locusts, &c.] They exceeded all that went before, or were since, in number, and in the devastations they produced. Probably both these things are intended in the passage.

Verse 17. Forgive, I pray thee, my sin only this once] What a strange case! And what a series of softening and hardening, of sinning and repenting! Had he not now another opportunity of returning to God? But the love of gain, and the gratification of his own self-will and obstinacy, finally prevailed.

19 And the LORD turned a mighty strong west wind, which took away the locusts, and <sup>a</sup>cast them <sup>b</sup>into the Red Sea; there remained not one locust in all the coasts of Egypt.

20 But the LORD <sup>a</sup>hardened Pharaoh's heart, so that he would not let the children of Israel go.

21 And the LORD said unto Moses, <sup>a</sup>"Stretch out thine hand toward heaven, that there may be darkness over all the land of Egypt, <sup>a</sup>even darkness which may be felt.

22 And Moses stretched forth his hand toward heaven; and there was a <sup>a</sup>'thick darkness in all the land of Egypt three days:

23 They saw not one another, neither rose any from his place for three days: <sup>a</sup>'but all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings.

24 And Pharaoh called unto Moses, and <sup>b</sup>said,

—<sup>e</sup> Heb. that one may feel darkness.—[Ps. cv. 28. Wisd. xvii. 2, &c.]

[Verse 19. A mighty strong west wind.] Literally, the wind of the sea; the wind that blew from the Mediterranean Sea, which lay north-west of Egypt, which had the Red Sea on the east. Here again God works by natural means; he brought the locusts by the east wind, and took them away by the west or north-west wind, which carried them to the Red Sea, where they were drowned.

[The Red Sea.] The weedy sea; so called, as some suppose, from the great quantity of algæ or sea-weed which grows in it and about its shores. Mr. Bruce declares that he never saw in it a weed of any kind; and supposes it has its name suph from the vast quantity of coral which grows in it, as trees and plants do on land. In the Septuagint it is called the Red Sea, probably from Edom or Esau, whose territories extended to its coasts; for it is well known that the word Edom in Hebrew signifies red or ruddy. The Red Sea, called also the Arabic Gulf, separates Arabia from Upper Æthiopia and part of Egypt. It is computed to be three hundred and fifty leagues in length from Suez to the Straits of Babolmandel, and is about forty leagues in breadth. It is not very tempestuous, and the winds usually blow from north to south, and from south to north, six months in the year; and, like the monsoons of India, invariably determine the seasons of sailing into or out of this sea.

[Verse 21. Darkness which may be felt.] Probably this was occasioned by a superabundance of aqueous vapours floating in the atmosphere, which were so thick as to prevent the rays of the sun from penetrating through them; an extraordinarily thick mist supernaturally, i.e. miraculously brought on. An awful emblem of the darkened state of the Egyptians and their king. [Probably the darkness was the result of the chamsin, a hot wind, which is always attended with a thickness of the air.]

[Verse 23. They saw not one another.] So deep was the obscurity, and probably such was its nature, that no artificial light could be procured; as the thick clammy vapours would prevent lamps, &c., from burning, or if they even could be ignited, the light, through the palpable obscurity, could diffuse itself to no distance from the burning body.

[All the children of Israel had light.] By thus distinguishing the Israelites, God showed the Egyptians that the darkness was produced by his power; that he sent it in judgment against them for their cruelty to his people; that because they trusted in him they were exempted from these plagues; that in the displeasure of such a Being his enemies had every thing to fear, and in his approbation his followers had every thing to hope.

[Verse 24. Only let your flocks and your herds be stayed.] Pharaoh cannot get all he wishes; and as he sees it impossible to contend with Jehovah, he now consents to give up the Israelites, their wives, and their children, provided he may keep their flocks and their herds. The cruelty of this demand is not more evident than its avariance. Had six hundred thousand men, besides women and children, gone three days' journey into the wilderness without their cattle, they must have inevitably perished, being without milk for their little ones, and animal food for their own sustenance, in a place where little as a substitute could possibly be found. It is evident from this that Pharaoh intended the total destruction of the whole Israelitish host.

Go ye, serve the LORD; only let your flocks and your herds be stayed: let your <sup>a</sup>'little ones also go with you.

25 And Moses said, Thou must give <sup>a</sup>'us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the LORD our God.

26 Our cattle also shall go with us; there shall not an hoof be left behind; for thereof must we take to serve the LORD our God; and we know not with what we must serve the LORD, until we come thither.

27 But the LORD <sup>a</sup>hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he would not let them go.

28 And Pharaoh said unto him, Get thee from me, take heed to thyself, see my face no more; for in that day thou seest my face thou shalt die.

29 And Moses said, Thou hast spoken well, <sup>a</sup>'I will see thy face again no more.

—<sup>a</sup> Ch. viii. 22. Wisd. xviii. 1.—<sup>b</sup> Ver. 8.—<sup>c</sup> Ver. 10.—<sup>d</sup> Heb. into our hands.—<sup>e</sup> Ver. 20. Ch. iv. 21. xiv. 4, 8.—<sup>f</sup> Heb. xi. 27.

[Verse 26. We know not with what we must serve the Lord, &c.] The law was not yet given; the ordinances concerning the different kinds of sacrifices and offerings not known. What kind and what number of animals God should require to be sacrificed, even Moses himself could not as yet tell. He therefore very properly insists on taking the whole of their herds with them and not leaving even one hoof behind.

[Verse 27. The Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart.] He had yet another miracle to work for the complete conviction of the Egyptians and triumph of his people; and till that was wrought he permitted the natural obstinacy of Pharaoh's haughty heart to have its full sway, after each resistance of the gracious influence, which was intended to soften and bring him to repentance.

[Verse 28. See my face no more.] Hitherto Pharaoh had left the way open for negotiation; but now in wrath against Jehovah, he dismisses his ambassador, and threatens him with death if he should attempt any more to come into his presence.

[Verse 29. I will see thy face again no more.] It is very likely that this was the last interview that Moses had with Pharaoh. It is true that in ver. 31 of chap. xii. it is stated that Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron by night, and ordered them to leave Egypt, but the words may imply no more than that Moses and Aaron received such a message from Pharaoh. If, however, this mode of interpreting these passages should not seem satisfactory to any, he may understand the words of Moses thus: I will see thy face—seek thy favour, no more in behalf of my people, which was literally true; for if Moses did appear any more before Pharaoh, it was not as a supplicant, but merely as the ambassador of God, to denounce his judgments by giving him the final determination of Jehovah relative to the destruction of the first-born.

1. Multitudes who condemn the conduct of this miserable Egyptian king, act in a similar manner. They relent when smarting under God's judgments, but harden their hearts when these judgments are removed. To such God says by his prophet, Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more. Reader, are not the vows of God upon thee? Often when afflicted in thyself or family hast thou not said, Now therefore forgive, I pray thee, my sin only THIS ONCE, and take away from me this death ONLY. And yet when thou hadst respite, didst thou not harden thy heart, and with returning health and strength didst thou not return unto iniquity? Be not deceived; God is not mocked; he warns thee, but he will not be mocked by thee. What thou sowest that thou must reap.

2. Even in the face of God's judgment the spirit of avarice will make its requisitions! Only let your flocks and your herds be stayed, says Pharaoh. The love of gain was the ruling principle of this man's soul, and he chooses desperately to contend with the justice of his Maker, rather than give up his bosom-sin! Reader, is this not thy own case? If God were to give the history of every man who hardens himself from his fear, how many Pharaoh-like cases should we have on record! But a day is coming in which the secrets of every heart shall be revealed, and the history of every man's life laid open to an assembled world.

CHAPTER XI.

God purposes to bring another plague upon Pharaoh, after which he should let the Israelites go, 1. They are commanded to ask gold and silver from the Egyptians, 2. The estimation in which Moses was held among the Egyptians, 3. Moses predicts the destruction of the first-born of the Egyptians, 4-6, and Israel's protection, 7. On seeing which, Pharaoh and his servants entreat the Hebrews to depart, 8. The prediction of his previous obstinacy, 9, 10.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, Yet will I bring one plague more upon Pharaoh, and upon Egypt; afterwards he will let you go hence: *when he shall let you go, he shall surely thrust you out hence altogether.

2 Speak now in the ears of the people, and let every man borrow of his neighbour, and every woman of her neighbour, <sup>b</sup>jewels of silver, and jewels of gold.

3 <sup>c</sup>And the LORD gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians. Moreover the man <sup>d</sup>Moses was very great in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people.

4 And Moses said, Thus saith the LORD, <sup>e</sup>About midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt:

5 And <sup>f</sup>'all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, from the first-born of Pharaoh that sitteth upon his throne, even unto the first-born of the maid-servant that is behind the mill; and all the first-born of beasts.

7 <sup>b</sup>But against any of the children of Israel <sup>c</sup>'shall not a dog move his tongue, against man or beast: that ye may know how that the LORD doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel.

8 And <sup>d</sup>'all these thy servants shall come down unto me, and bow down themselves unto me, saying, Get thee out, and all the people <sup>e</sup>that follow thee: and after that I will go out. And he went out from Pharaoh in <sup>f</sup>'a great anger.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, <sup>g</sup>Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you; that <sup>h</sup>'my wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt.

10 And Moses and Aaron did all these wonders before Pharaoh: <sup>i</sup>and the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, so that he would not let the children of Israel go out of his land.

death, but that they should depart without any kind of molestation. For though there must be much bustle and comparative confusion in the sudden removal of six hundred thousand persons with their wives, children, goods, cattle, &c., yet this should produce so little alarm that even the dogs should not bark at them, which it would be natural to expect, as the principal stir was to be about midnight.

After giving this general explanation from others, I may be permitted to hazard a conjecture of my own. And, 1. Is it not probable that the allusion is here made to a well-known custom of dogs howling when any mortality is in a village, street, or even house, where such animals are? There are innumerable instances of the faithful house-dog howling when a death happens in a family, as if distressed on the account, feeling for the loss of his benefactor; but their apparent presaging such an event by their cries, as some will have it, may be attributed, not to any prescience, but to the exquisite keenness of their scent. If the words may be understood in this way, then the great cry through the whole land of Egypt may refer to this very circumstance: as dogs were sacred among them, and consequently religiously preserved, they must have existed in great multitudes. 2. We know that one of their principal deities was Osiris, whose son, worshipped under the form of a dog, or a man with a dog's head, was called the barking Anubis. May he not be represented as deploring a calamity which he had no power to prevent among his worshippers, nor influence to inflict punishment upon those who set his deity at naught. Hence, while there was a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, because of the mortality in every house, yet among the Israelites there was no death, consequently no dog moved his tongue to howl for their calamity; nor could the object of the Egyptians' worship inflict any similar punishment on the worshippers of Jehovah.

In honour of this dog-god there was a city called Anubis in Egypt, by the Greeks called Cynopolis, the city of the dog, the same that is now called Menich; in this he had a temple, and dogs, which were sacred to him, were here fed with consecrated victuals. [The "conjecture" hazarded in the note is rather far-fetched. The expression in the text is simply proverbial.]

Verse 1. The Lord said unto Moses] Calmet contends that this should be read in the preterpluperfect tense, for the LORD HAD said unto Moses, as the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth verses appear to have been spoken when Moses had the interview with Pharaoh mentioned in the preceding chapter; see the note there on ver. 29. If therefore this chapter be connected with the preceding, <sup>a</sup>as it should be, and the first three verses not only read in the past tense but also in a parenthesis, the sense will be much more distinct and clear than it now appears.

Verse 2. Let every man borrow] For a proper correction of the strange mistranslation of the word shaal in this verse, see the note on chap. iii. 22.

Verse 3. The man Moses was very great] Had he not appeared in their sight as a very extraordinary person, whom it would have been very dangerous to molest, we may naturally conclude that some violence would long ere this have been offered to his person.

Verse 4. About midnight will I go out] Whether God did this by the ministry of a good or of an evil angel is a matter of little importance, though some commentators have greatly magnified it. Both kinds of angels are under his power and jurisdiction, and he may employ them as he pleases. Such a work of destruction as the slaying of the first-born is supposed to be more proper for a bad than for a good angel. But the works of God's justice are not less holy and pure than the works of his mercy; and the highest archangel may, with the utmost propriety, be employed in either.

Verse 5. The first-born of Pharaoh, &c.] From the heir to the Egyptian throne to the son of the most abject slave, or the principal person in each family.

The maid-servant that is behind the mill] The meanest slaves were employed in this work. In many parts of the East they still grind all their corn with a kind of portable mill-stones, the upper one of which is turned round by a sort of lever fixed in the rim.

Verse 6. There shall be a great cry] Of the dying and for the dead.

Verse 7. Not a dog move his tongue] This passage has been generally understood as a proverbial expression, intimating that the Israelites should not only be free from this

Thus, as in the first plagues, their magicians were confounded, so in this last their gods were put to flight. Should it be objected, that to consider the passage in this light would be to acknowledge the being and deity of the fictitious Anubis, it may be answered, that in the sacred writings it is not an uncommon thing to see the idol acknowledged in order to show its nullity, and the more forcibly to express contempt for it, for its worshippers, and for its worship. Thus Isaiah, chap. xli. 1, 2; and Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 27.

Verse 8. And all these thy servants shall come] A prediction of what actually took place.

Verse 9. Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you] Though shall and will are both reputed signs of the future tense, and by many indiscriminately used, yet they make a most essential difference in composition in a variety of cases.

For instance, if we translate lo yishma, Pharaoh SHALL not hearken, as in our text, the word shall strongly intimates that it was impossible for Pharaoh to hearken, and that God had placed him under that impossibility; but if we translate as we should do, Pharaoh WILL not hearken, it alters the case most essentially, and agrees with the many passages in the preceding chapters, where he is said to have hardened his own heart; as this proves that he, without any impulsive necessity, obstinately refused to attend to what Moses said or threatened; and that God took the advantage of this obstinacy to work another miracle, and thus multiply his wonders in the land.

Pharaoh WILL not hearken unto you; and because he would not God hardened his heart—left him to his own obstinacy.

CHAPTER XII.

The month Abib is to be considered as the commencement of the year, 1, 2. The PASSOVER instituted; the lamb or kid to be used on the occasion to be taken from the flock the tenth day of the month, and each family to provide one, 3, 4. The lamb or kid to be a male of the first year without blemish, 5. To be killed on the fourteenth day, 6, and the blood to be sprinkled on the side-posts and lintels of the doors, 7. The flesh to be prepared by roasting, and not to be eaten either sodden or raw, 8, 9; and no part of it to be left till the morning, 10. The people to eat it with their loins girded, &c., as persons prepared for a journey, 11. Why called the PASSOVER, 12. The blood sprinkled on the door-posts, &c., to be a token to them of preservation from the destroying angel, 13. The fourteenth day of the month Abib to be a feast for ever, 14. Unleavened bread to be eaten seven days, 15. This also to be observed in all their generations for ever, 17-20. Moses instructs the elders of Israel how they are to offer the lamb and sprinkle his blood, and for what purpose, 21-23. He binds them to instruct their children in the nature of this rite, 24-27. The children of Israel act as commanded, 28. All the first-born of Egypt slain, 29, 30. Pharaoh and the Egyptians urge Moses, Aaron, and the Israelites to depart, 31-33. They prepare for their departure, and get gold, silver, and raiment from the Egyptians, 34-36. They journey from Rameses to Succoth, in number six hundred thousand men, besides women and children, and a mixed multitude, 37, 38. They bake unleavened cakes of the dough they brought with them out of Egypt, 39. The time in which they sojourned in Egypt, 40-42. Different ordinances concerning the PASSOVER, 43-49; which are all punctually observed by the people, who are brought out of Egypt the same day, 50-51.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, saying,

2 *This month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you.

3 Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a <sup>b</sup> lamb, according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for an house:

Verse 2. This month shall be unto you the beginning of months] It is supposed that God now changed the commencement of the Jewish year. The month to which this verse refers, the month Abib, answers to a part of our March and April; whereas it is supposed that previously to this the year began with Tisri, which answers to a part of our September; for in this month the Jews suppose God created the world, when the earth appeared at once with all its fruits in perfection. From this circumstance the Jews have formed a twofold commencement of the year, which has given rise to a twofold denomination of the year itself, to which they afterwards attended in all their reckonings: that which began with Tisri or September was called their civil year; that which began with Abib or March was called the sacred or ecclesiastical year.

Some very eminently learned men contend that no new commencement of the year is noted in this place: for that the year had always begun in this month, and that the words shall be, which are inserted by different Versions, have nothing answering to them in the Hebrew.

Verse 3. In the tenth day of this month] In after times they began their preparation on the thirteenth day, or day before the PASSOVER, which was not celebrated till the four-

A lamb] The original word seh signifies the young of sheep and of goats, and may be indifferently translated either lamb or kid.

lamb for an house] The whole host of Israel was divided into twelve tribes, these tribes into families, the families into houses, and the houses into particular persons; Num. i., Josh. vii. 14.

Verse 4. If the household be too little] That is, If there be not persons enough in one family to eat a whole lamb, then two families must join together. The rabbins allow that there should be at least ten persons to one paschal lamb, and not more than twenty.

Take it, according to the number of the souls] The persons who were to eat of it were to be first ascertained, and then the lamb was to be slain and dressed for that number.

Verse 5. Without blemish] Having no natural imperfection, no disease, no deficiency or redundancy of parts. On this point, the rabbins have trifled most egregiously, reckoning fifty blemishes that render a lamb or a kid, or any animal, improper to be sacrificed: five in the ear, three in the eyelid, eight in the eye, three in the nose, six in the mouth, &c., &c. A male of the first year.] That is, any age in the first year between eight days and twelve months.

From the sheep, or from the goats.] The sch means either; and either was equally proper if without blemish. The Hebrews, however, in general preferred the lamb to the kid.

Verse 6. Ye shall keep it until the fourteenth day.] This was never commanded nor practised afterwards. The rabbins mark four things that were required in the first passover that were never required afterwards: 1. The eating of the lamb in their houses dispersed through Goshen. 2. The taking the lamb on the tenth day. 3. The striking of its blood on the door-posts and lintels of their houses. And 4. Their eating it in haste.

The whole assembly—shall kill it.] Any person might kill it, the sacrificial act in this case not being confined to the priests.

In the evening.] "Between the two evenings." The Jews divided the day into morning and evening: till the sun passed the meridian all was morning or forenoon; after that, all was afternoon or evening. Their first evening began just after twelve o'clock, and continued till sunset; their second evening began at sunset and continued till night, i.e. during the whole time of twilight; between twelve o'clock, therefore, and the termination of twilight, the passover was to be offered.

Verse 7. Take of the blood, and strike it on the two side posts.] This was to be done by dipping a bunch of hyssop into the blood, and thus sprinkling it upon the posts, &c.; see ver. 22. That this sprinkling of the blood of the paschal lamb was an emblem of the sacrifice and atonement made by the death of Jesus Christ, is most clearly intimated in the sacred writings, 1 Pet. i. 2, Heb. ix. 13, 14, viii. 10. It is remarkable that no blood was to be sprinkled on the threshold, to teach a reverent regard for the blood of Christ, that men should not tread under foot the son of GOD, nor count the blood of the covenant wherewith they are sanctified an unholy thing; Heb. x. 29.

Verse 8. They shall eat the flesh—roast with fire.] As it was the ordinary custom of the Jews to boil their flesh, some think that the command given here was in opposition to the custom of the Egyptians, who ate raw flesh in honour of Osiris. The Ethiopians are to this day remarkable for eating raw flesh, as is the case with most savage nations.

Unleavened bread.] The word here properly signifies unleavened cakes; the word for leaven in Hebrew is chamets, which simply signifies to ferment. It is supposed that leaven was forbidden on this and on other occasions, that the bread being less agreeable to the taste, it might be emblematical of their bondage and bitter servitude, as this seems to have been one design of the bitter herbs which were commanded to be used on this occasion: but this certainly was not the sole design of the prohibition; leaven itself is a species of corruption, being produced by fermentation, which in such cases tends to putrefaction. In this very light St. Paul considers the subject in this place; 1 Cor. v. 6-8.

Bitter herbs.] What kind of herbs or salad is intended by the word merorrim, which literally signifies bitters, is not well known. The Jews think cichory, wild lettuce, horehound, and the like, are intended. Whatever may be implied under the term, whether bitter herbs, or bitter ingredients in general, it was designed to put them in mind of their bitter and severe bondage in the land of Egypt, from which God was now about to deliver them.

Verse 9. With the purtenance thereof.] All the intestines, for these were abused by the heathens to purposes of divination; and when roasted in the manner here directed they could not be thus used. The command also implies that the lamb was to be roasted whole; neither the head nor legs were to be separated, nor the intestines removed. I suppose that these last simply included the heart, lungs, liver, kidneys, &c., and not the intestinal canal.

Verse 10. Ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning.] Merely to prevent putrefaction; for it was not meet that a thing offered to God should be subjected to corruption, which in such hot countries it must speedily undergo. Thus the body of our blessed Lord saw no corruption, Ps. xvi. 10, Acts ii. 27, because, like the paschal lamb, it was a sacrifice offered to God.

It appears that from the Jewish passover the heathens borrowed their sacrifice termed PROPTER VIAM. It was their custom, previously to their undertaking a journey, to offer a sacrifice to their gods, and to eat the whole if possible, but if any part was left they burned it with fire; and this was called propter viam, because it was made to procure a prosperous journey.

Verse 11. And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded.] As in the eastern countries they wear long loose garments, whenever they travel they tuck up the fore parts of their garments in the girdle which they wear round their loins.

Your shoes on your feet.] This seems particularly mentioned because not customary.

Your staff in your hand.] Eastern people universally make use of a staff when they travel on foot.

Ye shall eat it in haste.] Because they were suddenly to take their departure: the destroying angel was at hand, their enemies were coming against them, and they had not a moment to lose.

It is the LORD's passover.] That is, Jehovah is now about to pass over the land, and the houses only where the blood is sprinkled shall be safe from the stroke of death. The Hebrew word pesach, which we very properly translate PASSOVER, and which should always be pronounced as two words, has its name from the angel of God passing by or over the houses of the Israelites, on the posts and lintels of which the blood of the lamb was sprinkled, while he stopped at the houses of the Egyptians to slay their first-born.

Verse 12. Against all the gods of Egypt, &c.] As different animals were sacred among the Egyptians, the slaying of the first-born of all the beasts might be called executing judgment upon the gods of Egypt. As this however does not appear very clear and satisfactory, some have imagined that the word elohey should be translated princes, which is the rendering in our margin; for as these princes, who were rulers of the kingdom under Pharaoh, were equally hostile to the Hebrews with Pharaoh himself, therefore these judgments fell equally heavy on them also. But we may ask, Did not these judgments fall equally on all the families of Egypt, though multitudes of them had no particular part either in the evil counsel against the Israelites or in their oppression? Why then distinguish those in calamities in which all equally shared? None of these interpretations therefore appear satisfactory. Houbigant supposes that elohey, gods, is a mistake for ahley, tents or habitations, and contends that the text should be read thus: And on all 13 And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you *to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt.

the TENTS (or HABITATIONS) of Egypt I will execute judgment; by which word the Lord signified that not one dwelling in the whole land of Egypt should be exempted from the judgment here threatened. It is but justice to say that however probable this criticism may appear, it is not supported by any of the ancient Versions, nor by any of the MSS. collated by Kennicott and De Rossi.

Verse 13. The blood shall be to you for a token] It shall be the sign to the destroying angel, that the house on which he sees this blood sprinkled is under the protection of God, and that no person in it is to be injured.

Verse 14. A memorial] To keep up a remembrance of the severity and goodness, or justice and mercy, of God. Ye shall keep it a feast—it shall be annually observed, and shall be celebrated with solemn religious joy, throughout your generations—as long as ye continue to be a distinct people; an ordinance—a divine appointment, an institution of God himself, neither to be altered nor set aside by any human authority.

For ever.] An everlasting or endless statute, because representative of the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world; whose mediation, in consequence of his sacrifice, shall endure while time itself lasts; and to whose merits and efficacy the salvation of the soul shall be ascribable throughout eternity. It is remarkable that though the Jews have ceased from the whole of their sacrificial system, so that sacrifices are no longer offered by them in any part of the world, yet they all, in all their generations and in all countries, keep up the remembrance of the passover, and observe the feast of unleavened bread. But no lamb is sacrificed. Their sacrifices have all totally ceased, ever since the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. Even the flesh that is used on this occasion is partly roasted and partly boiled, that it may not even resemble the primitive sacrifice; for they deem it unlawful to sacrifice out of Jerusalem. The truth is, the true Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world has been offered, and they have no power to restore the ancient type.

Verse 15. Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread] This has been considered as a distinct ordinance, and not essentially connected with the passover. The passover was to be observed on the fourteenth day of the first month; the feast of unleavened bread began on the fifteenth and lasted seven days, the first and last of which were holy convocations.

That soul shall be cut off] There are thirty-six places in which this excision or cutting off is threatened against the Jews for neglect of some particular duty; and what is implied in the thing itself is not well known. Some think it means a violent death, some a premature death, and some an eternal 22 * And ye shall take a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the bason, and <sup>p</sup>strike the lintel and the two side posts with the blood that is in the bason; and none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning.

death. It is very likely that it means no more than a separation from the rights and privileges of an Israelite; so that after this excision the person was considered as a mere stranger, who had neither lot nor part in Israel, nor any right to the blessings of the covenant. This is probably what St. Paul means, Rom. ix. 3. But we naturally suppose this punishment was not inflicted but on those who had showed a marked and obstinate contempt for the divine authority. This punishment appears to have been nearly the same with excommunication among the Christians; and from this general notion of the cutting off the Christian excommunication seems to have been borrowed.

Verse 16. In the first day—and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation] This is the first place where we meet with the account of an assembly collected for the mere purpose of religious worship. Such assemblies are called holy convocations, which is a very appropriate appellation for a religious assembly; they were called together by the express command of God, and were to be employed in a work of holiness.

Verse 17. Self-same day] Probably they began their march about day-break, called here beetson, the body or strength of the day, and in Deut. xvi. 1, by night—some time before the sun rose.

Verse 19. No leaven found in your houses] To meet the letter of this precept in the fullest manner possible, the Jews, on the eve of this festival, institute the most rigorous search through every part of their houses, not only removing all leavened bread, but sweeping every part clean, that no crumb of bread shall be left that had any leaven in it. And so strict were they in the observance of the letter of this law that if even a mouse was seen to run across the floor with a crumb of bread in its mouth, they considered the whole house as polluted, and began their purification afresh. We have already seen that leaven was an emblem of sin, because it proceeded from corruption; and the putting away of this implied the turning to God with simplicity and uprightness of heart.

Verse 21. Kill the passover.] That is, the lamb, which was called the paschal or passover lamb. The animal that was to be sacrificed on this occasion got the name of the institution itself: thus the word covenant is often put for the sacrifice offered in making the covenant: so the rock was Christ, 1 Cor. x. 4; bread and wine the body and blood of Christ, Mark xiv. 22, 24. St. Paul copies the expression, 1 Cor. v. 7: Christ our passover (that is, our paschal lamb) is sacrificed for us.

Verse 22. A bunch of hyssop] The original word esob has been variously translated musk, rosemary, polypody of the wall, mint, origanum, marjoram, and HYSSOP: the latter 25 And it shall come to pass, when ye be come to the land which the LORD will give you, <sup>d</sup> according as he hath promised, that ye shall keep this service.

26 * And it shall come to pass, when your children shall say unto you, What mean ye by this service.

seems to be the most proper. It was a type of the purifying virtue of the bitter sufferings of Christ.

Verse 26. What mean ye by this service? From the remotest antiquity the institution of feasts, games, &c., has been used to keep up the memory of past grand events. Hence God instituted the sabbath, to keep up the remembrance of the creation; and the passover, to keep up the remembrance of the deliverance from Egypt. All the other feasts were instituted on similar reasons. The Jews never took their sons to the tabernacle or temple till they were twelve years of age, nor suffered them to eat of the flesh of any victim till they had themselves offered a sacrifice at the temple, which they were not permitted to do before the twelfth year of their age.

Verse 27. It is the sacrifice of the Lord's passover We have already intimated that the paschal lamb was an illustrious type of Christ; and we shall find that every thing in this account is typical or representative. The bondage and affliction of the people of Israel may be considered as emblems of the hard slavery and wretchedness consequent on a state of sinfulness. The mercy of God projects the redemption of man from this cruel bondage and oppression, and a sacrifice is appointed for the occasion by God himself; to be offered with particular and significant rites and ceremonies, all of which represented the passion and death of our blessed Lord, and the great end for which he became a sacrifice, viz., the redemption of a lost world, from the power, the guilt, and the pollution of sin, &c. And it is worthy of remark, 1. That the anniversary or annual commemoration of the passover was strictly and religiously kept by the Jews on the day, and hour of the day, on which the original transaction took place, throughout all their succeeding generations. 2. That on one of these anniversaries, and, as many suppose, on the very day and hour on which the paschal lamb was originally offered, our blessed Lord expired on the cross for the salvation of the world. 3. That after the destruction of Jerusalem the paschal lamb ceased to be offered by the Jews throughout the world, though they continue to hold the anniversary of the passover, but without any sacrifice, notwithstanding their deep-rooted, inveterate antipathy against the author and grace of the gospel. 4. That the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was instituted to keep this true paschal sacrifice in commemoration, and that this has been religiously observed by the whole Christian world (one very small class of Christians excepted) from the foundation of Christianity to the present day! 5. That the Jews were commanded to eat the paschal lamb; and our Lord, commemorating the passover, commanded his disciples, saying, Take, eat, this is my body, which is given for you; do this in remembrance of ME. In the communion service of the Church of England, the spirit and design both of the type and antitype are most expressively condensed into one point of view, in the address to the communicant: "Take and eat this in remembrance that Christ died for THEE; and FEED upon HIM, in thy heart, by FAITH with THANKSGIVING." Thus God continues the memorial of that grand transaction which he has said should be an ordinance for ever; evidently meaning thereby, that the paschal lamb should be the significator till the passion and death of Christ; and that afterwards bread and wine taken sacramentally, in commemoration of his crucifixion, should be the continual representatives of that sacrifice till the end of the world. Thus the passover in itself, and in its reference, is an ordinance for ever; and thus the words of the Lord are literally fulfilled.

Verse 29. Smote all the first-born If we take the term first-born in its literal sense only, we shall be led to conclude that in a vast number of the houses of the Egyptians there could have been no death, as it is not at all likely that every first-born child of every Egyptian family was still alive, and that all the first-born of their cattle still remained. And yet it is said, ver. 30, that there was not a house where there was not one dead. The word therefore must not be taken in its literal sense only. From its use in a great variety of places in the scriptures it is evident that it means the chief, most excellent, best beloved, most distinguished, &c. In this sense our blessed Lord is called the FIRST-BORN of every creature, Col. i. 15, and the FIRST-BORN among many brethren, Rom. viii. 29; that is, he is more excellent than all creatures, and greater than all the children of men. In the same sense we may understand Rev. i. 5, where CHRIST is called the FIRST-BEGOTTEN from the dead, i.e. the chief of all that have ever visited the empire of death, and on whom death has had any power; and the only one who by his own might quickened himself.

In a contrary sense, when the word first-born is joined to another that signifies any kind of misery or disgrace, it then signifies the depth of misery, the utmost disgrace. So the FIRST-BORN of the poor, Isa. xiv. 30, signifies the most abject, destitute, and impoverished. The FIRST-BORN of death, Job xviii. 13, means the most horrible kind of death. So in the threatening against Pharaoh, chap. xi. 5, where he informs him that he will slay all the first-born, from the first-born of Pharaoh that sitteth upon the throne, to the first-born of the maid-servant that is behind the mill, he takes in the very highest and lowest conditions of life. The most eminent person in every family in Egypt, as well as those who were literally the first-born, was slain in this plague.

Verse 30. There was a great cry No people in the universe were more remarkable for their mournings than the Egyptians, especially in matters of religion; they whipped, beat, tore themselves, and howled in all the excess of grief. When a relative died, the people left the house, ran into the streets, and howled in the most lamentable and frantic manner. How dreadful then must the scene of horror and distress appear, when there was not one house or family in Egypt where there was not one dead; and according to their custom, all the family running out into the streets bewailing this calamity!

Verse 31. Called for Moses and Aaron] That is, he sent the message here mentioned to them; for it does not appear that he had any further interview with Moses and Aaron.

Verse 23. The Egyptians were urgent upon the people] They felt much, they feared more; and therefore wished to get immediately rid of a people on whose account they found they were smitten with so many and such dreadful plagues.

Verse 34. The people took their dough before it was leavened, &c.] There was no time now to make any regular preparation for their departure, such was the universal hurry and confusion. The Israelites could carry but little of their household utensils with them; but some, such as they kneaded their bread and kept their meal in, they were obliged to carry with them. The kneading-troughs of the Arabs are comparatively small wooden bowls, which, after kneading their bread in, serve them as dishes out of which they eat their victuals. And as to those being bound up in their clothes, no more may be intended than their wrapping them up in their long loose garments, or in what is still used among the Arabs, and called hykes, which is a long kind of blanket, something resembling a highland plaid, in which they often carry their provisions, wrap themselves by day, and sleep at night.

Verse 35. They borrowed of the Egyptians] See the note on chap. iii. 22, where the very exceptionable term borrow is largely explained.

Verse 37. From Rameses to Succoth] Rameses appears to have been another name for Goshen, though it is probable that there might have been a chief city or village in that land, where the children of Israel rendezvoused previously to their departure, called Rameses. As the term Succoth signifies booths or tents, it is probable that this place was so named from its being the place of the first encampment of the Israelites.

Six hundred thousand] That is, There was this number of effective men, twenty years old and upwards, who were able to go out to war. But this was not the whole number, and therefore the sacred writer says they were about 600,000; for when the numbers were taken about thirteen months after this, they were found to be six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty, without reckoning those under twenty years of age, or any of the tribe of Levi; see Num. i. 45, 46. But besides those on foot, or footmen, there were no doubt many old and comparatively infirm persons, who rode on camels, horses, or asses, besides the immense number of women and children, which must have been at least three to one of the others; and the mixed multitude, ver. 38, probably of refugees in Egypt, who came to sojourn there, because of the dearth which had obliged them to emigrate from their own countries; and who now, seeing that the hand of Jehovah was against the Egyptians and with the Israelites, availed themselves of the general consternation, and took their leave of Egypt, choosing Israel's God for their portion, and his people for their companions. Such a company moving at once, and emigrating from their own country, the world never before nor since witnessed; no doubt upwards of two millions of souls, and probably upwards them; and flocks, and herds, even very much cattle.

39 And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened; because <sup>i</sup> they were thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry, neither had they prepared for themselves any victual.

40 Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was <sup>k</sup> four hundred and thirty years.

41 And it came to pass at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the self-same day it came to pass, that all <sup>l</sup> the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt.

42 It is <sup>m</sup> a night <sup>n</sup> to be much observed unto the Lord, for bringing them out from the land of Egypt: this <sup>o</sup> is that night of the Lord to be observed of all the children of Israel in their generations.

of three millions, besides their flocks and herds, even very much cattle; and what but the mere providence of God could support such a multitude, and in the wilderness too, where to this day the necessities of life are not to be found?

Had not Moses the fullest proof of his divine mission, he never could have put himself at the head of such an immense concourse of people, who, without the most especial and effective providence, must all have perished for lack of food. This single circumstance, unconnected with all others, is an ample demonstration of the divine mission of Moses, and of the authenticity and divine inspiration of the Pentateuch. To suppose that an impostor, or one pretending only to a divine call, could have ventured to place himself at the head of such an immense body of people, to lead them through a trackless wilderness, utterly unprovided for such a journey, to a land as yet in the possession of several powerful nations whom they must expel before they could possess the country, would have implied such an extreme of madness and folly as has never been witnessed in an individual, and such a blind credulity in the multitude as is unparalleled in the annals of mankind! The succeeding stupendous events proved that Moses had the authority of God to do what he did; and the people had at least such a general conviction that he had this authority that they implicitly followed his directions, and received their law from his mouth.

Verse 40. Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, &c.] The statement in this verse is allowed on all hands to be extremely difficult, and therefore the passage stands in especial need of illustration. "That the descendants of Israel did not dwell 430 years in Egypt," says Dr Kennicott, "may be easily proved, and has often been demonstrated."

The Samaritan Pentateuch, in all its manuscripts and printed copies, reads the place thus:

"Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, and of their fathers, which they sojourned in the land of Canaan and in the land of Egypt, was 430 years." This same sum is given by St. Paul, Gal. iii. 17, who reckons from the promise made to Abraham, when God commanded him to go to Canaan, to the giving of the law, which soon followed the departure from Egypt; and this chronology of the apostle is concordant with the Samaritan Pentateuch, which, by preserving the two passages, they and their fathers, and in the land of Canaan, which are lost out of the present copies of the Hebrew text, has rescued this passage from all obscurity and contradiction. From Abraham's entry into Canaan to the birth of Isaac was 25 years, Gen. xii. 4, xvii. 1-21; Isaac was 60 years old at the birth of Jacob, Gen. xxv. 26; and Jacob was 130 at his going down into Egypt, Gen. xlvii. 9; which three sums make 215 years. And then Jacob and his children having continued in Egypt 215 years more, the whole sum of 430 years is regularly completed. [Dr Kennicott's theory is not sustained by recent criticism.]

Verse 42. A night to be much observed] A night to be held in everlasting remembrance, because of the peculiar display of the power and goodness of God, the observance of which annually was to be considered a religious precept while the Jewish nation should continue.

43 And the LORD said unto Moses and Aaron, This is * the ordinance of the passover: There shall no stranger eat thereof:

44 But every man's servant that is bought for money, when thou hast <sup>b</sup> circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof.

45 * A foreigner and an hired servant shall not eat thereof.

46 In one house shall it be eaten; thou shalt not carry forth ought of the flesh abroad out of the house; <sup>d</sup> neither shall ye break a bone thereof.

47 * All the congregation of Israel shall keep it.

Verse 43. This is the ordinance of the passover] From the last verse of this chapter it appears pretty evident that this, to the 50th verse inclusive, constituted a part of the directions given to Moses relative to the proper observance of the first passover, and should be read conjointly with the preceding account beginning at verse 21. It may be supposed that these latter verses contain such particular directions as God gave to Moses after he had given those general ones mentioned in the preceding verses, but they seem all to belong to this first passover.

There shall no stranger eat thereof] Son of a stranger or foreigner, i.e. one who was not of the genuine Hebrew stock, or one who had not received circumcision; for any circumcised person might eat the passover, as the total exclusion extends only to the uncircumcised, see ver. 48. As there are two sorts of strangers mentioned in the sacred writings; one who was admitted to all the Jewish ordinances, and another who, though he dwelt among the Jews, was not permitted to eat the passover or partake of any of their solemn feasts; it may be necessary to show what was the essential point of distinction through which the one was admitted and the other excluded.

In treatises on the religious customs of the Jews we frequently meet with the term proselyte, one who is come from his own people and country to sojourn with another. All who were not descendants of some one of the twelve sons of Jacob, or of Ephraim and Manasseh, the two sons of Joseph, were reputed strangers or proselytes among the Jews. But of those strangers or proselytes there were two kinds, called among them proselytes of the gate, and proselytes of justice or of the covenant. The former were such as wished to dwell among the Jews, but would not submit to be circumcised; they, however, acknowledged the true God, avoided all idolatry, and observed the seven precepts of Noah, but were not obliged to observe any of the Mosaic institutions. The latter submitted to be circumcised, obliged themselves to observe all the rites and ceremonies of the law, and were in nothing different from the Jews but merely in their having once been heathens. The former, or proselytes of the gate, might not eat the passover or partake of any of the sacred festivals; but the latter, the proselytes of the covenant, had the same rights, spiritual and secular, as the Jews themselves.

Verse 45. A foreigner] Toshab, from yashab, to sit down or dwell; one who is a mere sojourner, for the purpose of traffic, merchandise, &c., but who is neither a proselyte of the gate nor of the covenant.

And an hired servant] Who, though he be bought with money, or has indentured himself for a certain term to serve a Jew, yet has not become either proselyte of the gate or of the covenant. None of these shall eat of it, because not circumcised—not brought under the bond of the covenant; and not being under obligation to observe the Mosaic law, they had no right to its privileges and blessings.

Verse 46. In one house shall it be eaten] In one family, if that be large enough; if not, a neighbouring family might be invited, ver. 4.

Thou shalt not carry forth ought of the flesh] Every family must abide within doors because of the destroying angel, none being permitted to go out of his house till the next day, ver. 22.

Neither shall ye break a bone thereof] As it was to be eaten in haste, there was no time either to separate the bones, or to break them in order to extract the marrow; and lest they should be tempted to consume time in this way, therefore 48 And * when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the LORD, let all his males be circumcised, and let them come near and keep it; and he shall be as one that is born in the land: for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof.

49 <sup>a</sup> One law shall be to him that is home-born, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you.

50 Thus did all the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

51 <sup>1</sup> And it came to pass the self-same day that the LORD did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt <sup>1</sup> by their armies.

this ordinance was given. This precept was given to point out a most remarkable circumstance which 1500 years after was to take place in the crucifixion of the Saviour of mankind, who was the true Paschal Lamb, that Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world; for though he was crucified as a common malefactor, and it was a universal custom to break the legs of such on the cross, yet so did the providence of God order it that a bone of HIM was not broken.

Verse 48. And when a stranger—will keep the passover, &c.] Let all who sojourn among you, and who desire to partake of this sacred ordinance, not only be circumcised themselves, but all the males of their families likewise, that they may all have an equal right to the blessings of the covenant.

Verse 49. One law shall be to him that is home-born, &c.] As this is the first place that the term torah or LAW occurs, a term of the greatest importance in Divine Revelation, and on the proper understanding of which much depends, I judge it best to give its genuine explanation once for all.

The word torah comes from the root yarah, which signifies to aim at, teach, point out, direct, lead, guide, make straight or even; and from these significations of the word (and in all these senses it is used in the Bible) we may see at once the nature, properties, and design of the law of God. It is a system of INSTRUCTION in righteousness; it teaches the difference between moral good and evil; ascertains what is right and fit to be done, and what should be left undone, because improper to be performed. It is a revelation of God's wisdom and goodness, wonderfully well calculated to direct the hearts of men into the truth, to guide their feet into the path of life, and to make straight, even, and plain that way which leads to God, and in which the soul must walk in order to arrive at eternal life. It is the fountain whence every correct notion relative to God—his perfections, providence, grace, justice, holiness, omniscience, and omnipotence, has been derived. And it has been the origin whence all the true principles of law and justice have been deduced. The pious study of it was the grand means of producing the greatest kings, the most enlightened statesmen, the most accomplished poets, and the most holy and useful men that ever adorned the world. It is exceeded only by the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is at once the accomplishment of its rites and predictions, and the fulfilment of its grand plan and outline. As a system of teaching or instruction, it is the most sovereign and most effectual; as by it is the knowledge of sin, and it alone is the schoolmaster that leads men to Christ, that they may be justified through faith, Gal. iii. 24. Who can absolutely ascertain the exact quantum of obliquity in a crooked line, without the application of a straight one? And could sin, in all its twistings, windings, and varied involutions, have ever been truly ascertained, had not God given to man this perfect rule to judge by? The nations who acknowledge this revelation of God, have, as far as they attend to its dictates, the wisest, purest, most equal, and most beneficial laws. The nations that do not receive it have laws at once extravagantly severe and extravagantly indulgent.

The word lex, law, among the Romans, has been derived from lego, I read; because when a law or statute was made, it was hung up in the most public places, that it might be seen, read, and known by all men, that those who were to obey the laws might not break them through ignorance, and thus incur the penalty. Or from ligo, I bind, because the law binds men to the strict observance of its precepts. The Greeks call a law nomos, from nemo, to divide, distribute, minister to, or serve, because the law divides to all their just rights, appoints or distributes to each his proper duty, and thus serves or ministers to the welfare of the individual and the support of society.

Verse 51. By their armies.] Tsibotham, from tsaba, to assemble, meet together in an orderly or regulated manner, and hence to war, to act together as troops in battle; whence tsabaoth, troops, armies, hosts. It is from this that the Divine Being calls himself Yehovah tsebaoth, the LORD of HOSTS or armies: for the LORD did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt by their ARMIES.

When the nature of the Egyptian idolatry is considered, and the plagues which were sent upon them, we may see at once the peculiarity of the judgment, and the great propriety of its being inflicted in the way related by Moses. The plagues were either inflicted on the objects of their idolatry, or by their means.

1. That the river Nile was an object of their worship, and one of their greatest gods, we have already seen. As the FIRST plague, its waters were therefore turned into blood; and the fish, many of which were objects also of their adoration, died. Blood was particularly offensive to them, and the touch of any dead animal rendered them unclean. When then their great god, the river, was turned into blood, and its waters became putrid, so that all the fish, minor objects of their devotion, died, we see a judgment calculated at once to punish, correct, and reform them.

2. Mr. Bryant has endeavoured to prove that frogs, the SECOND plague, were sacred animals in Egypt, and were dedicated to Osiris; they certainly appear on many ancient Egyptian monuments, and in such circumstances and connections as to show that they were held in religious veneration. These therefore became an awful scourge; first, by their numbers, and their intrusion into every place; and, secondly, by their death, and the infection of the atmosphere which took place in consequence.

3. We have seen also that the Egyptians, especially the priests, affected great cleanliness, and would not wear woollen garments lest any kind of vermin should harbour about them. The THIRD plague, by means of lice or such-like vermin, was wisely calculated both to humble and confound them. In this they immediately saw a power superior to any that could be exerted by their gods or their magicians; and the latter were obliged to confess, This is the finger of God!

4. That flies were held sacred among the Egyptians and among various other nations admits of the strongest proof. It is very probable that Baal-zebub himself was worshipped under the form of a fly or great cantharid. These therefore, or some kind of winged noxious insects, became the primo agents in the FOURTH plague; and if the cynomyia or dog-fly be intended, we have already seen in the notes with what propriety and effect this judgment was inflicted.

5. The murrain or mortality among the cattle was the FIFTH plague, and the most decisive mark of the power and indignation of Jehovah. That dogs, cats, monkeys, rams, heifers, and bulls, were all objects of their most religious veneration, all the world knows. These were smitten in a most singular manner by the hand of God; and the Egyptians saw themselves deprived at once of all their imaginary helpers. Even Apis, their ox-god, in whom they particularly trusted, now suffers, groans, and dies under the hand of Jehovah.

6. The SIXTH plague, viz., of boils and blains, was as appropriate as any of the preceding; and the sprinkling of the ashes, the means by which it was produced, peculiarly significant. By this disorder, which no application to their gods could cure, and which was upon the magicians also, God confounded their pride, showed the folly of their worship, and the vanity of their dependance. The means by which these boils and blains were inflicted, viz., the sprinkling of ashes from the furnace, was peculiarly appropriate. In several cities in Egypt they were accustomed to sacrifice human beings to Typhon, which they burnt alive upon a high altar; and at the close of the sacrifice the priests gathered the ashes of these victims, and scattered them in the air, "that where an atom of their dust was wafted, a blessing might be entailed. The like was done by Moses with the ashes of the furnace, that wherever any, the smallest portion, alighted, it might prove a plague and a curse to this cruel, ungrateful, and infatuated people."

7. The grievous hail, the SEVENTH plague, attended with rain, thunder, and lightning, in a country where these scarcely ever occur, and according to an express prediction of Moses, must in the most signal manner point out the power and justice of God. Fire and water were some of the principal objects of Egyptian idolatry. To find, therefore, that these very elements, the objects of their adoration, were, at the command of a servant of Jehovah, brought as a curse and scourge on the whole land, and upon men also and cattle, must have shaken their belief in these imaginary deities, while it proved to the Israelites that there was none like the God of Jerusalem.

8. In the EIGHTH plague we see by what insignificant creatures God can bring about a general destruction. A caterpillar is beyond all animals the most contemptible, and, taken singly, the least to be dreaded in the whole empire of nature; but in the hand of divine justice it becomes one of the most formidable foes of the human race. Not even the most contemptible animal should be considered with disrespect, as in the hand of God it may become the most terrible instrument for the punishment of a criminal individual, or a guilty land.

9. The NINTH plague, the total and horrible darkness that lasted for three days, afforded both Israelites and Egyptians the most illustrious proof of the power and universal dominion of God; and was particularly to the latter a most awful yet instructive lesson against a species of idolatry which had been long prevalent in that and other countries, viz., the worship of the celestial luminaries. The sun and moon were both adored as supreme deities, as the sole dispensers of light and life; and the sun was invoked as the giver of immortality and eternal blessedness. These objects of their superstitious worship Jehovah showed by this plague to be his creatures, dispensing or withholding their light merely at his will and pleasure; and that the people might be convinced that all this came by his appointment alone, he predicted this awful darkness; and that their astronomers might have the fullest proof that this was no natural occurrence, and could not be the effect of any kind of eclipse, which even when total could endure only about four minutes (and this case could happen only once in a thousand years), he caused this palpable darkness to continue for three days!

10. The TENTH and last plague, the slaying of the first-born or chief person in each family, may be considered in the light of a divine retribution. "It had been told them that the family of the Israelites were esteemed as God's first-born, chap. iv. 22; therefore God said: Let my son go that he may serve me; and if thou refuse—behold, I will slay thy son, even thy FIRST-BORN, ver. 23."

On the whole we may say, Behold the goodness and severity of God! Severity mixed with goodness even to the same people. He punished and corrected them at the same time; for there was not one of these judgments that had not, from its peculiar nature and circumstances, some emendatory influence. At the same time the Israelites themselves must have received a lesson of the most impressive instruction on the vanity and wickedness of idolatry, to which they were at all times most deplorably prone, and of which they would no doubt have given many more examples, had they not had the Egyptian plagues continually before their eyes. It was probably these signal displays of God's power and justice, and these alone, that induced them to leave Egypt at his command by Moses and Aaron; otherwise, with the dreadful wilderness before them, totally unprovided for such a journey, in which humanly speaking it was impossible for them and their households to subsist, they would have rather preferred the ills they then suffered, than have run the risk of greater by an attempt to escape from their present bondage.

CHAPTER XIII.

God establishes the law concerning the first-born, and commands that all such, both of man and beast, should be sanctified unto him, 1, 2. Orders them to remember the day in which they were brought out of Egypt, when they should be brought to the land of Canaan; and to keep this service in the month Abib, 3-5. Repeats the command concerning the leavened bread, 6, 7, and orders them to teach their children the cause of it, 8, and to keep strictly in remembrance that it was by the might of God alone they had been delivered from Egypt, 9. Shows that the consecration of the first-born, both of man and beast, should take place when they should be settled in Canaan, 10-12. The first-born of man and beast to be redeemed, 13. The reason of this also to be shown to their children, 14, 15. Frontlets or phylacteries for the hands and forehead commanded, 16. And the people are not led directly to the promised land, but about through the wilderness; and the reason assigned, 17, 18. Moses takes the bones of Joseph with him, 19. Their journey from Succoth and come to Etham, 20. And the Lord goes before them by day in a pillar of cloud, and by night in a pillar of fire, 21, which miracle is regularly continued, both by day and night, 22.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 * Sanctify unto me all the first-born, whatsoever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and of beast: it is mine.

3 And Moses said unto the people, <sup>b</sup> Remember this day, in which ye came out from Egypt, out of the house of <sup>c</sup> bondage; for <sup>d</sup> by strength of hand the LORD brought you out from this place: <sup>e</sup> there shall no leavened bread be eaten.

4 <sup>f</sup> This day came ye out, in the month Abib.

5 And it shall be, when the LORD shall <sup>g</sup> bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, Verse 1. The Lord spake unto Moses] The commands in this chapter appear to have been given at Succoth, on the same day in which they left Egypt.

Verse 2. Sanctify unto me all the first-born] To sanctify, kadash, signifies to consecrate, separate, and set apart a thing or person from all secular purposes to some religious use. Thus the persons and animals sanctified to God were employed in the service of the tabernacle and temple; and the animals, such as were proper, were offered in sacrifice.

Whatsoever openeth the womb] That is, the first-born, if a male; for females were not offered, nor the first male, if a female had been born previously. Again, if a man had several wives, the first-born of each, if a male, was to be offered to God. And all this was done to commemorate the preservation of the first-born of the Israelites, when those of the Egyptians were destroyed.

Verse 5. When the Lord shall bring thee into the land] Hence it is pretty evident that the Israelites were not obliged to celebrate the passover, or keep the feast of unleavened bread, till they were brought into the promised land.

Verse 9. And it shall be for a sign—upon thine hand] This direction, repeated and enlarged ver. 16, gave rise to phylacteries or tephillin, and this is one of the passages which the Jews write upon them to the present day. The manner in which the Jews understood and kept these commands may appear in their practice. They wrote the following four portions of the law upon slips of parchment of vellum: Sanctify unto me the first-born, Exod. xiii., from verse 2 to 10 inclusive. And it shall be, when the Lord shall bring thee into the land, Exod. xiii., from verse 11 to 16 inclusive. Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord, Deut. vi., from verse 4 to 9 inclusive. And it shall come to pass, if ye shall hearken diligently, Deut. xi., from verse 13 to 21 inclusive. These four portions, making in all 30 verses, written as mentioned above and covered with leather, they tied to the forehead and to the hand or arm.

Those which were for the HEAD (the frontlets) they wrote on four slips of parchment, and rolled up each by itself, and placed them in four compartments, joined together in one piece of skin or leather. Those which were designed for the 6 <sup>j</sup> Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, and in the seventh day shall be a feast to the LORD.

7 Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days; and there shall <sup>k</sup> no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee in all thy quarters.

8 And thou shalt <sup>l</sup> shew thy son in that day, saying, This is done, because of that which the LORD did unto me, when I came forth out of Egypt.

9 And it shall be for <sup>m</sup> a sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes, that hand were formed of one piece of parchment, the four portions being written upon it in four columns, and rolled up from one end to the other. These were all correct transcripts from the Mosaic text, without one redundant or deficient letter, otherwise they were not lawful to be worn. Those for the head were tied on so as to rest on the forehead. Those for the hand or arm were usually tied on the left arm, a little above the elbow, on the inside, that they might be near the heart, according to the command, Deut. vi. 6: And these words which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart. These phylacteries formed no inconsiderable part of a Jew's religion; they wore them as a sign of their obligation to God, and as representing some future blessedness. Hence they did not wear them on feast-days nor on the sabbath, because these things were in themselves signs; but they wore them always when they read the law or when they prayed, and hence they called them tephillin, prayer-ornaments, oratories, or incitements to prayer. In process of time the spirit of this law was lost in the letter, and when the word was not in their mouth nor the law in their heart, they had their phylacteries on their heads and on their hands. And the Pharisees, who in our Lord's time affected extraordinary piety, made their phylacteries very broad, that they might have many sentences written upon them, or the ordinary portions in very large and observable letters.

It appears that the Jews wore these for three different purposes:

1. As signs or remembrancers. This was the original design, as the institution itself sufficiently proves.

2. To procure reverence and respect in the sight of the heathen.

3. They used them as amulets or charms, to drive away evil spirits.

The passages used seem to be chosen in vindication of the phylactery itself, as the reader may see on consulting them at large. Bind them for a sign upon thy HAND: and for frontlets between thy EYES; write them upon the POSTS of thy HOUSE and upon thy GATES; all which commands the Jews take in the most literal sense. To acquire the reputation of extraordinary sanctity they wore the fringes of their garments of an uncommon length. Moses had commanded them, Num. xv. 38, 39, to put fringes to the borders of their garments, that when they looked upon even these distinct threads they might remember, not only the law in general, but also the very minutiae or smaller parts of all the precepts, rites, and ceremonies belonging to it. As those hypocrites (for such our Lord proves them to be) were destitute of all the life and power of religion within, they endeavoured to supply its place with phylacteries and fringes without. The same principles distinguish hypocrites everywhere, and multitudes of them may be found among those termed Christians as well as among the Jews. It is probably to this institution relative to the phylactery that the words, Rev. xiv. 1, allude: And I looked, and, lo, an hundred and forty-four thousand having his Father's name written on their foreheads. So again antichrist exacts obedience to his precepts by a mark on men's right hands or on their foreheads, Rev. xiii. 16.

Verse 13. Every firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb] Or a kid, as in the margin. In Numb. xviii. 15, it is said: "The first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem: and the firstling of an unclean beast shalt thou redeem." Hence we may infer that ass is put here for any unclean beast or for unclean beasts in general. The lamb was to be given to the Lord, that is, to his priest, Num. xviii. 8, 15. And then the owner of the ass might use it for his own service, which without this redemption he could not do; see Deut. xv. 19.

The first-born of man—shalt thou redeem.] This was done by giving to the priests five standard shekels, or shekels of the sanctuary, every shekel weighing twenty gerahs.

Verse 17. God led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines, &c.] Had the Israelites been obliged to commence their journey to the promised land by a military campaign, there is little room to doubt that they would have been discouraged, have rebelled against Moses and Aaron, and have returned back to Egypt. Their long slavery had so degraded their minds that they were incapable of any great or noble exertions; and it is only on the ground of this mental degradation, the infallible consequence of slavery, that we can account for their many dastardly acts, murmurings, and repinings after their escape from Egypt. Besides, the Israelites were in all probability unarmed, and totally unequipped for battle, encumbered with their flocks, and certain culinary utensils, which they were 16 And it shall be for <sup>a</sup>a token upon thine hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes: for by strength of hand the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt.

17 And it came to pass, when Pharaoh had let the people go, that God led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines, although that was near; for God said, Lest peradventure the people <sup>b</sup>repent when they see war, and <sup>c</sup>they return to Egypt:

18 But God <sup>d</sup>led the people about, through the way of the wilderness of the Red Sea: and the children of Israel went up <sup>e</sup>harnessed out of the land of Egypt.

19 And Moses took the bones of Joseph with him: for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel, saying, <sup>f</sup>God will surely visit you: and ye shall carry up my bones away hence with you.

20 And <sup>g</sup>they took their journey from Succoth, and encamped in Etham, in the edge of the wilderness.

21 And <sup>h</sup>the LORD went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light; to go by day and night:

22 He took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night, from before the people.

obliged to carry with them in the wilderness to provide them with bread, &c.

Verse 18. But God led the people about] There were two roads from Egypt to Canaan, one through the valleys of Jendilly, Rumelah, and Baideah, bounded on each side by the mountains of the lower Thebais; the other lies higher, having the northern range of the mountains of Mocatee running parallel with it on the right hand, and the desert of the Egyptian Arabia, which lies all the way open to the land of the Philistines, to the left.

Went up harnesses] I think it probable that the word refers simply to that orderly or well arranged manner in which the Israelites commenced their journey from Egypt. For to arrange, array, or set in order, seems to be the ideal meaning of the word chamash. Our margin has it by five in a rank; but had they marched only five abreast, supposing only one yard for each rank to move in, it would have required not less than sixty-eight miles for even the 600,000 to proceed on regularly in this way: for 600,000 divided by five gives 120,000 ranks of five each; and there being only 1760 yards in a mile, the dividing 120,000 by 1760 will give the number of miles such a column of people would take up, which by such an operation will be found to be something more than 68 miles. But this the circumstances of the history will by no means admit.

Verse 19. Moses took the bones of Joseph] It is supposed that the Israelites carried with them the bones or remains of all the twelve sons of Jacob, each tribe taking care of the bones of its own patriarch, while Moses took care of the bones of Joseph. St. Stephen expressly says, Acts vii. 15, 16, that not only Jacob, but the fathers, were carried from Egypt into Sychem: and this, as Calmet remarks, was the only opportunity that seems to have presented itself for doing this: and certainly the reason that rendered it proper to remove the bones of Joseph to the promised land, had equal weight in reference to those of the other patriarchs.

Verse 20. Encamped in Etham] As, for the reasons assigned on ver 17, God would not lead the Israelites by the way of the Philistines' country, he directed them toward the wilderness of Shur, chap. xv. 22, upon the edge or extremity of which, next to Egypt, at the bottom of the Arabian Gulf, lay Etham, which is the second place of encampment mentioned.

Verse 21. The Lord went before them] That by the LORD here is meant the Lord Jesus, we have the authority of St.

Paul to believe, 1 Cor. x. 9; it was he whose spirit they tempted in the wilderness, for it was he who led them through the desert to the promised rest.

Pillar of a cloud. This pillar or column, which appeared as a cloud by day and a fire by night, was the symbol of the divine presence. This was the Shechinah or divine dwelling-place, and was the continual proof of the presence and protection of GOD. It was necessary that they should have a guide to conduct them through the wilderness, even had they taken the most direct road; and how much more so when they took a circuitous route not usually travelled, and of which they knew nothing but just as the luminous pillar pointed out the way! Besides, it is very likely that even Moses himself did not know the route which God had determined on, nor the places of encampment, till the pillar that went before them became stationary, and thus pointed out, not only the road, but the different places of rest. Whether there was more than one pillar is not clearly determined by the text. If there was but one it certainly assumed three different appearances, for the performance of THREE very important offices. 1. In the day-time, for the purpose of pointing out the way, a column or pillar of a cloud was all that was requisite. 2. At night, to prevent that confusion which must otherwise have taken place, the pillar of cloud became a pillar of fire, not to direct their journeyings, for they seldom travelled by night, but to give light to every part of the Israelitish camp. 3. In such a scorching, barren, thirsty desert, something further was necessary than a light and a guide. Women, children, and comparatively infirm persons, exposed to the rays of such a burning sun, must have been destroyed if without a covering; hence we find that a cloud overshadowed them: and from what St. Paul observes, 1 Cor. x. 1, 2, we are led to conclude that this covering cloud was composed of aqueous particles for the cooling of the atmosphere and refreshment of themselves and their cattle; for he represents the whole camp as being sprinkled or immersed in the humidity of its vapours, and expressly calls it a being under the cloud, and being baptized in the cloud. To the circumstance of the cloud covering them, there are several references in scripture. Thus Ps. cv. 39; Isa. iv. 5.

Verse 22. He took not away the pillar of the cloud. Neither Jews nor Gentiles are agreed how long the cloud continued with the Israelites. It is very probable that it first visited them at Succoth, if it did not accompany them from Rameses; and that it continued with them till they came to the river Jordan, to pass over opposite to Jericho, for after that it appears that the ark alone was their guide, as it always marched at their head. See Josh. iii. 10, &c. But others think that it went no farther with them than Mount Hor, and never appeared after the death of Aaron. We may safely assert that while it was indispensably necessary it continued with them, when it was not so it was removed. But it is worthy of remark that the ark of the covenant became its substitute. While a miracle was necessary, a miracle was granted; when that was no longer necessary, then the testimony of the Lord deposited in the ark was deemed sufficient by Him who cannot err. So, under the gospel dispensation, miracles were necessary at its first promulgation; but after that the canon of scripture was completed, the new covenant having been made, ratified by the blood of the Lamb, and published by the Holy Spirit, then God withdrew generally those outward signs, leaving his word for a continual testimony, and sealing it on the souls of believers by the Spirit of truth.

It is worthy of remark that the ancient heathen writers represent their gods, in their pretended manifestations to men, as always encompassed with a cloud; Homer and Virgil abound with examples of this kind: and is it not very probable that they borrowed this, as they did many other things in their mythologic theology, from the tradition of Jehovah guiding his people through the desert by means of the cloud, in and by which he repeatedly manifested himself?

1. Extraordinary manifestations and interpositions of providence and grace should be held in continual remembrance. We are liable to forget the hole of the pit whence we were digged, and the rock whence we were hewn. Prudence and piety will institute their anniversaries, that the merciful dealings of the Lord may never be forgotten.

2. A serious public profession of the religion of Christ has in all ages of the church been considered not only highly becoming, but indispensably necessary to salvation. He who consistently confesses Christ before men shall be confessed by him before God and his angels. A Jew wore his phylacteries on his forehead, on his hands, and round his garments, that he might have reverence in the sight of the heathen; he gloried in his law, and he exulted that Abraham was his father. Christian! let the words of thy mouth, the acts of thy hands, and all thy goings, show that thou belongest unto God.

3. How merciful is God in the dispensations of his providence! He permits none to be tried above what he is able to bear, and he proportions the burden to the back that is to bear it. He led not the Israelites by the way of the Philistines, lest, seeing war, they should repent and be discouraged. Young converts are generally saved from severe spiritual conflicts and heavy temptations till they have acquired a habit of believing, are disciplined in the school of Christ, and instructed in the nature of the path in which they go, and the difficulties they may expect to find in it.

4. The providence and goodness of God are equally observable in the pillar of cloud and the pillar of fire. The former was a proof of his providential kindness by day; the latter, by night. Thus he adjusts the assistances of his grace and Spirit to the exigencies of his creatures, giving at some times, when peculiar trials require it, more particular manifestations of his mercy and goodness; but at all times, such evidences of his approbation as are sufficient to satisfy a pious faithful heart. It is the duty and interest of every sound believer in Christ to have the witness of God's Spirit in his soul at all times, that his spirit and ways please his Maker; but in seasons of peculiar difficulty he may expect the more sensible manifestations of God's goodness.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Israelites are commanded to encamp before Pi-hahiroth, 1, 2. God predicts the pursuit of Pharaoh, 3, 4. Pharaoh is informed that the Israelites are fled, and regrets that he suffered them to depart, 5. He musters his troops and pursues them, 6-8. Overtakes them in their encampment by the Red Sea, 9. The Israelites are terrified at his approach, 10. They murmur against Moses for leading them out, 11, 12. Moses encourages them, and assures them of deliverance, 13, 14. God commands the Israelites to advance, and Moses to stretch out his rod over the sea that it might be divided, 15, 16; and promises utterly to discomfit the Egyptians, 17, 18. The angel of God places himself between the Israelites and the Egyptians, 19. The pillar of the cloud becomes darkness to the Egyptians, while it gives light to the Israelites, 20. Moses stretches out his rod, and a strong east wind blows, and the waters are divided, 21. The Israelites enter and walk on dry ground, 22. The Egyptians enter also, in pursuit of the Israelites, 23. The Lord looks out of the pillar of cloud on the Egyptians, terrifies them, and disjoins their chariots, 24, 25. Moses is commanded to stretch forth his rod over the waters, that they may return to their former bed, 26. He does so, and the whole Egyptian army is overwhelmed, 27, 28, while every Israelite escapes, 29. Being thus saved from the hand of their adversaries, they acknowledge the power of God, and credit the mission of Moses, 30, 31.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto the children of Israel,
* that they turn and encamp before <sup>b</sup> Pi-hahiroth, between <sup>c</sup> Migdol and the sea, over against Baal-zephon; before it shall ye encamp by the sea.

3 For Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel, * They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in.

4 And * I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them; and I * will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host; * that the Egyptians may know that I am the LORD. And they did so.

5 And it was told the king of Egypt that the people fled: and <sup>b</sup> the heart of Pharaoh and of his servants was turned against the people, and they said, Why have we done this, that we have let Israel go from serving us?

6 And he made ready his chariot, and took his people with him:

7 And he took <sup>1</sup> six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them.

8 And the LORD <sup>1</sup> hardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and he pursued after the children of Israel: and <sup>k</sup> the children of Israel went out with an high hand.

Verse 2. Encamp before Pi-hahiroth] The mouth, strait, or bay of Chiroth. Between Migdol, the tower, probably a fortress that served to defend the bay. Over against Baalzephon, the lord or master of the watch, probably an idol temple, where a continual guard, watch, or light was kept up for the defence of one part of the haven, or as a guide to ships.

Verse 3. They are entangled in the land] God himself brought them into straits from which no human power or art could extricate them. They had the Red Sea before them, Pharaoh and his host behind them, and on their right and left hand fortresses of the Egyptians to prevent their escape; nor had they one boat or transport prepared for their passage! By bringing them into such a situation he took from them all hope of human help, and gave their adversaries every advantage against them, so that they said, They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in.

Verse 4. I will harden Pharaoh's heart] After relenting and giving them permission to depart, he now changes his mind and determines to prevent them; and without any further restraining grace, God permits him to rush on to his final ruin, for the cup of his iniquity was now full.

Verse 5. And it was told the king—that the people fled] Of their departure he could not be ignorant, because himself had given them liberty to depart: but the word fled here may be understood as implying that they had utterly left Egypt without any intention to return, which is probably what he did not expect, for he had only given them permission to go three days' journey into the wilderness, in order to sacrifice to Jehovah; but from the circumstances of their departure, and the property they had got from the Egyptians, it was taken for granted that they had no design to return; and this was in all likelihood the consideration that weighed most with this avaricious king, and determined him to pursue, and either recover the spoil or bring them back, or both. Here was the grand incentive to pursuit; their service was profitable to the state, and they were determined not to give it up.

Verse 7. Six hundred chosen chariots, &c.] According to the most authentic accounts we have of war-chariots, they were frequently drawn by two or by four horses, and carried three persons: one was charioteer, whose business it was to guide the horses, but he seldom fought; the second chiefly 9 But the <sup>1</sup> Egyptians pursued after them (all the horses and chariots of Pharaoh, and his horsemen, and his army), and overtook them encamping by the sea, beside Pi-hahiroth before Baal-zephon.

10 And when Pharaoh drew nigh, the children of Israel lifted up their eyes, and, behold, the Egyptians marched after them; and they were sore afraid:
and the children of Israel <sup>m</sup> cried out unto the LORD.

11 * And they said unto Moses, Because there were no graves in Egypt, hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness? wherefore hast thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt?

12 * Is not this the word that we did tell thee in Egypt, saying, Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians? For it had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than that we should die in the wilderness.

13 And Moses said unto the people, <sup>p</sup> Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the LORD, which he will shew to you to day: <sup>q</sup> for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to day, ye shall see them again no more for ever.

14 * The LORD shall fight for you, and ye shall * hold your peace.

15 And the LORD said unto Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto me? speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward:

defended the charioteer; and the third alone was properly the combatant. It appears that in this case Pharaoh had collected all the cavalry of Egypt; and though these might not have been very numerous, yet, humanly speaking, they might easily overcome the unarmed and encumbered Israelites, who could not be supposed to be able to make any resistance against cavalry and war-chariots.

Verse 10. The children of Israel cried out unto the Lord.] Had their prayer been accompanied with faith, we should not have found them in the next verses murmuring against Moses, or rather against the Lord, through whose goodness they were now brought from under that bondage from which they had often cried for deliverance.

Verse 13. Moses said—Fear ye not] This exhortation was not given to excite them to resist, for of that there was no hope; they were unarmed, they had no courage, and their minds were deplorably degraded.

Stand still] Ye shall not be even workers together with God; only be quiet, and do not render yourselves wretched by your fears and your confusion.

See the salvation of the Lord] Behold the deliverance which God will work, independently of all human help and means.

Ye shall see them again no more] Here was strong faith, but this was accompanied by the spirit of prophecy. God showed Moses what he would do, he believed, and therefore he spoke in the encouraging manner related above.

Verse 14. The Lord shall fight for you] Ye shall have no part in the honour of the day; God alone shall bring you off, and defeat your foes.

Ye shall hold your peace] Your unbelieving fears and clamours shall be confounded, and ye shall see that by night none shall be able to prevail against the Lord, and that the feeblest shall take the prey when the power of Jehovah is exerted.

Verse 15. Wherefore criest thou unto me?] We hear not one word of Moses' praying, and yet here the Lord asks him why he cries unto him? From which we may learn that the heart of Moses was deeply engaged with God, though it is probable he did not articulate one word; but the language of sighs, tears, and desires is equally intelligible to God with that of words. This consideration should be a strong encouragement to every feeble discouraged mind: Thou canst not pray, but thou canst weep; if even tears are denied thee,

16 But <sup>a</sup>lift thou up thy rod, and stretch out thine hand over the sea, and divide it: and the children of Israel shall go on dry ground through the midst of the sea.

17 And I, behold, I will <sup>b</sup>harden the hearts of the Egyptians, and they shall follow them: and I will <sup>c</sup>get me honour upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

18 And the Egyptians <sup>d</sup>shall know that I am the LORD, when I have gotten me honour upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

19 And the angel of God, <sup>e</sup>which went before the camp of Israel, removed and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them;

20 And it came between the camp of the Egyptians, and the camp of Israel; and <sup>f</sup>it was a cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these: so that the one came not near the other all the night.

thou thou canst sigh; and God knows thy unutterable groanings, and reads the inexpressible wish of thy burdened soul, a wish of which himself is the author, and which he has breathed into thy heart with the purpose to satisfy it.

Verse 16. Lift thou up thy rod] Neither Moses nor his rod could be any effective instrument in a work which could be accomplished only by the omnipotence of God; but it was necessary that he should appear in it, in order that he might have credit in the sight of the Israelites, and that they might see that God had chosen him to be the instrument of their deliverance.

Verse 18. Shall know that I am the Lord] God is determined to make the overthrow so signal by such an exertion of omnipotence, that he shall get himself honour by this miraculous act, and that the Egyptians shall know, i.e. acknowledge, that he is Jehovah, the omnipotent, self-existing, eternal God.

Verse 19. The angel of God] It has been thought by some that the angel, i.e. messenger, of the Lord, and the pillar of cloud, mean here the same thing. An angel might assume the appearance of a cloud: and even a material cloud thus particularly appointed might be called an angel or messenger of the Lord, for such is the literal import of the word malach, an angel. It is however most probable that the Angel of the covenant, the Lord Jesus, appeared on this occasion in behalf of the people; for as this deliverance was to be an illustrious type of the deliverance of man from the power and guilt of sin by his incarnation and death, it might have been deemed necessary, in the judgment of divine wisdom, that he should appear chief agent in this most important and momentous crisis. On the word angel, and Angel of the covenant, see the notes on Gen. xvi. 7, xviii. 13, and Exod. iii. 2.

Verse 20. It was a cloud and darkness to them, &c.] That the Israelites might not be dismayed at the appearance of their enemies, and that those might not be able to discern the object of their pursuit, the pillar of cloud moved from the front to the rear of the Israelitish camp, so as perfectly to separate between them and the Egyptians. It appears also that this cloud had two sides, one dark and the other luminous; the luminous side gave light to the whole camp of Israel during the night of passage; and the dark side, turned towards the pursuing Egyptians, prevented them from receiving any benefit from that light. How easily can God make the same thing an instrument of destruction or salvation, as seems best to his godly wisdom!

Verse 21. The Lord caused the sea to go back] That part of the sea over which the Israelites passed was, according to travellers, about four leagues across, and therefore might easily be crossed in one night. In the dividing of the sea two agents appear to be employed, though the effect produced can be attributed to neither. By stretching out the rod the waters were divided; by the blowing of the vehem-

21 And Moses <sup>a</sup>stretched out his hand over the sea; and the LORD caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and <sup>b</sup>made the sea dry land, and the waters were <sup>c</sup>divided.

22 And <sup>d</sup>the children of Israel went into the midst of the sea, upon the dry ground: and the waters were <sup>e</sup>a wall unto them on their right hand and on their left.

23 And the Egyptians pursued, and went in after them to the midst of the sea, even all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots, and his horsemen.

24 And it came to pass, that in the morning watch <sup>f</sup>the LORD looked unto the host of the Egyptians, through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the host of the Egyptians, ment, ardent, east wind, the bed of the sea was dried. It has been observed, that in the place where the Israelites are supposed to have passed, the water is about fourteen fathoms or twenty-eight yards deep: had the wind mentioned here been strong enough, naturally speaking, to have divided the waters, it must have blown in one narrow track, and continued blowing in the direction in which the Israelites passed; and a wind sufficient to have raised a mass of water twenty-eight yards deep and twelve miles in length, out of its bed, would necessarily have blown the whole six hundred thousand men away, and utterly destroyed them and their cattle. I therefore conclude that the east wind, which was ever remarked as a parching, burning wind, was used after the division of the waters, merely to dry the bottom, and render it passable. God ever puts the highest honour upon his instrument Nature; and where it can act, he ever employs it. No natural agent could divide these waters, and cause them to stand as a wall upon the right hand and upon the left; therefore God did it by his own sovereign power. When the waters were thus divided, there was no need of a miracle to dry the bed of the sea and make it passable; therefore the strong desiccating east wind was brought, which soon accomplished this object. In this light I suppose the text should be understood.

Verse 22. And the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.] This verse demonstrates that the passage was miraculous. Some have supposed that the Israelites had passed through, favoured by an extraordinary ebb, which happened at that time to be produced by a strong wind, which happened just then to blow! Had this been the case, there could not have been waters standing on the right hand and on the left; much less could those waters, contrary to every law of fluids, have stood as a wall on either side while the Israelites passed through, and then happen to become obedient to the laws of gravitation when the Egyptians entered in! An infidel may deny the revelation in toto, and from such we expect nothing better; but to hear those who profess to believe this to be a divine revelation endeavouring to prove that the passage of the Red Sea had nothing miraculous in it, is really intolerable. Such a mode of interpretation requires a miracle to make itself credible.

Verse 24. The morning watch] A watch was the fourth part of the time from sun-setting to sun-rising; so called from soldiers keeping guard by night, who being changed four times during the night, the periods came to be called watches.

As the Israelites went out of Egypt at the vernal equinox, the morning watch, or, according to the Hebrew, the watch of day-break, would answer to our four o'clock in the morning.

The Lord looked unto] This probably means that the cloud suddenly assumed a fiery appearance where it had been dark before; or they were appalled by violent thunders and lightning, which we are assured by the Psalmist did actually thine hand over the sea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horsemen.

27 And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the sea <sup>a</sup> returned to his strength when the morning appeared; and the Egyptians fled against it; and the Lord <sup>b</sup> overthrew <sup>c</sup> the Egyptians in the midst of the sea.

28 And <sup>d</sup> the waters returned, and <sup>e</sup> covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh, that came into the sea after them; there remained not so much as one of them.

take place, together with great inundations of rain, &c., Ps. lxxvii. 17-20. Such tempests as these would necessarily terrify the Egyptian horses, and produce general confusion. By their dashing hither and thither the wheels must be destroyed, and the chariots broken; and foot and horse must be mingled together in one universal ruin; see ver. 25. During the time that this state of horror and confusion was at its summit the Israelites had safely passed over; and then Moses, at the command of God (ver. 26), having stretched out his rod over the waters, the sea returned to its strength (ver. 27); i.e., the waters by their natural gravity resumed their level, and the whole Egyptian host were completely overwhelmed, ver. 28. Thus the enemies of the Lord perished; and that people who decreed that the male children of the Hebrews should be drowned, were themselves destroyed in the pit which they had destined for others. God's ways are all equal; and he renders to every man according to his works.

Verse 28. There remained not so much as one of them. Josephus says that the army of Pharaoh consisted of fifty thousand horse, and two hundred thousand foot, of whom not one remained to carry tidings of this most extraordinary catastrophe.

29 But 'the children of Israel walked upon dry land, in the midst of the sea; and the waters were a wall unto them, on their right hand, and on their left.

30 Thus the Lord <sup>a</sup> saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians; and Israel <sup>b</sup> saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea-shore.

31 And Israel saw that great <sup>c</sup> work which the Lord did upon the Egyptians: and the people feared the Lord, and <sup>d</sup> believed the Lord, and his servant Moses.

Verse 30. Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea-shore. By the extraordinary agitation of the waters, no doubt multitudes of the dead Egyptians were cast on the shore, and by their spoils the Israelites were probably furnished with considerable riches, and especially clothing and arms; which latter were essentially necessary to them in their wars with the Amalekites, Basanites, and Amorites, &c., on their way to the promised land. If they did not get their arms in this way, we know not how they got them, as there is not the slightest reason to believe that they brought any with them out of Egypt.

Verse 31. The people feared the Lord. They were convinced by the interference of Jehovah that his power was unlimited, and that he could do whatsoever he pleased, both in the way of judgment and in the way of mercy.

And believed the Lord, and his servant Moses. They now clearly discerned that God had fulfilled all his promises; and that not one thing had failed of all the good which he had spoken concerning Israel. And they believed his servant Moses—they had now the fullest proof that he was divinely appointed to work all these miracles, and to bring them out of Egypt into the promised land.

CHAPTER XV.

Moses and the Israelites sing a song of praise to God for their late deliverance, in which they celebrate the power of God, gloriously manifested in the destruction of Pharaoh and his host, 1, express their confidence in him as their strength and protector, 2, 3; detail the chief circumstances in the overthrow of the Egyptians, 4-8; and relate the purposes they had formed for the destruction of God's people, 9, and how he destroyed them in the imaginations of their hearts, 10. Jehovah is celebrated for the perfections of his nature and his wondrous works, 11-13. A prediction of the effect which the account of the destruction of the Egyptians should have on the Edomites, Moabites, and Canaanites, 14-16. A prediction of the establishment of Israel in the promised land, 17. The full chorus of praise, 18. Recapitulation of the destruction of the Egyptians, and the deliverance of Israel, 19. Miriam and the women join in and prolong the chorus, 20, 21. The people travel three days in the wilderness of Shur, and find no water, 22. Coming to Marah, and finding bitter waters, they murmur against Moses, 23, 24. In answer to the prayer of Moses, God shows him a tree by which the waters are sweetened, 25. God gives them statutes and gracious promises, 26. They come to Elim, where they find twelve wells of water and seventy palm trees, and there they encamp, 27.

THEN sang <sup>a</sup> Moses and the children of Israel this song unto the Lord; and spake, saying, I will <sup>b</sup> sing unto the Lord, for he hath Verse 1. Then sang Moses and the children of Israel this song. POETRY has been cultivated in all ages and among all people, from the most refined to the most barbarous; and to it, principally, under the kind providence of God, we are indebted for most of the original accounts we have of the ancient nations of the universe. The interesting events celebrated, the rhythm or metre, and the accompanying tune triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.

or recitative air, rendered them easily transmissible to posterity; and by means of tradition they passed safely from father to son through the times of comparative darkness, till they arrived at those ages in which the pen and the press have given them a sort of deathless duration and permanent stability, by multiplying the copies. Even the prose histories, which were written on the ground of the poetic, copied

5 <sup>b</sup>The depths have covered them: <sup>c</sup>they sank into the bottom as a stone.

6 <sup>b</sup>Thy right hand, O Lord, is become glorious in power: thy right hand, O Lord, hath dashed in pieces the enemy.

7 And in the greatness of thine <sup>b</sup>excellency thou hast overthrown them that rose up against thee:

closely their exemplars, and the historians themselves were obliged to study all the beauties and ornaments of style, that their works might become popular; and to this circumstance we owe not a small measure of what is termed refinement of language. Much of our sacred records is written in poetry, which God has thus consecrated to be the faithful transmitter of remote and important events; and of this, the song before the reader is a proof in point. Though this is not the first specimen of poetry we have met with in the Pentateuch, yet it is the first regular ode of any considerable length, having but one subject; and it is all written in hemistichs, or half-lines, the usual form in Hebrew poetry; and though this form frequently occurs, it is not attended to in our common printed Hebrew Bibles, except in this and three other places, all of which shall be noticed as they occur.

After what has been said, it is perhaps scarcely necessary to observe, that as such ancient poetic histories commemorated great and extraordinary displays of providence, courage, strength, fidelity, heroism, and piety; hence the origin of epic poems, of which the song in this chapter is the earliest specimen. And on the principle of preserving the memory of such events, most nations have had their epic poets, who have generally taken for their subject the most splendid or most remote events of their country's history, which either referred to the formation or extension of their empire, the exploits of their ancestors, or the establishment of their religion.

[I will sing unto the Lord] Moses begins the song, and in the two first hemistichs states the subject of it; and these two first lines become the grand chorus of the piece, as we may learn from ver. 21.

[Triumphed gloriously] He is exceedingly exalted; and surely this was one of the most signal displays of the glorious majesty of God ever exhibited since the creation of the world. And when it is considered that the whole of this transaction shadowed out the redemption of the human race from the thralldom and power of sin and iniquity by the Lord Jesus, and the final triumph of the church of God over all its enemies, we may also join in the song, and celebrate him who has triumphed so gloriously, having conquered death, and opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers.

Verse 2. The Lord is my strength and song] How judiciously are the members of this sentence arranged! He who has God for his strength, will have him for his song; and he to whom Jehovah is become salvation, will exalt his name. Miserably and untunably, in the ears of God, does that man sing praises, who is not saved by the grace of Christ nor strengthened by the power of his might.

It is worthy of observation that the word which we translate LORD here is not JEHOVAH in the original, but JAH.

JAH is several times joined with the name Jehovah, so that we may be sure that it is not, as some have supposed, a mere abbreviation of that word. Our blessed Lord solemnly claims to himself what is intended in this divine name, JAH, John viii. 58: "Before Abraham was, 'I AM,' not I was, but I am, plainly intimating his divine, eternal existence. And the Jews appear to have well understood him, for then they took up stones to cast at him as a blasphemer. Compare Col. i. 16, 17, where the Apostle Paul, after asserting that all thou sentest forth thy wrath, which <sup>1</sup>consumed them <sup>m</sup>as stubble.

8 And <sup>a</sup>with the blast of thy nostrils the waters were gathered together, <sup>b</sup>the floods stood upright as an heap, and the depths were congealed in the heart of the sea.

9 <sup>p</sup>The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will <sup>a</sup>divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my sword, my hand shall <sup>a</sup>destroy them.

10 Thou didst <sup>a</sup>blow with thy wind, <sup>b</sup>the sea covered them: they sank as lead in the mighty waters.

things that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible, were created by and for Christ, adds, And HE IS (not was) before all things, and by him all things συνεστηκε, have subsisted, and still subsist.

[I will prepare him an habitation] It has been supposed that Moses, by this expression, intended the building of the tabernacle; but it seems to come in very strangely in this place. Most of the ancient Versions understood the original in a very different sense. Our own old translations are generally different from the present: Coverdale, "This my God, I will magnify him;" Matthew's, Cranmer's and the Bishop's Bible, render it glorify, and the sense of the place seems to require it.

[My father's God] I believe Houbigant to be right, who translates the original, Holoyeh abi, "My God is my Father." Every man may call the Divine Being his God; but only those who are his children by adoption through grace can call him their FATHER. This is a privilege which God has given to none but his children.

Verse 3. The Lord is a man of war] Perhaps it would be better to translate the words, Jehovah is the man or hero of the battle. As we scarcely ever apply the term to any thing but first-rate armed vessels, the change of the translation seems indispensable, though the common rendering is literal enough. Besides, the object of Moses was to show that man had no part in this victory, but that the whole was wrought by the miraculous power of God, and that therefore he alone should have all the glory.

The Lord is his name.] That is, JEHOVAH. He has now, as the name implies, given complete existence to all his promises.

Verse 4. Pharaoh's chariots—his host—his chosen captains] On such an expedition it is likely that the principal Egyptian nobility accompanied their king, and that the overthrow they met with here had reduced Egypt to the lowest extremity. Had the Israelites been intent on plunder, or had Moses been influenced by a spirit of ambition, how easily might both have gratified themselves, as had they returned they might have soon overrun and subjugated the whole land.

Verse 6. Thy right hand] Thy Omnipotence, manifested in a most extraordinary way.

Verse 7. In the greatness of thine excellency] To this wonderful deliverance the prophet Isaiah refers, chap. lxxiii. 11-14.

Verse 8. The depths were congealed] The strong east wind employed to dry the bottom of the sea, is here represented as the blast of God's nostrils that had congealed or frozen the waters, so that they stood in heaps like a wall on the right hand and on the left.

Verse 9. The enemy said] As this song was composed by divine inspiration, we may rest assured that those words were spoken by Pharaoh and his captains, and the passions they describe felt, in their utmost sway, in their hearts; but how soon was their boasting confounded!

Verse 11. Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods?] We have already seen that all the Egyptian gods, or the objects of the Egyptians' idolatry, were confounded and rendered completely despicable by the ten plagues, which appear to have been directed principally against them. Here * gods? who is like thee, <sup>b</sup> glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, <sup>c</sup> doing wonders?

12 Thou stretchedst out <sup>d</sup> thy right hand, the earth swallowed them.

13 Thou in thy mercy hast <sup>e</sup> led forth the people which thou hast redeemed: thou hast guided them in thy strength unto <sup>f</sup> thy holy habitation.

14 <sup>g</sup> The people shall hear, and be afraid: <sup>h</sup> sorrow shall take hold on the inhabitants of Palestina.

16 <sup>m</sup> Fear and dread shall fall upon them; by the greatness of thine arm, they shall be as still <sup>n</sup> as a stone; till thy people pass over, O LORD, till the people pass over, <sup>o</sup> which thou hast purchased. 17 Thou shalt bring them in; and <sup>p</sup> plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O LORD, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in, in the <sup>q</sup> sanctuary, O LORD, which thy hands have established.

18 <sup>r</sup> The LORD shall reign for ever and ever.

20 And Miriam <sup>u</sup> the prophetess, <sup>v</sup> the sister of Aaron, <sup>w</sup> took a timbrel in her hand; and all the women went out after her <sup>x</sup> with timbrels and with dances.

the people of God exult over them afresh: Who among these gods is like unto THEE? They can neither save nor destroy; THOU dost both in the most signal manner.

The original words are supposed to have constituted the motto on the ensign of the Assyrians, and to have furnished the name of Maccabeus to Judas, their grand captain, from whom they were afterwards called Maccabeans. It is possible that Judas Maccabeus might have had this motto on his ensign, or at least the initial letters of it, for such a practice was not uncommon. It is most likely that the name must have been derived from nakkab, a hammer or mallet; hence Judas, because of his bravery and success, might have been denominated the hammer or mallet by which the enemies of God had been beaten, powdered, and broken to pieces.

Glorious in holiness] Infinitely resplendent in this attribute, essential to the perfection of the divine nature.

Fearful in praises] Such glorious holiness cannot be approached without the deepest reverence and fear, even by angels, who veil their faces before the majesty of God. How then should man, who is only sin and dust, approach the presence of his Maker!

Doing wonders] Every part of the work of God is wonderful; not only miracles, which imply an inversion or suspension of the laws of nature, but every part of nature itself. Who can conceive how a single blade of grass is formed; or how earth, air, and water become consolidated in the body of the oak? And who can comprehend how the different tribes of plants and animals are preserved, in all the distinctive characteristics of their respective natures? And who can conceive how the human being is formed, nourished, and its different parts developed? What is the true cause of the circulation of the blood? or, how different aliments produce the solids and fluids of the animal machine? What is life, sleep, death? And how an impure and unholy soul is regenerated, purified, refined, and made like unto its great Creator? These are wonders which God alone works, and to Himself only are they fully known.

Verse 12. The earth swallowed them.] It is very likely there was also an earthquake on this occasion, and that chasms were made in the bottom of the sea by which many of them were swallowed up, though multitudes were overwhelmed by the waters, whose dead bodies were afterwards thrown ashore. The psalmist strongly intimates that there was an earthquake on this occasion: Psalm lxxvii. 18.

Verse 13. Thou hast guided them in thy strength unto thy holy habitation.] As this ode was dictated by the Spirit of God, it is most natural to understand this and the following verses to the end of the 18th as containing a prediction of what God would do for this people which he had so miraculously redeemed. On this mode of interpretation it would be better to read several of the verbs in the future tense.

Verse 15. The dukes of Edom.] Idumea was governed at this time by those called alluphim, heads, chiefs, or captains.

Verse 16. Till thy people pass over] Not over the Red Sea, for that event had been already celebrated; but over the desert and Jordan, in order to be brought into the promised land.

Verse 17. Thou shalt bring them in.] By thy strength and mercy alone shall they get the promised inheritance.

And plant them] Give them a fixed habitation in Canaan, after their unsettled, wandering life in the wilderness.

In the mountain] Meaning Canaan, which was a very mountainous country: or probably Mount Zion, on which the temple was built. Where the pure worship of God was established, there the people might expect both rest and safety. Wherever the purity of religion is established and preserved, and the high and the low endeavour to regulate their lives according to its precepts, the government of that country is likely to be permanent.

Verse 18. The Lord shall reign for ever and ever.] This is properly the grand chorus in which all the people joined. The words are expressive of God's everlasting dominion, not only in the world, but in the church; not only under the law, but also under the gospel; not only in time, but through eternity. The original may be translated, for ever and onward; or, by our very expressive compound term, for EVERMORE, i.e. for ever and more—not only through time, but also through all duration. His dominion shall be ever the same, active and infinitely extending. With this verse the song seems to end, as with it the hemistichs or poetic lines terminate.

Verse 20. And Miriam the prophetess] We have already seen that Miriam was older than either Moses or Aaron: for when Moses was exposed on the Nile, she was a young girl capable of managing the stratagem used for the preservation of his life; and then Aaron was only three years and three months old, for he was fourscore and three years old when Moses was but fourscore (see chap. vii. 7); so that Aaron was older than Moses, and Miriam considerably older than either, not less probably than nine or ten years.

There is great diversity of opinion on the origin of the name of Miriam. Some suppose it to be compounded of mar, a drop, and yam, the sea, and that from this etymology the heathens formed their Venus, whom they feign to have sprung from the sea.

The prophetess.—It is very likely that Miriam was inspired by the Spirit of God to instruct the Hebrew women, as Moses and Aaron were to instruct the men; and when she and her brother Aaron sought to share in the government of the people with Moses, we find her laying claim to the prophetic influence, Num. xii. 2: Hath the Lord indeed spoken only by Moses? Hath he not SPOKEN ALSO BY US? And that she was constituted joint leader of the people with her two brothers, we have the express word of God by the prophet Micah, chap. vi. 4: For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt—and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. Hence it is very likely that she was the instructress of the women, and regulated the times, places, &c., of their devotional acts; for it appears that from the beginning to the present day the Jewish women all worshipped apart.

A timbrel] The same word which is translated tabret, Gen. xxxi. 27.

And with dances.] Many learned men suppose that this word means some instruments of wind music, because the word comes from the root chalal, the ideal meaning of which 21 And Miriam answered them, <sup>b</sup>Sing ye to the LORD, for he hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.

22 So Moses brought Israel from the Red Sea, and they went out into the wilderness of <sup>c</sup>Shur; and they went three days in the wilderness, and found no water.

23 And when they came to <sup>d</sup>Marah, they could not drink of the waters of Marah, for they were bitter: therefore the name of it was called <sup>e</sup>Marah.

24 And the people murmured against Moses, saying, What shall we drink?

is to perjure, penetrate, pierce, stab, and hence to wound. Pipes or hollow tubes, such as flutes, hautboys, and the like, may be intended. Both the Arabic and Persian understand it as meaning instruments of music of the pipe, drum, or sistrum kind; and this seems to comport better with the scope and design of the place than the term dances. It must however be allowed that religious dances have been in use from the remotest times; and yet in most of the places where the term occurs in our translation, an instrument of music bids as fair to be its meaning as a dance of any kind. Miriam is the first prophetess on record, and by this we find that God not only poured out his Spirit upon men, but upon women also; and we learn also that Miriam was not only a prophetess, but a poetess also, and must have had considerable skill in music to have been able to conduct her part of these solemnities. It may appear strange that, during so long an oppression in Egypt, the Israelites were able to cultivate the fine arts, but that they did so, there is the utmost evidence from the Pentateuch. Not only architecture, weaving, and such necessary arts, were well known among them, but also the arts that are called ornamental, such as those of the goldsmith, lapidary, embroiderer, furrier, &c., of which we have ample proof in the construction of the tabernacle and its utensils. However ungrateful, rebellious, &c., the Jews may have been, the praise of industry and economy can never be denied them. In former ages, and in all places, even of their dispersions, they appear to have been frugal and industrious, and capable of great proficiency in the most elegant and curious arts; but they are now greatly degenerated.

Verse 22. The wilderness of Shur] This was on the coast of the Red Sea on their road to Mount Sinai. See the map.

Verse 23. Marah] So called from the bitter waters found there. [Identical with the present Howarah, the waters of which are yet bitter and brackish.]

Verse 24. The people murmured] They were in a state of great mental degradation, owing to their long and oppressive vassalage, and had no firmness of character.

Verse 25. He cried unto the Lord] Moses was not only their leader, but also their mediator. Of prayer and dependence on the Almighty, the great mass of the Israelites appear to have had little knowledge at this time. Moses, therefore, had much to bear from their weakness, and the merciful Lord was long-suffering.

The Lord shewed him a tree] What this tree was we know not: some think that the tree was extremely bitter itself, such as the quassia; and that God acted in this as he generally does, correcting contraries by contraries.

Many suppose that this tree which healed the bitter waters was symbolical of the cross of our blessed Redeemer, that has been the means of healing infected nature, and through the virtues of which the evils and bitters of life are sweetened, and rendered subservient to the best interests of God's followers. Whatever may be in the metaphor, this is true in fact; and hence the greatest of apostles gloried in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by which the world was crucified to him, and he unto the world.

We may infer that the natural cause of the bitterness or brackishness of the waters was permitted to resume its operations, when the occasion that rendered the change necessary had ceased to exist. Thus Christ simply changed that water into wine which was to be drawn out to be carried to the the waters, the waters were made sweet. There he made for them a statute and an ordinance, and there he proved them.

26 And said, <sup>i</sup>If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, and wilt do that which is right in his sight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes, I will put none of these <sup>m</sup>diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians: for I am the LORD <sup>n</sup>that healeth thee.

27 And they came to Elim, where were twelve wells of water, and threescore and ten palm-trees: and they encamped there by the waters.

master of the feast; the rest of the water in the pots remaining as before. As the water of the Nile, to which they had been long accustomed, was so peculiarly excellent, they could not easily put up with what was indifferent.

There he made for them] Though it is probable that the Israelites are here intended, yet the word to should not be translated for them, but to him, for these statutes were given to Moses that he might deliver them to the people.

There he proved them.] Nissalvu, he proved them. By this murmuring of the people he proved Moses, to see, speaking after the manner of men, whether he would be faithful, and, in the midst of the trials to which he was likely to be exposed, whether he would continue to trust in the Lord, and seek all his help from him.

Verse 26. If thou wilt diligently hearken] This statute and ordinance implied the three following particulars: 1. That they should acknowledge Jehovah for their God, and thus avoid all idolatry. 2. That they should receive his word and testimony as a divine revelation, binding on their hearts and lives, and thus be saved from profligacy of every kind, and from acknowledging the maxims or adopting the customs of the neighbouring nations. 3. That they should continue to do so, and adorn their profession with a holy life. These things being attended to, then the promise of God was that they should have none of the diseases of the Egyptians put on them; that they should be kept in a state of health of body and peace of mind; and if at any time they should be afflicted, on application to God the evil should be removed, because he was their healer or physician—I am the Lord that healeth thee. That the Israelites had in general a very good state of health, their history warrants us to believe; and when they were afflicted, as in the case of the fiery serpents, on application to God they were all healed.

Verse 27. They came to Elim] This was in the desert of Sin, and about two leagues from Tor, and thirty from Marah or Corandel. [Elim is identical with the Wadi Gharendel, still celebrated for its wells and palm-trees.]

1. When poetry is consecrated to the service of God, and employed to commemorate his marvellous acts, it then becomes a very useful hand-maid to piety, and God is honoured by his gifts. God inspired the song of Moses, and perhaps from this very circumstance it passed current among the most polished of the heathen nations, that a poet is a person divinely inspired.

2. The song of Moses is a proof of the miraculous passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea. There has been no period since the Hebrew nation left Egypt in which this song was not found among them, as composed on that occasion, and to commemorate that event. It may be therefore considered as completely authentic as any living witness could be who had himself passed through the Red Sea, and whose life had been protracted through all the intervening ages to the present day.

3. We have already seen that it is a song of triumph for the deliverance of the people of God, and that it was intended to point out the final salvation and triumph of the whole church of Christ; so that in the heaven of heavens the redeemed of the Lord, both among the Jews and the Gentiles, shall unite together to sing the song of Moses and the song of the Lamb.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Israelites journey from Elim, and come to the wilderness of Sin, 1. They murmur for lack of bread, 2, 3. God promises to rain bread from heaven for them, 4, of which they were to collect a double portion on the sixth day, 5. A miraculous supply of flesh in the evening, and bread in the morning, promised, 6-9. The glory of the Lord appears in the cloud, 10. Flesh and bread promised as a proof of God's care over them, 11, 12. Quails come and cover the whole camp, 13. And a dew fell which left a small round substance on the ground, which Moses tells them was the bread which God had sent, 14, 15. Directions for gathering it, 16. The Israelites gather each an omer, 17, 18. They are directed to leave none of it till the next day, 19; which some neglecting, it became putrid, 20. They gather it every morning, because it melted when the sun waxed hot, 21. Each person gathers two omers on the sixth day, 22. Moses commands them to keep the seventh as a sabbath to the Lord, 23. What was laid up for the sabbath did not putrefy, 24. Nothing of it fell on that day, hence the strict observance of the sabbath was enjoined, 25-30. The Israelites name the substance that fell with the dew manna; its appearance and taste described, 31. An omer of the manna is commanded to be laid up for a memorial of Jehovah's kindness, 32-34. The manna now sent continued daily for the space of forty years, 35. How much an omer contained, 36.

AND they <sup>a</sup> took their journey from Elim, and all the congregation of the children of Israel came unto the wilderness of <sup>b</sup> Sin, which <sup>c</sup> is between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month, after their departing out of the land of Egypt.

2 And the whole congregation of the children of Israel <sup>e</sup> murmured against Moses and Aaron, in the wilderness:

3 And the children of Israel said unto them, <sup>d</sup> Would to God we had died by the hand of the Lord, in the land of Egypt, <sup>e</sup> when we sat by the flesh pots, and when we did eat bread to the full; for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger.

4 Then said the Lord unto Moses, Behold, I will ruin <sup>f</sup> bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out, and gather <sup>g</sup> a certain rate every day, Verse 1. The wilderness of Sin] This desert lies between Elim and Sinai, and from Elim Mount Sinai can be seen distinctly. Before they came to the wilderness of Sin, they had a previous encampment by the Red Sea after they left Elim, of which Moses makes distinct mention, Numb. xxxiii. 10, 11.

The fifteenth day of the second month] This was afterwards called Ijar, and they had now left Egypt one month, during which it is probable they lived on the provisions they brought with them from Rameses, though it is possible they might have had a supply from the sea-coast.

Verse 2. The whole congregation—murmured] This is an additional proof of the degraded state of the minds of this people. And this very circumstance affords a convincing argument that a people so stupidly carnal could not have been induced to leave Egypt had they not been persuaded so to do by the most evident and striking miracles. Human nature can never be reduced to a more abject state in this world than that in which the body is enthralled by political slavery, and the soul debased by the influence of sin. These poor Hebrews were both slaves and sinners, and were therefore capable of the meanest and most disgraceful acts.

Verse 3. The flesh pots] As the Hebrews were in a state of slavery in Egypt, they were doubtless fed in various companies by their task-masters in particular places, where large pots or boilers were fixed for the purpose of cooking their victuals. To these there may be a reference in this place, and the whole speech only goes to prove that they preferred their bondage in Egypt to their present state in the wilderness; for they could not have been in a state of absolute want, as they had brought an abundance of flocks and herds with them out of Egypt.

Verse 4. I will rain bread] Therefore this substance was that I may <sup>h</sup> prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no.

5 And it shall come to pass, that on the sixth day they shall prepare that which they bring in; and <sup>i</sup> it shall be twice as much as they gather daily.

6 And Moses and Aaron said unto all the children of Israel, <sup>j</sup> At even, then ye shall know that the Lord hath brought you out from the land of Egypt:

7 And in the morning, then ye shall see <sup>k</sup> the glory of the Lord; for that he heareth your murmurings against the Lord: and <sup>l</sup> what are we, that ye murmur against us?

8 And Moses said, This shall be, when the Lord shall give you in the evening flesh to eat, and in the morning bread to the full; for that the Lord heareth your murmurings which ye murmur against not a production of the desert; nor was the dew that was the instrument of producing it common there, else they must have had this bread for a month before.

Verse 6. Ye shall know that the Lord hath brought you out] After all the miracles they had seen they appear still to suppose that their being brought out of Egypt was the work of Moses and Aaron; God therefore saw it necessary to give them a daily miracle in the full of the manna, that they might have the proof of his divine interposition constantly before their eyes.

Verse 7. Ye shall see the glory of the Lord] Does it not appear that the glory of the Lord is here spoken of as something distinct from the Lord? for it is said HE (the glory) heareth your murmurings against the Lord; though the Lord may be here put for himself, the antecedent instead of the relative. This passage may receive some light from Job. i. 3: Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, &c. And as St. Paul's words are spoken of the Lord Jesus, is it not likely that the words of Moses refer to him also? "No man hath seen God at any time;" hence we may infer that Christ was the visible agent in all the extraordinary and miraculous interferences which took place both in the patriarchal times and under the law.

Verse 8. In the evening flesh to eat] Viz., the quails; and in the morning bread to the full, viz., the manna.

And what are we?] Only his servants, obeying his commands.

Your murmurings are not against us] For we have not brought you up from Egypt; but against the Lord, who, by his own miraculous power and goodness, has brought you out of your slavery.

Verse 9. Come near before the Lord] This has been supposed to refer to some particular place, where the Lord mani-him : and what are we? your murmurings are not against us, but <sup>a</sup>against the Lord.

9 And Moses spake unto Aaron, Say unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, <sup>b</sup>Come near before the Lord: for he hath heard your murmurings.

10 And it came to pass, as Aaron spake unto the whole congregation of the children of Israel, that they looked toward the wilderness, and, behold, the glory of the Lord <sup>c</sup>appeared in the cloud.

11 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

12 <sup>d</sup>I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel: speak unto them, saying, <sup>e</sup>At even ye shall eat flesh, and <sup>f</sup>in the morning ye shall be filled with bread; and ye shall know that I am the Lord your God.

13 And it came to pass, that at even <sup>g</sup>the quails fasted his presence. The great tabernacle was not yet built, but there appears to have been a small tabernacle or tent called the Tabernacle of the Congregation, which after the sin of the golden calf, was always placed without the camp; see chap. xxxiii. 7. This could not be that portable temple which is described chap. xxvi., &c., and which was not set up till the first day of the first month of the second year, after their departure from Egypt (chap. xl.), which was upwards of ten months after the time mentioned in this chapter; and not withstanding this, the Israelites are commanded (ver. 34) to lay up an omer of the manna before the Testimony, which certainly refers to an ark, tabernacle, or some such portable shrine, already in existence. If the great tabernacle be intended, the whole account of laying up the manna must be introduced here by anticipation, Moses finishing the account of what was afterwards done, because the commencement of those circumstances which comprehended the reasons of the fact itself took place now.

But from the reasonings in the preceding verses it appears that much infidelity still reigned in the hearts of the people; and in order to convince them that it was God and not Moses that had brought them out of Egypt, he (Moses) desired them to come near, or pay particular attention to some extraordinary manifestation of the Lord. It is said, chap. xix. 17, that Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God. And in this instance there might have been a similar though less awful manifestation of the divine presence.

Verse 10. As Aaron spake] So he now became the spokesman or minister of Moses to the Hebrews, as he had been before unto Pharaoh.

Verse 13. At even the quails came] Salar, from salah, to be quiet, easy, or secure; and hence the quail, from their living at ease and plenty among the corn.

The difficulties which encumber the text, supposing these to be quails, led Bishop Patrick to imagine them to be locusts. The difficulties are three: "1. Their coming by a wind. 2. Their immense quantities, covering a circle of thirty or forty miles, two cubits thick. 3. Their being spread in the sun for drying, which would have been preposterous had they been quails, for it would have made them corrupt the sooner; but this is the principal way of preparing locusts to keep for a month or more, when they are boiled or otherwise dressed." [The common version is undoubtedly correct. Quails are yet abundant in the district.]

Verse 14. Behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing] It appears that this small round thing fell with the dew, or rather the dew fell first, and this substance fell on it. The dew might have been intended to cool the ground, that the manna on its fall might not be dissolved; for we find from ver. 21 that the heat of the sun melted it. The ground therefore being sufficiently cooled by the dew, the manna lay unmelted long enough for the Israelites to collect a sufficient quantity for their daily use.

Verse 15. They said one to another, It is manna: for they wist not what it was.] This is a most unfortunate translation, because it not only gives no sense, but it contradicts itself. The Hebrew man hu literally signifies, What is came up, and covered the camp: and in the morning <sup>h</sup>the dew lay round about the host.

14 And when the dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay <sup>i</sup>a small round thing, as small as the hoar frost on the ground.

15 And when the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another, <sup>j</sup>It is manna: for they wist not what it was. And Moses said unto them, <sup>k</sup>This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat.

this? for, says the text, they wist not what it was, and therefore they could not give it a name. Moses immediately answers the question, and says, This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat. From ver. 31 we learn that this substance was afterwards called man, probably in commemoration of the question they had asked on its first appearance. Almost all our own ancient Versions translate the words, What is this?

What this substance was we know not. It was nothing that was common to the wilderness. It is evident the Israelites never saw it before, for Moses says, Deut. viii. 3, 16: He fed thee with manna which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know: and it is very likely that nothing of the kind had ever been seen before; and by a pot of it being laid up in the ark, it is as likely that nothing of the kind ever appeared more, after the miraculous supply in the wilderness had ceased. It seems to have been created for the present occasion, and, like him whom it typified, to have been the only thing of the kind, the only bread from heaven, which God ever gave to preserve the life of man, as Christ is the true bread that came down from heaven, and was given for the life of the world.

Verse 16. An omer for every man] I shall here once for all give a short account of the measures of capacity among the Hebrews.

OMER, from the root amar, to press, squeeze, collect, and bind together; hence a sheaf of corn—a multitude of stalks pressed together. It is supposed that the omer, which contained about three quarts English, had its name from this circumstance; that it was the most contracted or the smallest measure of things dry known to the ancient Hebrews; for the kab, which was less, was not known till the reign of Jehoram, king of Israel, 2 Kings vi. 25.

The EPHAI, from aphah, to bake, because this was probably the quantity which was baked at one time. According to Bishop Cumberland the ephah contained seven gallons, two quarts, and about half a pint, wine measure; and as the omer was the tenth part of the ephah, ver. 36, it must have contained about six pints English.

The KAB is said to have contained about the sixth part of a seah, or three pints and one-third English.

The HOMER, chomer, mentioned Lev. xxvii. 16, was quite a different measure from that above, and is a different word in the Hebrew. The chomer was the largest measure of capacity among the Hebrews, being equal to ten baths or ephahs, amounting to about seventy-five gallons, three pints, English. See Ezek. xlv. 11, 13, 14.

The BATH was the largest measure of capacity next to the homer, of which it was the tenth part. It was the same as the ephah, and consequently contained about seven gallons, two quarts, and half a pint, and is always used in scripture as a measure of liquids.

The SEAH was a measure of capacity for things dry, equal to about two gallons and a half English.

The MIN, according to Bishop Cumberland, was the one-sixth part of an ephah, and contained a little more than one gallon and two pints.

The LOG was the smallest measure of capacity for liquids

17 And the children of Israel did so, and gathered, some more, some less.

18 And when they did mete it with an omer, * he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack: they gathered every man according to his eating.

19 And Moses said, Let no man leave of it till the morning.

20 Notwithstanding they hearkened not unto Moses; but some of them left of it until the morning, and it bred worms, and stank: and Moses was wroth with them.

21 And they gathered it every morning, every man according to his eating: and when the sun waxed hot, it melted.

22 And it came to pass, that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man: and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses.

23 And he said unto them, This is that which the Lord hath said, To-morrow is * the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord: bake that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over, lay up for you to be kept until the morning.

24 And they laid it up till the morning, as Moses bade: and it did not * stink, neither was there any worm therein.

25 And Moses said, Eat that to-day; for to-day is a sabbath unto the Lord: to-day ye shall not find it in the field.

26 *Six days ye shall gather it; but on the among the Hebrews, it contained about three quarters of a pint.

Take ye—for them which are in his tents.] Some might have been confined in their tents through sickness or infirmity, and charity required that those who were in health should gather a portion for them. For though the Psalmist says, Ps. cv. 37, There was not one feeble person among their tribes, this must refer principally to their healthy state when brought out of Egypt; for it appears that there were many infirm among them when attacked by the Amalekites.

Verse 17. Some more, some less.] According to their respective families, an omer for a man; and according to the number of infirm persons, whose wants they undertook to supply.

Verse 18. He that gathered much had nothing over] Because his gathering was in proportion to the number of persons for whom he had to provide. Probably every man gathered as much as he could; and then when brought home and measured by an omer, if he had a surplus, it went to supply the wants of some other family that had not been able to collect a sufficiency, the family being large, and the time in which the manna might be gathered, before the heat of the day, not being sufficient to collect enough for so numerous a household, several of whom might be so confined as not to be able to collect for themselves. Thus there was an equality, and in this light the words of St. Paul, 2 Cor. vii. 15, lead us to view the passage. Here the 36th verse should come in: Now an omer is the tenth part of an ephah.

Verse 19. Let no man leave of it till the morning.] For God would have them to take no thought for the morrow, and constantly to depend on him for their daily bread. And is not that petition in our Lord's prayer founded on this very circumstance, Give us day by day our daily bread?

Verse 20. It bred worms.] Their sinful curiosity and covetousness led them to make the trial; and they had a mass of the most loathsome putrefaction for their pains. How gracious is God! He is continually rendering disobedience and sin irksome to the transgressor; that finding his evil ways to be unprofitable, he may return to his Maker, and trust in God alone.

seventh day, which is the sabbath, in it there shall be none.

27 And it came to pass, that there went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather, and they found none.

28 And the Lord said unto Moses, How long * refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?

29 See, for that the Lord hath given you the sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days; abide ye every man in his place; let no man go out of his place on the seventh day.

30 So the people rested on the seventh day.

31 And the house of Israel called the name thereof Manna: and * it was like coriander seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.

32 And Moses said, This is the thing which the Lord commandeth, I'll an omer of it to be kept for your generations; that they may see the bread wherewith I have fed you in the wilderness, when I brought you forth from the land of Egypt.

33 And Moses said unto Aaron, *Take a pot, and put an omer full of manna therein, and lay it up before the Lord, to be kept for your generations.

34 As the Lord commanded Moses, so Aaron laid it up * before the Testimony, to be kept.

35 And the children of Israel did eat manna * forty years, * until they came to a land inhabited; they did eat manna, until they came unto the borders of the land of Canaan.

36 Now an omer is the tenth part of an ephah.

20. Num. xvii. 10. Deut. x. 5. 1 Kings viii. 9.—† Num. xxxiii. 88. Deut. viii. 2, 3. Neh. ix. 20, 21. John vi. 81, 40.—‡ Josh. v. 12. Neh. ix. 15.

Verse 22. On the sixth day they gathered twice as much] This they did that they might have a provision for the sabbath, for on that day no manna fell, ver. 26, 27. What a convincing miracle was this! Had it been a natural production, it would have fallen on the sabbath as at other times; and had there not been a supernatural influence to keep it sweet and pure, it would have been corrupted on the sabbath as well as on other days. By this series of miracles God showed his own power, presence, and goodness, 1. In sending the manna on each of the six days; 2. In sending none on the seventh, or sabbath; 3. In preserving it from putrefaction when laid up for the use of that day, though it infallibly corrupted if kept over night on any other day.

Verse 23. To-morrow is the rest of the holy sabbath] There is nothing either in the text or context that seems to intimate that the sabbath was now first given to the Israelites, as some have supposed: on the contrary, it is here spoken of as being perfectly well known, from its having been generally observed. The commandment it is true may be considered as being now renewed; because they might have supposed that in their unsettled state in the wilderness they might have been exempted from the observance of it. Thus we find, 1. That when God finished his creation, he instituted the sabbath; 2. When he brought the people out of Egypt, he insisted on the strict observance of it; 3. When he gave the LAW, he made it a tenth part of the whole, such importance has this institution in the eyes of the Supreme Being!

Verse 29. Abide ye every man in his place] Neither go out to seek manna nor for any other purpose: rest at home and devote your time to religious exercises. Several of the Jews understood by place in the text, the camp, and have generally supposed that no man should go out of the place, i.e. the city, town, or village in which he resides, any farther than one thousand cubits, about an English mile, which also is called a sabbath-day's journey, Acts i. 12; and so many cubits they consider the space round the city that constitutes its suburbs, which they draw from Num. xxxv. 3, 4. Some of the Jews have carried the rigorous observance of the letter of this law to such a length, that in whatever posture they find themselves on the sabbath morning when they awake, they continue in the same during the day; or should they be up and happen to fall, they refuse even to rise till the sabbath be ended!

Verse 34. Laid it up before the Testimony] The eduth or testimony belonged properly to the tabernacle, but that was not yet built. Some are of opinion that the tabernacle, built under the direction of Moses, was only a renewal of one that had existed in the patriarchal times. The word signifies reference to something beyond itself; thus the tabernacle, the manna, the tables of stone, Aaron's rod, &c., all bore reference and testimony to that spiritual good which was yet to come, viz., JESUS CHRIST and his salvation.

Verse 35. The children of Israel did eat manna forty years] From this verse it has been supposed that the book of Exodus was not written till after the miracle of the manna had ceased. But these words might have been added by Ezra, who under the direction of the Divine Spirit collected and digested the different inspired books, adding such supplementary, explanatory, and connecting sentences, as were deemed proper to complete and arrange the whole of the sacred canon. For previously to his time, according to the universal testimony of the Jews, all the books of the Old Testament were found in an unconnected and dispersed state.

Verse 36. Now an omer is the tenth part of an ephah.] The true place of this verse seems to be immediately after ver. 18, for here it has no connexion.

1. That the manna was a type of our blessed Redeemer, and of the salvation which he has provided for man, there can be no doubt, for in this way it is applied by Christ himself; and from it we may gather this general conclusion, that salvation is of the Lord. The Israelites must have perished in the wilderness, had not God fed them with bread from heaven; and every human soul must have perished, had not Jesus Christ come down from heaven, and given himself for the life of the world.

2. God would have the Israelites continually dependant on himself for all their supplies; but he would make them, in a certain way, workers with him. He provided the manna; they gathered and ate it. Thus the providence of God appears in such a way as to secure the co-operation of man. Though man should plant and water, yet it is God who giveth the increase. But if man neither plant nor water, God will give no increase. We cannot do God's work, and he will not do ours. Let us, therefore, both in things spiritual and temporal, be workers together with HIM.

3. This daily supply of the manna probably gave rise to that petition, Give us to day our daily bread. It is worthy of remark, 1. That what was left over night contrary to the command of God, bred worms and stank; 2. That a double portion was gathered on the day preceding the sabbath; 3. That this alone continued wholesome on the following day; and 4. That none fell on the sabbath! Hence we find that the sabbath was considered a divine institution previously to the giving of the Mosaic law; and that God continued to honour that day by permitting no manna to fall during its course. Whatever is earned on the sabbath is a curse on a man's property.

4. To show their children and children's children what God had done for their fathers, a pot of manna was laid up before the testimony. We should remember our providential and gracious deliverances in such a way as to give God the praise of his own grace. An ungrateful heart is always associated with an unbelieving mind and an unholy life. Like Israel, we should consider with what bread God has fed our fathers, and see that we have the same; the same Christ—the bread of life, the same doctrines, the same ordinances, and the same religious experience. Our fathers had religion enough to enable them to burn gloriously for the truth of God! Reader, hast thou so much of the life of God in thy soul, that thou couldst burn to ashes at the stake rather than lose it?

CHAPTER XVII.

The Israelites journey from the wilderness of Sin to Rephidim, 1, where they murmur for lack of water, 2, 3. Moses asks counsel of God, 4, who commands him to take his rod and smite the rock, 5, and promises that water should proceed from it for the people to drink, 6. The place is called Massah and Meribah, 7. The Amalekites attack Israel in Rephidim, 8. Joshua is commanded to fight with them, 9. Moses, Aaron, and Hur go to the top of a hill, and while Moses holds up his hand, the Israelites prevail; when he lets them down, Amalek prevails, 10, 11. Moses, being weary, sits down, and Aaron and Hur hold up his hands, 12. The Amalekites are totally routed, 13, and the event commanded to be recorded, 14. Moses builds an altar, and calls it JEHOVAH-NISSI, 15. Amalek is threatened with continual wars, 16.

AND *all the congregation of the children of Israel journeyed from the wilderness of Sin, after their journeys, according to the commandment of the LORD, and pitched in Rephidim: and there was no water for the people to drink.

2 <sup>b</sup> Wherefore the people did chide with Moses, and said, Give us water that we may drink. And Moses said unto them, Why chide ye with me? wherefore do ye <sup>c</sup> tempt the LORD?

* Ch. xvi. 1. Num. xxxiii. 12, 14.—<sup>b</sup> Num. xi. 3, 4.—<sup>c</sup> Deut. vi. 16. Ps. lxxviii. 18, 41. Isa. vii. 12. Mat. iv. 7. 1 Cor. x. 9.

Verse 1. Pitched in Rephidim] In Num. xxxiii. 12-14, it is said, that when the Israelites came from Sin, they encamped in Dophkah, and next in Alush, after which they came to Rephidim. Here, therefore, two stations are omitted, probably because nothing of moment took place at either.

Verse 2. Why chide ye with me?] God is your leader, complain to him; Wherefore do ye tempt the Lord? As he is your leader, all your murmurings against me he considers as directed against himself; why therefore do ye tempt him? Has he not given you sufficient proofs that he can destroy his enemies and support his friends? And is he not among

3 And the people thirsted there for water; and the people <sup>a</sup> murmured against Moses, and said, Wherefore is this that thou hast brought us up out of Egypt, to kill us and our children and our cattle with thirst?

4 And Moses <sup>c</sup> cried unto the LORD, saying, What shall I do unto this people? they be almost ready to <sup>d</sup> stone me.

5 And the LORD said unto Moses, <sup>e</sup> Go on before the people, and take with thee of the elders of Israel;

you to do you good? ver. 7. Why therefore do ye doubt his power and goodness, and thus provoke him to treat you as his enemies?

Verse 3. And the people murmured] A strong argument may be drawn from this in favour of their supernatural escape from Egypt. Had it been a scheme concerted by the heads of the people, provision would necessarily have been made for such exigencies as these. But as God chose to keep them constantly dependant upon himself for every necessary of life, and as they had Moses alone as their mediator to look to, they murmured against him when brought into straits and difficulties, regretted their having 6 <sup>b</sup> Behold, I will stand before thee there, upon the rock in Horeb; and thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall come water out of it, that the people may drink. And Moses did so in the sight of the elders of Israel.

7 And he called the name of the place * Massah,<sup>a</sup> and * Meribah, because of the children of Israel, and because they tempted the LORD, saying, Is the LORD among us, or not?

8 <sup>c</sup> Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel in Rephidim.

9 And Moses said unto * Joshua, Choose us out men, and go out, fight with Amalek: to morrow I will stand on the top of the hill, with <sup>b</sup> the rod of God in mine hand.

10 So Joshua did as Moses had said to him, and fought with Amalek: and Moses, Aaron, and Hur went up to the top of the hill.

left Egypt, and expressed the strongest desire to return. This shows that they had left Egypt reluctantly; and as Moses and Aaron never appear to have any resources but those which came most evidently in a supernatural way, therefore the whole exodus or departure from Egypt proves itself to have been no human contrivance, but a measure concerted by God himself.

Verse 6. I will stand before thee there, upon the rock in Horeb] THE rock, hatsur. It seems as if God had directed the attention of Moses to a particular rock, with which he was well acquainted; for every part of the mount and its vicinity must have been well known to Moses during the time he kept Jethro's flocks in those quarters. This rock is a vast block of red granite, fifteen feet long, ten broad, and twelve high. The granite is fine, and the quartz, mica, and feldspar, equally mixed in it. This rock or block of granite is the only type of Christ now existing.

Verse 7. He called the name of the place Massah, and Meribah] Massah signifies temptation or trial; and Meribah, contention or litigation. From 1 Cor. x. 4 we learn that this rock was a type of Christ, and their drinking of it is represented as their being made partakers of the grace and mercy of God through Christ Jesus; and yet many who drank fell and perished in the wilderness in the very act of disobedience! Reader, be not high-minded, but fear!

Verse 8. Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel] The Amalekites seem to have attacked the Israelites in the same way and through the same motives that the wandering Arabs attack the caravans which annually pass through the same desert. It does not appear that the Israelites gave them any kind of provocation, they seem to have attacked them merely through the hope of plunder.

Fought with Israel.—In the most treacherous and dastardly manner; for they came at the rear of the camp, smote the hindmost of the people, even all that were feeble behind, when they were faint and weary; see Deut. xxv. 18. The baggage, no doubt, was the object of their avarice; but finding the women, children, aged and infirm persons, behind with the baggage, they smote them and took away their spoils.

Verse 9. Moses said unto Joshua] This is the first place in which Joshua the son of Nun is mentioned; the illustrious part which he took in Jewish affairs, till the settlement of his countrymen in the promised land, is well known. He was captain-general of the Hebrews under Moses; and on this great man's death he became his successor in the government. Joshua was at first called Hoshea, Numb. xiii. 16, and afterwards called Joshua by Moses. Both in the Septuagint and Greek Testament he is called Jesus: the name signifies Saviour; and he is allowed to have been a very expressive type of our blessed Lord. He fought with and conquered the enemies of his people, brought them into the promised land, and divided it to them by lot. The parallel between him and the Saviour of the world is too evident to require pointing out.

Top of the hill] Probably some part of Horeb or Sinai, to which they were then near.

Verse 10. Moses, Aaron, and Hur went up] It is very likely that the Hur mentioned here is the same with that Hur mentioned 1 Chron. ii. 19, who appears from the chronology in that chapter to have been the son of Caloh, the son of Ezron, the son of Pharez, the son of Judah. The rabbins and Josephus say he was the brother-in-law of Moses, having married his sister Miriam. He was a person in whom Moses put much confidence; for he left him conjoint governor of the people with Aaron, when he went to confer with God on the mount, chap. xxiv. 14. His grandson Bezael was the chief director in the work of the tabernacle; see chap. xxxi. 2-5.

Verse 11. When Moses held up his hand] We cannot understand this transaction in any literal way; for the lifting up or letting down the hands of Moses could not, humanly speaking, influence the battle. It is likely that he held up the rod of God in his hand, ver. 9, as an ensign to the people. We have already seen that in prayer the hands were generally lifted up and spread out (see the note on chap. ix. 29), and therefore it is likely that by this act prayer and supplication are intended. By holding up the hands in this case two things were intended: 1. That hereby a reference was made to God, as the source whence all help and protection must come, and that on him alone they must depend. 2. That prayer and supplication to God are essentially necessary to their prevalence over all their enemies. It is indisputably true that, while the hands are stretched out, that is, while the soul exerts itself in prayer and supplication to God, we are sure to conquer our spiritual adversaries; but if our hands become heavy—if we restrain prayer before God, Amalek will prevail—every spiritual foe, every internal corruption, will gain ground.

Verse 12. Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people] Amalek might have been the name of the ruler of this people continued down from their ancestor (see on ver. 8), as Pharaoh was the name of all succeeding kings in Egypt. If this were the case, then Amalek and his people mean the prince and the army that fought under him. But if Amalek stand here for the Amalekites, then his people must mean the confederates he had employed on this occasion.

Verse 13. Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people] Amalek might have been the name of the ruler of this people continued down from their ancestor (see on ver. 8), as Pharaoh was the name of all succeeding kings in Egypt. If this were the case, then Amalek and his people mean the prince and the army that fought under him. But if Amalek stand here for the Amalekites, then his people must mean the confederates he had employed on this occasion.

Verse 14. Write this for a memorial in a book] This is the first mention of writing on record; what it signified, or how it was done, we cannot tell. But it is evident that either this passage is introduced here instead of Deut. xxv. 17, by way of anticipation, or that by the words kethob and sepher was intended only a monumental declaration of the defeat of Amalek by Joshua, by some action or symbolical representation; for it is immediately subjoined, "And Moses built an altar, and called the name of it Jehovah-nissi." It is very likely that the first regular alphabetical writing in the world was that written by the finger of God himself on the two tables of stone.

Rehearse it in the ears of Joshua] Thus showing that Joshua was to succeed Moses, and that this charge should be given to every succeeding governor.

I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek] This threatening was accomplished by SAUL, 1 Sam. xv. 3, &c. four hundred and twelve years after. Judgment is God's strange work; but it must take place when the sins which incensed it are neither repented of nor forsaken. This people, by their continued transgressions, proved themselves totally unworthy of a political existence; and therefore said God to Saul, Go, and utterly destroy the sinners the Amalekites; 1 Sam. xv. 18. So their continuance in sin was the cause of their final destruction.

Verse 15. Jehovah-nissi] Jehovah is my ensign or banner. The hands and rod of Moses were held up as soldiers are wont to hold up their standards in the time of battle; and as these standards bear the arms of the country, the soldiers are said to fight under that banner, i.e. under the direction and in the defence of that government. Thus the Israelites fought under the direction of God, and in the defence of his truth: and therefore the name of JEHOVAH became the armorial bearing of the whole congregation. By his direction they fought, and in his name and strength they conquered; each one feeling himself, not his own, but the Lord's soldier.

Verse 16. The Lord hath sworn that the Lord will have war with Amalek, &c.] This is no translation of the original words. The most rational version is the following: Because the hand of Amalek is against the throne of God, therefore will I have war with Amalek from generation to generation. This gives a tolerably consistent sense, yet still there is considerable obscurity in the passage.

1. This first victory of Israel must have inspired them with a considerable measure of confidence in God, and in his servant Moses. Though God alone could give them the victory, yet it was necessary to show them that it was by the influence of Moses they got it. Moses could not deliver Amalek into their hands; yet if Moses did not continue to hold up his hands, i.e. to pray, Amalek must prevail. God, therefore, wrought this work in such a way as to instruct the people, promote his own glory, and secure the true honour of his servant. The Divine Being always performs the greatest number possible of ends, by the fewest and simplest means. In every work of God there is as much of wisdom and economy, as there is of sovereign uncontrolled power.

2. It is not probable that the people whom Joshua chose out to lead against Amalek were unarmed; and we have already seen that it is not at all likely that they came armed out of Egypt. And as the whole circumstances of this case show that those who fought against the Amalekites were properly equipped for the fight, we may then safely presume that they got their arms from the Egyptians, whose bodies were thrown on the shore after having been overwhelmed in the Red Sea. Thus, what was a judgment in the one case, was a most gracious providence in the other. Judgment on God's foes is mercy to his friends.

3. Of the efficacy of prayer we have already had the most striking examples. He who has the spirit of prayer, has the highest interest in the court of heaven; and the only way to retain it, is to keep it in constant employment. Apostasy begins in the closet: no man ever backslid from the life and power of Christianity who continued constant and fervent, especially in private prayer. He who prays without ceasing is likely to rejoice evermore.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Jethro, called the father-in-law of Moses, hearing of the deliverance which God had granted to Israel, 1, took Zipporah and her two sons, Gershom and Eliezer, and brought them to Moses, when the Israelites were encamped near Horeb, 2-5. He sends to Moses, announcing his arrival, 6. Moses goes out to meet him, 7, and gives him a history of God's dealings with the Israelites, 8. Jethro greatly rejoices, and makes striking observations on the power and goodness of God, 9-11. He offers burnt-offerings and sacrifices to Jehovah, and Aaron and all the elders of Israel feast with him, 12. The next day Jethro, observing how much Moses was fatigued by being obliged to sit as judge and hear causes from morning to evening, 13, inquires why he did so, 14. Moses answers, and shows that he is obliged to determine causes between man and man, and to teach them the statutes and laws of God, 15, 16. Jethro finds fault, and counsels him to appoint men who fear God, love truth, and hate covetousness, to be judges over thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens, to judge and determine in all smaller matters, and refer only the greater and most important to himself, 17-22; and shows that this plan will be advantageous both to himself and to the people, 23. Moses hearkens to the counsel of Jethro, and appoints proper officers over the people, who enter upon their functions, determine all minor causes, and refer only the most difficult to Moses, 24-26. Moses dismisses Jethro, who returns to his own country, 27.

WHEN <sup>a</sup> Jethro, the priest of Midian, Moses' father in law, heard of all that <sup>b</sup> God had done for Moses, and for Israel his people, and that the Lord had brought Israel out of Egypt;

2 Then Jethro, Moses' father in law, took Zipporah, Moses' wife, <sup>c</sup> after he had sent her back,

3 And her <sup>d</sup> two sons; of which the <sup>e</sup> name of the one was <sup>f</sup> Gershom; for he said, I have been an alien in a strange land:

Verse 1. When Jethro, the priest of Midian, &c.] Jethro was probably the son of Reuel, the father-in-law of Moses, and consequently the brother-in-law of Moses; for the word chothen, which we translate father-in-law, in this chapter means simply a relative by marriage.

Verse 2. After he had sent her back] Why Zipporah and her two sons returned to Midian, is not certainly known. From the transaction recorded, chap. iv. 20, 24, it seems as if she had been alarmed at the danger to which the life of one of her sons had been exposed, and fearing worse evils, left her husband and returned to her father. It is however possible that Moses, foreseeing the troubles to which his wife and children were likely to be exposed had he taken them down to Egypt, sent them back to his father-in-law till it should please God to deliver his people. Jethro, now finding that God had delivered them, and totally discomfited

4 And the name of the other was <sup>a</sup> Eliezer; for the God of my father, said he, was mine help, and delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh:

6 And he said unto Moses, I thy father in law Jethro am come unto thee, and thy wife, and her two sons with her.

7 And Moses <sup>c</sup> went out to meet his father in law, and did obeisance, and <sup>d</sup> kissed him; and they asked each other of their <sup>e</sup> welfare; and they came into the tent.

8 And Moses told his father in law all that the Lord had done unto Pharaoh and to the Egyptians for Israel's sake, and all the travail that had <sup>f</sup> come the Egyptians, their enemies, thought it proper to bring Zipporah and her sons to Moses, while he was in the vicinity of Horeb.

Verse 5. Jethro—came with his sons] There are several reasons to induce us to believe that the fact related here is out of its due chronological order, and that Jethro did not come to Moses till the beginning of the second year of the exodus (see Num. x. 11), some time after the tabernacle had been erected, and the Hebrew commonwealth established, both in things civil and ecclesiastical. This opinion is founded on the following reasons:

1. On this verse, where it is said that Jethro came to Moses while he was encamped at the mount of God. Now, they did not arrive there till the third month after their departure from Egypt; and the transactions with which this account is connected certainly took place in the second month; see chap. xvi. 1.

2. Moses, in Deut. i. 6, 9, 10, 12-15, relates that when they were about to depart from Horeb, he then complained that he was not able to bear the burden alone of the government of a people so numerous; and that it was at that time that he established judges and captains over thousands and hundreds and fifties and tens, which appears to be the very transaction recorded in this place; the measure itself being recommended by Jethro, and done in consequence of his advice.

3. From Num. x. 11, 29, &c., we find that when the cloud was taken up, and the Israelites were about to depart from Horeb, that Moses addressed Hobab, who is supposed to have been the same as Jethro, and who then was about to return to Midian, his own country, entreating him to stay with them as a guide while they travelled through the wilderness.

4. It has been remarked, that shortly after they had departed from Sinai the dispute took place between Miriam, Aaron, and Moses, concerning the Æthiopian woman Zipporah whom he had married (see Num. xii. 1, &c.); and this is supposed to have taken place shortly after she had been brought back by Jethro.

5. In the discourse between Moses and Jethro mentioned in this chapter, we find that Moses speaks of the statutes and laws of the Lord as things already revealed and acknowledged, which necessarily implies that these laws had already been given (ver. 16), which we know did not take place till several months after the transactions mentioned in the preceding chapters.

6. Jethro offers burnt-offerings and sacrifices to God apparently in that way in which they were commanded in the law. Now, the law respecting burnt-offerings was not given till after the transactions mentioned here, unless we refer this chapter to a time posterior to that in which it appears in this place. [Some eminent names are ranged on the side of Dr. Clarke on this question; but the majority of commentators accept the text as chronologically correct.]

Verse 6. And he said unto Moses] That is, by a messenger; in consequence of which Moses went out to meet him, as is stated in the next verse, for an interview had not yet taken place.

upon them by the way, and how the Lord <sup>g</sup> delivered them.

9 And Jethro rejoiced for all the goodness which the Lord had done to Israel, whom he had delivered out of the hand of the Egyptians.

10 And Jethro said, <sup>h</sup> Blessed be the Lord, who hath delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of Pharaoh, who hath delivered the people from under the hand of the Egyptians.

11 Now I know that the Lord <sup>i</sup> is greater than all gods: <sup>j</sup> for in the thing wherein they dealt <sup>k</sup> proudly he was above them.

12 And Jethro, Moses' father in law, took a burnt-offering and sacrifices for God: and Aaron came, and all the elders of Israel, to eat bread with Moses' father in law, <sup>l</sup> before God.

Verse 7. And did obeisance] He bowed himself down; this was the general token of respect. And kissed him; the token of friendship. And they asked each other of their welfare; literally, and they inquired, each man of his neighbour, concerning peace or prosperity; the proof of affectionate intercourse. These three things constitute good breeding and politeness, accompanied with sincerity.

And they came into the tent.] Some think that the tabernacle is meant, which it is likely had been erected before this time; see the note on ver 5. Moses might have thought proper to take his relative first to the house of God, before he brought him to his own tent.

Verse 9. And Jethro rejoiced for all the goodness] Every part of Jethro's conduct proves him to have been a religious man and a true believer. His thanksgiving to Jehovah (ver. 10) is a striking proof of it; he first blesses God for the preservation of Moses, and next for the deliverance of the people from their bondage.

Verse 11. Now I know that the Lord is greater than all gods] Some think that Jethro was now converted to the true God; but it is very probable that he enjoyed this blessing before he knew any thing of Moses, for it is not likely that Moses would have entered into an alliance with this family had they been heathens. Jethro no doubt had the true patriarchal religion.

Wherein they dealt proudly] Acting as tyrants over the people of God; enslaving them in the most unprincipled manner, and still purposing more tyrannical acts. He was above them—he showed himself to be infinitely superior to all their gods, by the miracles which he wrought.

Verse 12. Jethro—took a burnt-offering] Though it be true that in the patriarchal times we read of a burnt-offering, yet we only read of one in the case of Isaac, and therefore, though this offering made by Jethro is not a decisive proof that the law relative to burnt-offerings, &c., had already been given, yet, taken with other circumstances in this account, it is a presumptive evidence that the meeting between Moses and Jethro took place after the erection of the tabernacle.

Sacrifices for God] We have already seen that sacrifices were instituted by God himself as soon as sin entered into our world; and we see that they were continued and regularly practised among all the people who had the knowledge of the only true God, from that time until they became a legal establishment. Jethro, who was a priest (chap. ii. 16) had a right to offer these sacrifices; nor can there be a doubt of his being a worshipper of the true God, for those Kemites from whom the Rechabites came, were descended from him; 1 Chron. ii. 55. See also Jer. xxxv.

And Aaron came, and all the elders of Israel, to eat bread] The burnt-offering was wholly consumed; every part was considered as the Lord's portion, and therefore it was entirely burnt up. The other sacrifices mentioned here were such that, after the blood had been poured out before God, the officers and assistants might feed on the flesh. Thus, in ancient times, contracts were made and covenants sealed; see the notes on Gen. xv. 13, &c. It is very likely, therefore, that the sacrifices offered on this occasion, were those on the 13 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses sat to judge the people: and the people stood by Moses from the morning unto the evening.

From the morning unto the evening.] Moses was obliged to sit all day, and the people were continually coming and going.

Verse 15. The people come unto me to inquire of God.] To know the mind and will of God on the subject of their inquiries. Moses was the mediator between God and the people; and as they believed that all justice and judgment must come from him, therefore they came to Moses to know what God had spoken.

Verse 16. I do make them know the statutes of God, and his laws.] These words are so very particular that they leave little room for doubt that the law had been given. Such words would scarcely have been used had not the statutes and laws been then in existence.

Verse 19. I will give thee counsel, and God shall be with thee.] Jethro seems to have been a man of great understanding and prudence. His advice to Moses was most appropriate and excellent; and it was probably given under the immediate inspiration of God, for after such sacrificial rites, and public acknowledgment of God, the prophetic spirit might be well expected to descend and rest upon him. God could have showed Moses the propriety and necessity of adopting such measures before, but he chose in this case to help man by man, and in the present instance a permanent basis was laid to consolidate the union of the two families, and prevent all future misunderstandings.

Verse 20. Thou shalt teach them ordinances]. Chukkim, all such precepts as relate to the ceremonies of religion and political economy. And laws, hattoroth, the instructions relative to the whole system of morality.

And shalt shew them the way] THAT very way, that only way, which God himself has revealed, and in which they should walk in order to please him, and get their souls everlastingly saved.

21 Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people *'able men, such as *'fear God, *'men of truth, 'hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens:

22 And let them judge the people *'at all seasons: *'and it shall be, that every great matter they shall bring unto thee, but every small matter they shall judge: so shall it be easier for thyself, and *'they shall bear the burden with thee.

23 If thou shalt do this thing, and God command thee so, then thou shalt be *'able to endure, and all this people shall also go to *'their place in peace.

24 So Moses hearkened to the voice of his father in law, and did all that he had said.

25 And 'Moses chose able men out of all Israel, and made them heads over the people, rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

26 And they *'judged the people at all seasons: the *'hard causes they brought unto Moses, but every small matter they judged themselves.

27 And Moses let his father in law depart; and 'he went his way into his own land.

And the work that they must do.] For it was not sufficient that they should know their duty both to God and man, but they must do it too; they must do it diligently, fervently, effectually; for this is the meaning of the verb.

What a very comprehensive form of a preacher's duty does this verse exhibit! 1. He must instruct the people in the nature, use, and importance of the ordinances of religion. 2. He must lay before them the whole moral law, and their obligations to fulfil all its precepts. 3. He must point out to each his particular duty, and what is expected of him in his situation, connexions, &c. And 4. He must set them all their work, and see that they do it. On such a plan as this he will have full opportunity to show the people, 1. Their sin, ignorance, and folly; 2. The pure and holy law which they have broken, and by which they are condemned; 3. The grace of God that bringeth salvation, by which they are to be justified and finally saved; and 4. The necessity of showing their faith by their works; not only denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, but living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our saviour, Jesus Christ.

Verse 21. Able men] Persons of wisdom, discernment, judgment, prudence, and fortitude; for who can be a ruler without these qualifications?

Such as fear God] Who are truly religious, without which they will feel little concerned either for the bodies or souls of the people.

Men of truth] Honest and true in their own hearts and lives; speaking the truth, and judging according to the truth.

Hating covetousness] Doing all for God's sake, and love to man; labouring to promote the general good; never perverting judgment, or suppressing the testimonies of God, for the love of money, or through a base man-pleasing spirit, but expecting their reward from the mercy of God in the resurrection of the just.

Rulers of thousands, &c.] Each of these, in all probability, dependent on that officer immediately above himself. So the ruler over ten, if he found a matter too hard for him, brought it to the ruler of fifty; if, in the course of the exercise of his functions, he found a cause too complicated for him to decide on, he brought it to the ruler over a hundred. In like manner the centurion brought his difficult case to the ruler over a thousanâ; the case that was too hard for him to judge, he brought to Moses; and the case that was too hard for Moses, he brought immediately to God. It is likely that each of these classes had a court, composed of its own members, in which causes were heard and tried.

Verse 23. If thou shalt do this thing, and God command thee] Though the measure was obviously of the utmost importance, and plainly recommended itself by its expediency and necessity, yet Jethro very modestly leaves it to the wisdom of Moses to choose or reject it; and, knowing that in all things his relative was now acting under the immediate direction of God, intimates that no measure can be safely adopted without a positive injunction from God himself. As the counsel was doubtless inspired by the Divine Spirit, we find that it was sanctioned by the same, for Moses acted in every respect according to the advice he had received.

Verse 27. And Moses let his futher in law depart] But if this be the same transaction with that mentioned Num. x. 29, &c., we find that it was with great reluctance that Moses permitted so able a counsellor to leave him; for having the highest opinion of his judgment, experience, and discretion, he pressed him to stay with them, that he might be instead of eyes to them in the desert. But Jethro chose rather to return to his own country, where probably his family were so settled and circumstanced that they could not be conveniently removed, and it was more his duty to stay with them, to assist them with his counsel and advice, than to travel with the Israelites. Many others might be found that could be eyes to the Hebrews in the desert, but no man could be found capable of being a father to his family, but himself. It is well to labour for the public good, but our own families are the first claimants on our care, attention, and time. He who neglects his own household on pretence of labouring even for the good of the public, has surely denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

It is strange that after this we hear no more of Zipporah!

Why is she forgotten? Merely because she was the wife of Moses; for he chose to conduct himself so, that to the remotest ages there should be the utmost proofs of his disinterestedness. While multitudes of the families of Israel are celebrated and dignified, his own he writes in the dust. He made no provision even for his own sons, Gershom and Eliezer; they and their families were incorporated with the Levites, 1 Chron. xxiii. 14, and had no higher employment than that of taking care of the tabernacle and the tent, Num. iii. 21-26, and merely to serve at the tabernacle and to carry burdens, Num. iv. 24-28. No history, sacred or profane, has been able to produce a complete parallel to the disinterestedness of Moses. This one consideration is sufficient to refute every charge of imposture brought against him and his laws.

1. The keenest-eyed adversary of Moses has never been able to fix on him any carnal interest.
2. His life was unspotted, and all his actions the offspring of the purest benevolence.
3. As his own hands were pure, so were the hands of those whom he associated with himself in the work.
4. No palpable falsity has ever been detected in his writings, though they have for their subject the most complicated, abstruse, and difficult topics that ever came under the pen of man.
5. No craft, no fraud, not even what one of his own countrymen thought he might lawfully use, innocent guile, because he had to do with a people greatly degraded and grossly stupid, can be laid to his charge.
6. None ever came after to say, "We have joined with Moses in a plot, we have feigned a divine authority and mission, we have succeeded in our innocent imposture, and now the mask may be laid aside." The whole work proved itself so fully to be of God, that even the person who might wish to discredit Moses and his mission, could find no ground of this kind to stand on.

CHAPTER XIX.

The children of Israel, having departed from Rephidim, come to the wilderness of Sinai in the third month, 1, 2. Moses goes up into the mount to God, and receives a message which he is to deliver to the people, 3-6. He returns and delivers it to the people before the elders, 7. The people promise obedience, 8. The Lord promises to meet Moses in the cloud, 9. He commands him to sanctify the people, and promises to come down visibly on Mount Sinai on the third day, 10, 11. He commands him also to set bounds, to prevent the people or any of the cattle from touching the mount, on pain of being stoned or shot through with a dart, 12, 13. Moses goes down and delivers this message, 14, 15. The third day is ushered in with the appearance of the thick cloud upon the mount, and with thunders, lightning, and the sound of a trumpet; at which the people are greatly terrified, 16. Moses brings forth the people out of the camp to meet with God, 17. Mount Sinai is enveloped with smoke and fire, 18. After the trumpet had sounded long and loud, Moses spoke, and God answered him by a voice, 19. God calls Moses up to the mount, 20, and gives him a charge to the people and to the priests, that they do not attempt to come near to the mount, 21, 22. Moses, alleging that it was impossible for them to touch it because of the bounds, 23, is sent down to bring up Aaron, and to warn the people again not to break through the bounds, 24. Moses goes down and delivers this message, 25; after which we may suppose that he and Aaron went up to meet God in the mount.

IN the third month, when the children of Israel were gone forth out of the land of Egypt, the same day *came they into the wilderness of Sinai.

* Num. xxxiii. 15.

Verse 1. In the third month] This was called Sivan, and answers to our May.

The same day] There are three opinions concerning the meaning of this place, which are supported by respectable arguments. 1. The same day means the same day of the third month with that, viz., the 15th, on which the Israelites had left Egypt. 2. The same day signifies here, a day of the same number with the month to which it is applied, viz., the third day of the third month. 3. By the same day, the first day of the month is intended. The Jews celebrate the feast of Pentecost fifty days after the passover: from the departure out of Egypt to the coming to Sinai were forty-five days; for they came out the fifteenth day of the first month, from which day to the first of the third month forty-five days are numbered. On the 2nd day of this third month Moses went up into the mountain, when three days were given to the people to purify themselves; this gives the fourth day of the third month, or the forty-ninth from the departure out of Egypt. On the next day, which was the fiftieth from the celebration of the passover, the glory of God appeared on the mount; in commemoration of which the Jews celebrate the feast of pentecost. As the word chodesh, month, is put for new moon, which is with the Jews the first day of the month, this may be considered an additional confirmation of the above opinion.

The wilderness of Sinai.] Mount Sinai is called by the Arabs Jebel Mousa or the Mount of Moses, or by way of eminence, El Tor, the Mount. It is one hill, with two peaks or summits; one is called Horeb, the other Sinai. Horeb was probably its most ancient name, and might designate the whole mountain; but as the Lord had appeared to Moses on this mountain in a bush, senel, from this circumstance it might have received the name of Sinai or har Sinai, the mount of the bush or the mount of bushes; for it is possible that it was not in a single bush, but in a thicket of bushes, that the Angel of God made his appearance. The word bush is often used for woods or forests.

Verse 3. Moses went up unto God.] It is likely that the cloud which had conducted the Israelitish camp had now removed to the top of Sinai; and as this was the symbol of the divine presence, Moses went up to the place, there to meet the Lord.

The Lord called unto him.] This, according to St. Stephen, was the Angel of the Lord, Acts vii. 38. And from several scriptures we have seen that the Lord Jesus was the person intended.

Verse 4. How I bare you on eagles' wings.] It is not unlikely that from this part of the sacred history the heathens borrowed their fable of the eagle being a bird sacred to Jupiter, and which was employed to carry the souls of departed heroes, kings, &c., into the celestial regions.

Brought you unto myself.] In this and the two following verses, we see the design of God in selecting a people for himself. 1. They were to obey his voice, ver. 5, to receive a revelation from him, and to act according to that revelation, and not according to their reason or fancy, in opposition to his declarations. 2. They were to obey his voice indeed, in hearing they should hear; they should consult his testimonies, hear them whenever read or proclaimed, and obey them as soon as heard, affectionately and steadily. 3. They must keep his covenant—not only copy in their lives the ten commandments, but they must receive and preserve the grand agreement made between God and man by sacrifice, in reference to the incarnation and death of Christ; for from the foundation of the world the covenant of God ratified by sacrifices referred to this, and now the sacrificial system was to be more fully opened by the giving of the Law. 4. They should then be God's peculiar treasure, his own patrimony, a people in whom he should have all right, and over whom he should have exclusive authority above all the people of the earth; for though all the inhabitants of the world were his by his right of creation and providence, yet these should be peculiarly his, as receiving his revelation and entering into his covenant. 5. They should be a kingdom of priests, ver. 6. Their state should be a theocracy; and as God should be the sole governor, being king in Jehurum, so all his subjects should be priests, all worshippers, all sacrificers, every 9 And the LORD said unto Moses, Lo, I come unto thee <sup>b</sup> in a thick cloud, <sup>c</sup> that the people may hear when I speak unto thee, and <sup>d</sup> believe thee for ever. And Moses told the words of the people unto the LORD.

10 And the LORD said unto Moses, Go unto the people, and <sup>e</sup> sanctify them to day and to morrow, and let them <sup>f</sup> wash their clothes, individual offering up the victim for himself. A beautiful representation of the gospel dispensation, under which every believing soul offers up for himself that Lamb of God which was slain for and which takes away the sin of the world, and through which alone a man can have access to God.

11 And be ready against the third day: for the third day the LORD <sup>g</sup> will come down in the sight of all the people, upon mount Sinai.

Verse 6. And an holy nation.] They should be a nation, one people; firmly united among themselves, living under their own laws; and powerful, because united, and acting under the direction and blessing of God. They should be a holy nation, saved from their sins, righteous in their conduct, holy in their hearts; every external rite being not only a significant ceremony, but also a means of conveying light and life, grace and peace, to every person who conscientiously used it. Thus they should be both a kingdom, having God for their governor; and a nation, a multitude of peoples connected together; not a scattered, disordered, and disorganized people, but a royal nation using their own rites, living under their own laws, subject in religious matters only to God; and in things civil, to every ordinance of man for God's sake.

This was the spirit and design of this wonderful institution, which could not receive its perfection but under the gospel, and has its full accomplishment in every member of the mystical body of Christ.

Verse 7. The elders of the people.] The head of each tribe, and the chief of each family, by whose ministry this gracious purpose of God was speedily communicated to the whole camp.

Verse 8. And all the people answered, &c.] The people, having such gracious advantages laid before them, most cheerfully consented to take God for their portion; as he had graciously promised to take them for his people. Thus a covenant was made, the parties being mutually bound to each other.

Moses returned the words.] When the people had on their part consented to the covenant, Moses appears to have gone immediately up to the mountain and related to God the success of his mission.

Verse 9. A thick cloud.] This is interpreted by ver. 18: And Mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke—and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace; his usual appearance was in the cloudy pillar, which we may suppose was generally clear and luminous.

That the people may hear.] The Jews consider this as the fullest evidence their fathers had of the divine mission of Moses; themselves were permitted to see this awfully glorious sight, and to hear God himself speak out of the thick darkness: for before this, they might have thought that Moses wrought his miracles by sorcery or enchantment; but now, hearing the voice of God himself, they could no longer disbelieve nor even doubt.

Verse 10. Let them wash their clothes.] And consequently bathe their bodies; for, according to the testimony of the Jews, these always went together. It was necessary that as they were about to appear in the presence of God, every ye go not up into the mount, or touch the border of it: *whosoever toucheth the mount shall be surely put to death;

13 There shall not an hand touch it, but he shall surely be stoned, or shot through; whether it be beast or man, it shall not live: when the trumpet soundeth long, they shall come up to the mount.

14 And Moses went down from the mount unto the people, and sanctified the people; and they washed their clothes.

15 And he said unto the people, *Be ready against the third day: 'come not at your wives.

16 And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp trembled.

17 And Moses brought forth the people out of thing should be clean and pure about them; that they might be admonished by this of the necessity of inward purity, of which the outward washing was the emblem.

From these institutions the heathens appear to have borrowed their precepts relative to washings and purifications previously to their offering sacrifice to their gods, examples of which abound in the Greek and Latin writers.

Verse 12. Thou shalt set bounds] Whether this was a line marked out on the ground, beyond which they were not to go, or whether a fence was actually made to keep them off, we cannot tell; or whether this fence was made all round the mountain, or only at that part to which one wing of the camp extended, is not evident.

This verse strictly forbids the people from coming near and touching Mount Sinai, which was burning with fire. The words therefore in ver. 15, come not at your wives, seem rather to mean, come not near unto the fire; especially as the other phrase is not at all probable: but the fire is, on this occasion, spoken of so emphatically, that we are naturally led to consider ishshah here as ha-esh.

Whosoever toucheth the mount shall be surely put to death] The place was awfully sacred, because the dreadful majesty of God was displayed on it. And this taught them that God is a consuming fire, and that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

Verse 13. There shall not an hand touch it] Him, not the mountain, but the man who had presumed to touch the mountain. He should be considered altogether as an unclean and accursed thing, not to be touched for fear of conveying defilement; but should be immediately stoned or pierced through with a dart, Heb. xii. 20. [The special reason for not touching the offender was that the boundary which he had passed was sacred, and he was not to be followed.]

Verse 16. Thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud—and the voice of the trumpet] The thunders, lightnings, &c., announced the coming, as they proclaimed the majesty, of God. Of the thunders and lightnings, and the deep, dark, dismal, electric cloud, from which the thunders and lightnings proceeded, we can form a tolerable apprehension; but of the loud, long-sounding trumpet, we can scarcely form a conjecture. Such were the appearances and the noise that all the people in the camp trembled, and Moses himself was constrained to say, "I exceedingly fear and quake," Heb. xii. 21.

Verse 17. And Moses brought forth the people—to meet with God] For though they might not touch the mount till they had permission, yet when the trumpet sounded long, it appears they might come up to the nether part of the mount (see ver. 13, and Deut. iv. 11); and when the trumpet had ceased to sound, they might then go up unto the mountain, as to any other place.

It was absolutely necessary that God should give the people at large some particular evidence of his being and power, that they might be saved from idolatry, to which they were most deplorably prone; and that they might the the camp to meet with God; and they stood at the nether part of the mount.

18 And Mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the Lord descended upon it in fire: *and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly.

19 And when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, Moses spake, and God answered him by a voice.

20 And the Lord came down upon Mount Sinai, on the top of the mount: and the Lord called Moses up to the top of the mount; and Moses went up.

21 And the Lord said unto Moses, Go down, charge the people, lest they break through unto the Lord to gaze, and many of them perish.

22 And let the priests also, which come near to the Lord, sanctify themselves, lest the Lord break forth upon them.

more readily credit Moses, who was to be the constant mediator between God and them. God, therefore, in his indescribable majesty, descended on the mount, and proclaimed his power, his glory, and his holiness; so that the people, however unfaithful and disobedient afterwards, never once doubted the divine interference, or suspected Moses of any cheat or imposture.

It is worthy of remark that the people were informed three days before, ver. 9-11, that such an appearance was to take place; and this answered two excellent purposes: 1. They had time to sanctify and prepare themselves for this solemn transaction; and 2. Those who might be sceptical had sufficient opportunity to make use of every precaution to prevent and detect an imposture; so this previous warning strongly serves the cause of divine revelation.

Their being at first prohibited from touching the mount on the most awful penalties, and secondly, being permitted to see manifestations of the divine majesty, and hear the words of God, subserved the same great purposes. Their being prohibited in the first instance would naturally whet their curiosity, make them cautious of being deceived, and ultimately impress them with a due sense of God's justice and their own sinfulness: and their being permitted afterwards to go up to the mount must have deepened the conviction that all was fair and real, that there could be no imposture in the case, and that though the justice and purity of God forbade them to draw nigh for a time, yet his mercy, which had prescribed the means of purification, had permitted an access to his presence.

Besides, the whole scope and design of the chapter prove that no soul can possibly approach this holy and terrible Being but through a mediator; and this is the use made of this whole transaction by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. xii. 18-24.

Verse 20. The Lord came down] This was undoubtedly done in a visible manner, that the people might witness the awful appearance. We may suppose that every thing was arranged thus; the glory of the Lord occupied the top of the mountain, and near to this Moses was permitted to approach. Aaron and the seventy elders were permitted to advance some way up the mountain, while the people were only permitted to come up to its base. Moses, as the lawgiver, was to receive the statutes and judgments from God's mouth; Aaron and the elders were to receive them from Moses, and deliver them to the people; and the people were to act according to the direction received. Nothing can be imagined more glorious, terrible, majestic, and impressive, than the whole of this transaction; but it was chiefly calculated to impress deep reverence, religious fear, and sacred awe; and he who attempts to worship God uninfluenced by these, has neither a proper sense of the divine majesty, nor of the sinfulness of sin.

Verse 22. Let the priests also—sanctify themselves] Sacrifices from the beginning had constituted an essential part of the worship of God, and there certainly were priests whose business it was to offer them to God, before the giving of the law; though this, for especial reasons, was restricted to Aaron and his sons after the law had been given. As sacrifices had not been offered for a considerable time, the priests themselves were considered in a state of impurity: and therefore God requires that they also should be purified for the purpose of approaching the mountain, and hearing their Maker promulgate his laws.

Verse 23. The people cannot come up] Either because they had been so solemnly forbidden that they would not dare, with the penalty of instant death before their eyes, to transgress the divine command; or the bounds which were set about the mount were such as rendered their passing them physically impossible.

And sanctify it.] Here the word kadash is taken in its proper literal sense, signifying the separating of a thing, thee; but let not the priests and the people break through, to come up unto the LORD, lest he break forth upon them.

25 So Moses went down unto the people, and spake unto them.

Josh. iii. 4.

person, or place from all profane or common uses, and devoting it to sacred purposes.

Verse 24. Let not the priests and the people break through] God knew that they were heedless, criminally curious, and stupidly obstinate; and therefore his mercy saw it right to give them line upon line, that they might not transgress to their own destruction.

From the very solemn and awful manner in which the LAW was introduced, we may behold it as the ministration of terror and death, 2 Cor. iii. 7, appearing rather to exclude men from God than to bring them nigh: and from this we may learn that an approach to God would have been for ever impossible, had not infinite mercy found out the gospel scheme of salvation. By this, and this alone, we draw nigh to God.

Verse 1. All these words] Some learned men are of opinion that the TEN COMMANDMENTS were delivered on May 30, being then the day of Pentecost.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

The laws delivered on Mount Sinai have been variously named. In Deut. iv. 13 they are called the TEN WORDS. In the preceding chapter, ver. 5, God calls them my COVENANT, i.e. the agreement he entered into with the people of Israel to take them for his peculiar people; if they took him for their God and portion. And the word covenant here evidently refers to the laws given in this chapter, as is evident from Deut. iv. 13: And he declared unto you his COVENANT, which he commanded you to perform, even TEN COMMANDMENTS. They have been also termed the moral law, because they contain and lay down rules for the regulation of the manners or conduct of men. Sometimes they have been termed the LAW, by way of eminence, as containing the grand system of spiritual instruction, direction, guidance, &c. And frequently the DECALOGUE, which is a literal translation into Greek of the TEN WORDS of Moses.

Among divines they are generally divided into what they term the first and second tables. The FIRST table contains the first, second, third, and fourth commandments, and 4 "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth:

5 "Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor comprehends the whole system of theology, the true notions we should form of the divine nature, the reverence we owe and the religious service we should render to him. The SECOND contains the six last commandments, and comprehends a complete system of ethics, or moral duties which man owes to his fellows, and on the due performance of which the order, peace, and happiness of society depend. By this division, the FIRST table contains our duty to God; the SECOND, our duty to our NEIGHBOUR. This division, which is natural enough, refers us to the grand principle, love to God and love to man, through which both tables are observed. 1. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul, mind, and strength. 2. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. On these two hang all the Law and the Prophets.

THE FIRST COMMANDMENT.

Against mental or theoretic idolatry.

Verse 2. I am the LORD thy God] It is worthy of remark that each individual is addressed here, and not the people collectively, though they are all necessarily included; that each might feel that he was bound for himself to hear and do all these words.

Brought thee out of the land of Egypt, &c.] And by this very thing have proved myself to be superior to all gods, un-serve them: for I the LORD thy God am <sup>a</sup> a jealous God, <sup>b</sup> visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; limited in power, and most gracious as well as fearful in operation. This is the preface or introduction, but should not be separated from the commandment. Therefore,

<sup>b</sup> Ch. xxxiv. 7. Lev. xx. 5. xxi. 39, 40. Num. xiv. 18, 33. 1 Kings xxi. 29. Job v. 4. xxi. 19. Ps. lxxix. 8. cix. 4. Isa. xiv. 20, 21. lxx. 6, 7. Jer. ii. 9. xxxii. 18.—<sup>c</sup> Ch. xxxiv. 7. Deut. vii.

Verse 3. Thou shalt have no other gods before me. No strange gods—none that thou art not acquainted with, none who has not given thee such proofs of his power and godhead as I have done in delivering thee from the Egyptians, dividing the Red Sea, bringing water out of the rock, quails into the desert, manna from heaven to feed thee, and the pillar of cloud to direct, enlighten, and shield thee. By these miracles God had rendered himself familiar to them, they were intimately acquainted with the operation of his hands; and therefore with great propriety he says, Thou shalt have no strange gods before me; before or in the place of those manifestations which I have made of myself.

This commandment prohibits every species of mental idolatry, and all inordinate attachment to earthly and sensible things. As God is the fountain of happiness, and no intelligent creature can be happy but through him, whoever seeks happiness in the creature is necessarily an idolater; as he puts the creature in the place of the creator, expecting that from the gratification of his passions, in the use or abuse of earthly things, which is to be found in God alone.

THE SECOND COMMANDMENT.

Against making and worshipping images.

Verse 4. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image. As the word psal signifies to hew, carve, grave, &c., psel may here signify any kind of image, either of wood, stone, or metal, on which the axe, the chisel, or the graving tool has been employed. This commandment includes in its prohibitions every species of idolatry known to have been practised among the Egyptians.

Or any likeness, &c.] To know the full spirit and extent of this commandment, this place must be collated with Deut. iv. 15, &c.

The likeness of any beast.—Behemoth, such as the ox and the heifer. Among the Egyptians the ox was not only sacred but adored, because they supposed that in one of these animals Osiris took up his residence: hence they always had a living ox, which they supposed to be the habitation of this deity; and they imagined that on the death of one he entered into the body of another, and so on successively. This famous ox-god they called Apis and Mnevis.

The likeness of any winged fowl.—The ibis, or stork, or crane, and hawk, may be here intended, for all these were objects of Egyptian idolatry.

The likeness of any thing that CREEPETH.—The crocodile, serpents, the scarabeus or beetle, were all objects of their adoration; and it is very probable that even the frog itself was a sacred animal, as from its inflation it was emblematic of the prophetic influence, for they supposed that the god inflated or distended the body of the person by whom he gave oracular answers.

The likeness of any FISH.—All fish were esteemed sacred animals among the Egyptians.

To countenance its image worship, the Roman Catholic church has left the whole of this second commandment out of the decalogue, and thus lost one whole commandment out of the ten; but to keep up the number they have divided the tenth into two. This is totally contrary to the faith of God's elect, and to the acknowledgment of that truth which is according to godliness. The verse is found in every MS. of the Hebrew Pentateuch that has ever yet been discovered. It is in all the ancient Versions, Samaritan, Chaldee, Syriac, Septuagint, Vulgate, Coptic, and Arabic; also in the Persian, and in all modern Versions. There is not one word of the whole verse wanting in the many hundreds of MSS. collected by Kenicott and De Rossi. This corruption of the word of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

7 <sup>d</sup> Thou shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain; for the LORD <sup>e</sup> will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

8 <sup>f</sup> Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy.

9. Ps. lxxxix. 34. Rom. xi. 28.—<sup>d</sup> Ch. xxvi. 1. Lev. xix. 12. Deut. v. 11. Ps. xv. 4. Mat. v. 33.—<sup>e</sup> Mic. vi. 11.—<sup>f</sup> Ch. xxxi. 13, 14. Lev. xix. 30. xxi. 2. Deut. v. 12.

God by the Roman Catholic church stamps it as a false and heretical church, with the deepest brand of ever-during infamy!

This commandment also prohibits every species of external idolatry, as the first does all idolatry that may be called internal or mental. All false worship may be considered of this kind, together with all image worship, and all other superstitious rites and ceremonies.

Verse 5. Jealous God] This shows in a most expressive manner the love of God to this people. He felt for them as the most affectionate husband could do for his spouse; and was jealous for their fidelity, because he willed their inviolable happiness.

Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children] This necessary implies—If the children walk in the steps of their fathers; for no man can be condemned by divine justice for a crime of which he was never guilty: see Ezek. xviii. Idolatry is however particularly intended, and visiting sins of this kind refers principally to national judgments. By withdrawing the divine protection the idolatrous Israelites were delivered up into the hands of their enemies, from whom the gods in whom they had trusted could not deliver them. This God did to the third and fourth generation, i.e. successively; as may be seen in every part of the Jewish history, and particularly in the book of Judges. And this, at last, became the grand and the only effectual and lasting means in his hand of their final deliverance from idolatry; for it is well known that after the Babylonish captivity the Israelites were so completely saved from idolatry, as never more to have disgraced themselves by it as they had formerly done.

Verse 6. And shewing mercy unto thousands.] Mark; even those who love God and keep his commandments merit nothing from him, and therefore the salvation and blessedness which these enjoy come from the mercy of God: Shewing mercy, &c. What a disproportion between the works of justice and mercy! Justice works to the third or fourth, mercy to thousands of generations!

Thou love me, and keep my commandments.] It was this that caused Christ to comprise the fulfilment of the whole law in love to God and man; see the note on ver. 1. And as love is the grand principle of obedience, and the only incentive to it, so there can be no obedience without it. It would be more easy even in Egyptian bondage to make brick with only straw, than to do the will of God unless his love be shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit. Love, says the apostle, is the fulfilling of the law; Rom. xiii. 10.

THE THIRD COMMANDMENT.

Against false swearing, blasphemy, and irreverent use of the name of God.

Verse 7. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.] This precept not only forbids all false oaths, but all common swearing where the name of God is used, or where he is appealed to as a witness of the truth. It also necessarily forbids all light and irreverent mention of God, or any of his attributes; and this the original word particularly imports: and we may safely add to all these, that every prayer, ejaculation, &c., that is not accompanied with deep reverence and the genuine spirit of piety, is here condemned also. In how many thousands of instances is this commandment broken in the prayers whether read or extempore, of inconsiderate, bold, and presumptuous worshippers! And how few are there who do not break it, both in their public and private devotions! How low is piety, when we are obliged, in order to escape damnation, to pray to God to "pardon the sins of our holy things!"

The Lord will not hold him guiltless, &c.] Whatever the person himself may think or hope, however he may plead in his own behalf, and say he intends no evil, &c.; if he in any of the above ways, or in any other way, takes the name of 9 * Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work :

God in vain, God will not hold him guiltless—he will account him guilty, and punish him for it. Is it necessary to say to any truly spiritual mind, that all such interjections as O God! my God! good God! good Heavens! &c., &c. are formal, positive breaches of this law? How many who pass for Christians are highly criminal here!

THE FOURTH COMMANDMENT.

Against profanation of the sabbath and idleness on the other days of the week.

Verse 8. Remember the sabbath-day, to keep it holy.] As this was the most ancient institution, God calls them to remember it; as if he had said, Do not forget that when I had finished my creation I instituted the sabbath, and remember why I did so, and for what purposes. The word sabbath signifies rest or cessation from labour; and the sanctification of the seventh day is commanded, as having something representative in it; and so indeed it has, for it typifies the rest which remaineth for the people of God, and in this light it evidently appears to have been understood by the apostle, Heb. iv. Because this commandment has not been particularly mentioned in the New Testament as a moral precept binding on all, therefore some have presumptuously inferred that there is no sabbath under the Christian dispensation. The truth is, the sabbath is considered as a type: all types are of full force till the thing signified by them takes place; but the thing signified by the sabbath is that rest in glory which remains for the people of God; therefore the moral obligation of the sabbath must continue till time be swallowed up in eternity.

Verse 9. Six days shalt thou labour] Therefore he who idles away time on any of the six days is as guilty before God as he who works on the sabbath. No work should be done on the sabbath that can be done on the preceding days, or can be deferred to the succeeding ones. Works of absolute necessity and mercy are alone excepted. He who works by his servants or cattle is equally guilty as if he worked himself. Hiring out horses, &c., for pleasure or business, going on journeys, paying worldly visits, or taking jaunts on the Lord's day, are breaches of this law. The whole of it should be devoted to the rest of the body and the improvement of the mind. God says he has hallowed it—he has made it sacred and set it apart for the above purposes. It is therefore the most proper day for public religious worship.

THE FIFTH COMMANDMENT.

Against disrespect and disobedience to parents.

Verse 12. Honour thy father and thy mother] There is a degree of affectionate respect which is owing to parents, that no person else can properly claim. For a considerable time parents stand as it were in the place of God to their children, and therefore rebellion against their lawful commands has been considered as rebellion against God. This precept therefore prohibits, not only all injurious acts, irreverent and unkind speeches to parents, but enjoins all necessary acts of kindness, filial respect, and obedience. We can scarcely suppose that a man honours his parents who, when they fall weak, blind, or sick, does not exert himself to the uttermost in their support. In such cases God as truly requires the children to provide for their parents, as he requires the parents to feed, nourish, support, instruct, and defend the children when they were in the lowest state of helpless infancy.

That thy days may be long] This is the first commandment to which God has annexed a promise; and therefore we may learn in some measure how important the duty is in the sight of God. Most who come to an untimely end are seventh day; wherefore the LORD blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it.

12 * Honour thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

13 * Thou shalt not kill.

14 * Thou shalt not commit adultery.

15 <sup>b</sup> Thou shalt not steal.

Luke xviii. 20. Eph. vi. 2.—<sup>c</sup>Deut. v. 17. Mat. v. 21. Rom. xiii. 9.—<sup>d</sup>Deut. v. 18. Mat. v. 27.—<sup>e</sup>Lev. xix. 11. Deut. v. 19. Mat. xix. 18. Rom. xiii. 9. 1 Thes. iv. 6.

obliged to confess that disobedience to parents with the breach of the sabbath was the principal cause of their ruin.

1. As children are bound to succour their parents, so parents are bound to educate and instruct their children in all useful and necessary knowledge, and not to bring them up either in ignorance or idleness. 2. They should teach their children the fear and knowledge of God, for how can they expect affection or dutiful respect from those who have not the fear of God before their eyes? Those who are best educated are generally the most dutiful.

THE SIXTH COMMANDMENT.

Against murder and cruelty.

Verse 13. Thou shalt not kill.] This commandment, which is general, prohibits murder of every kind. 1. All actions by which the lives of our fellow-creatures may be abridged. 2. All wars for extending empire, commerce, &c. 3. All sanguinary laws, by the operation of which the lives of men may be taken away for offences of comparatively trifling demerit. 4. All bad dispositions which lead men to wish evil to, or meditate mischief against, one another; for, says the scripture, He that hateth his brother in his heart is a murderer. 5. All want of charity to the helpless and distressed; for he who has it in his power to save the life of another by a timely application of succour, food, raiment, &c., and does not do it, and the life of the person either falls or is abridged on this account, is in the sight of God a murderer. He who neglects to save life is, according to an incontrovertible maxim in law, the same as he who takes it away. 6. All riot and excess, all drunkenness and gluttony, all inactivity and slothfulness, and all superstitious mortifications and self-denials, by which life may be destroyed or shortened: all these are point-blank sins against the sixth commandment.

THE SEVENTH COMMANDMENT.

Against adultery and uncleanness.

Verse 14. Thou shalt not commit adultery.] Adultery, as defined by our laws, is of two kinds; double, when between two married persons; single, when one of the parties is married, the other single. One principal part of the criminality of adultery consists in its injustice. 1. It robs a man of his right by taking from him the affection of his wife. 2. It does him a wrong by fathering on him and obliging him to maintain as his own a spurious offspring—a child which is not his. The act itself, and every thing leading to the act, is prohibited by this commandment. And not only adultery is forbidden here, but also fornication and all kinds of mental and sensual uncleanness. All impure books, songs, paintings, &c., which tend to inflame and debauch the mind, are against this law. That fornication was included under this command we may gather from St. Matthew, xv. 19, where our Saviour expresses the sense of the different commandments by a word for each, and mention them in the order in which they stand; but when he comes to the seventh he uses two words, to express its meaning, and then goes on to the eighth, &c.; thus evidently showing that fornication was understood to be comprehended under the command, "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Adultery often means idolatry in the worship of God.

THE EIGHTH COMMANDMENT.

Against stealing and dishonesty.

Verse 15. Thou shalt not steal.] All rapine and theft are forbidden by this precept; as well national and commercial wrongs as petty larceny, highway robberies, and private stealing: even the taking advantage of a seller's or buyer's ignorance, to give the one less and make the other pay more 16 <sup>a</sup>Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.

17 <sup>b</sup>Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, <sup>c</sup>thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's.

18 And <sup>d</sup>all the people <sup>e</sup>saw the thunders, and the lightnings, and the noise of the trumpet, and the mountain <sup>f</sup>smoking: and when the people saw it, they removed, and stood afar off:

19 And they said unto Moses, <sup>g</sup>Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but <sup>h</sup>let not God speak with us, lest we die.

for a commodity than its worth, is a breach of this sacred law. All withholding of rights and doing of wrongs are against the spirit of it. But the word is principally applicable to clandestine stealing, though it may undoubtedly include all political injustice and private wrongs. And consequently all kidnapping, crimping, and slave-dealing are prohibited here, whether practised by individuals or by the state. Crimes are not lessened in their demerit by the number or political importance of those who commit them. A state that enacts bad laws is as criminal before God as the individual who breaks good ones.

It has been supposed that under the eighth commandment, injuries done to character, the depriving a man of his reputation or good name, are included

THE NINTH COMMANDMENT.

Against false testimony, perjury, &c.

Verse 16. Thou shalt not bear false witness, &c. Not only false oaths, to deprive a man of his life or of his right, are here prohibited, but all whispering, tale-bearing, slander, and calumny; in a word, whatever is deposed as a truth, which is false in fact, and tends to injure another in his goods, person, or character, is against the spirit and letter of this law. Suppressing the truth when known, by which a person may be defrauded of his property or his good name, or lie under injuries or disabilities which a discovery of the truth would have prevented, is also a crime against this law. He who bears a false testimony against or belies even the devil himself, comes under the curse of this law, because his testimony is false. By the term neighbour any human being is intended, whether he rank among our enemies or friends.

THE TENTH COMMANDMENT.

Against covetousness.

Verse 17. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house—wife, &c. Covet signifies to desire or long after, in order to enjoy as a property the person or thing coveted. He breaks this command who by any means endeavours to deprive a man of his house or farm by taking them over his head, as it is expressed in some countries; who lusters after his neighbour's wife, and endeavours to ingratiate himself into her affections, and to lessen her husband in her esteem: and who endeavours to possess himself of the servants, cattle, &c., of another in any clandestine or unjustifiable manner.

Verse 18. And all the people saw the thunders, &c. They had witnessed all these awful things before (see chap. xix. 16), but here they seem to have been repeated; probably at the end of each command, there was a peal of thunder, a blast of the trumpet, and a gleam of lightning, to impress their hearts the more deeply with a due sense of the Divine Majesty, of the holiness of the law which was now delivered, and of the fearful consequences of disobedience.

25 And <sup>r</sup>if thou wilt make me an altar of stone, thou shalt not <sup>s</sup>build it of hewn stone; for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it.

Verse 20. And Moses said—Fear not: for God is come to prove you, and that his fear may be before your faces] The maxim contained in this verse is, Fear not, that ye may fear—do not fear with such a fear as brings consternation into the soul, and produces nothing but terror and confusion; but fear with that fear which reverence and filial affection inspire, that ye sin not—that, through the love and reverence ye feel to your Maker and Sovereign, ye may abstain from every appearance of evil, lest you should forfeit that love which is to you better than life. He who fears in the first sense can neither love nor obey; he who fears not in the latter sense is sure to fall under the first temptation that may occur. Blessed is the man who thus feareth always.

Verse 22. I have talked with you from heaven.] Though God manifested himself by the fire, the lightning, &c., yet the ten words or commandments were probably uttered from the higher regions of the air, which would be an additional proof to the people that there was no imposture in this case; for though strange appearances and voices might be counterfeited on earth, as was often, no doubt, done by the magicians of Egypt; yet it would be utterly impossible to represent a voice, in a long continued series of instruction, as proceeding from heaven itself, or the higher regions of the atmosphere.

Verse 23. Ye shall not make with me gods of silver] The expressions here are very remarkable. Before it was said, Ye shall have no other gods BEFORE me, ver. 8. Here they are commanded, Ye shall not make gods of silver or gold, WITH me, as emblems or representatives of God, in order, as might be pretended, to keep these displays of his magnificence in memory; on the contrary, they would have only an altar of earth—of plain turf, on which they should offer those sacrifices by which they should commemorate their own guilt, and the necessity of an atonement to reconcile themselves to God.

Verse 24. Thy burnt-offerings, and thy peace-offerings] The law concerning which was shortly to be given, though sacrifices of this kind were in use from the days of Abel.

In all places where I record my name] Wherever I am worshipped, whether in the open wilderness, at the tabernacle, in the temple, the synagogues, or elsewhere, I will come unto thee and bless thee. These words are precisely the same in signification with those of our Lord, Mat. xvii. 20: For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. And as it was JESUS who was the angel that spoke to them in the wilderness, Acts vii. 38, from the same mouth this promise in the law and that in the gospel proceeded.

Verse 25. Thou shalt not build it of hewn stone] Because they were now in a wandering state, and had as yet no fixed residence; and therefore no time should be wasted to rear costly altars, which could not be transported with them, and which they must soon leave. Besides, they must not lavish skill or expense on the construction of an altar; the altar of itself, whether costly or mean, was nothing in the worship; it was only the place on which the victim should be laid, and their mind must be attentively fixed on that God to whom the sacrifice was offered, and on the sacrifice itself, as that appointed by the Lord to make an atonement for their sins.

Verse 26. Neither shalt thou go up by steps unto mine altar] The word altar comes from altus, high or elevated, though the Hebrew word mizbeach, from zabach, to slay, kill, &c., signifies merely a place for sacrifice; see Gen. viii. 20. But the heathens, who imitated the rites of the true God in their idolatrous worship, made their altars very high; whence they derived their name altaria, altars, i.e. very high or elevated places; which they built thus, partly through pride and vain-glory, and partly that their gods might the better hear them. Hence also the high places or idolatrous altars so often and so severely condemned in the Holy Scriptures. Some imagine that the pyramids were altars of this kind, and that the inspired writer refers to those in these prohibitions. God therefore ordered his altars to be made, 1. either of simple turf, that there might be no unnecessary expense, and that they might be no incentives to idolatry from their costly or curious structure; or 2. of unhewn stone, that no images of animals or of the celestial bodies might be sculptured on them, as was the case among the idolaters. In short, God formed every part of his worship so that every thing belonging to it might be as dissimilar as possible from that of the surrounding heathenish nations, and especially the Egyptians, from whose land they had just now departed.

In this and the preceding chapter we have met with some of the most awful displays of the Divine Majesty; manifestations of justice and holiness which have no parallel, and can have none till that day arrive in which he shall appear in his glory, to judge the quick and the dead. The glory was truly terrible, and to the children of Israel insufferable; and yet how highly privileged to have God himself speaking to them from the midst of the fire, giving them statutes and judgments so righteous, so pure, so holy, and so truly excellent in their operation and their end, that they have been the admiration of all the wise and upright in all countries and ages of the world, where their voice has been heard! Moses calls the attention of the people, not to the language in which these divine laws were given, though that is all that it should be, and every way worthy of its author; compressed yet perspicuous; simple yet dignified; in short, such as God should speak if he wished his creatures to comprehend; but to the purity, righteousness, and usefulness of the grand revelation which they had just received. And that which was the sum of all excellence in the present case was this, that the God who gave these laws dwelt among his people; to him they had continual access, and from him received that power without which obedience so extensive and so holy would have been impossible; and yet not one of these laws exacted more than eternal reason, the nature and fitness of things, the prosperity of the community, and the peace and happiness of the individual, required. The LAW is holy, and the COMMANDMENT is HOLY, JUST, and GOOD.

1. It is worthy of remark that there is none of these commandments, nor any part of one, which can fairly be considered as merely ceremonial. All are moral, and consequently of everlasting obligation. 2. When considered merely as to the letter, there is certainly no difficulty in the moral obedience required to them. Let every reader take them up one by one and ask his conscience before God, which of them he is under a fatal and uncontrollable necessity to break? 3. Though by the incarnation and death of Christ all the ceremonial law which referred to him and his sacrifice is necessarily abrogated, yet, as none of these ten commandments refer to any thing properly ceremonial, therefore they are not abrogated. 4. Though Christ came into the world to redeem them who believe from the curse of the law, he did not redeem them from the necessity of walking in that newness of life which these commandments so strongly inculcate. 5. Though Christ is said to have fulfilled the law for us, yet it is no where intimated in the scripture that he has so fulfilled these TEN LAWS, as to exempt us from the necessity and privilege of being noidolaters, swearers, sabbath-breakers, disobedient and cruel children, murderers, adulterers, thieves, and corrupt witnesses. All these commandments, it is true, he punctually fulfilled himself; and all these he writes on the heart of every soul redeemed by his blood. 6. Do not those who scruple not to insinuate that the proper observation of these laws is impossible in this life and that every man since the fall does daily break them in thought, word, and deed, bear false witness against God and his truth? and do they not greatly err, not knowing the scripture, which teaches the necessity of such obedience, nor the power of God, by which the evil principle of the heart is destroyed, and the law of purity written on the soul? If even the regenerate man, as some have unwarily asserted, does daily break these commands, these ten words, in thought, word, and deed, he may be as bad as Satan for aught we know; for Satan himself cannot transgress in more forms than these, for sin can be committed in no other way, either by bodied or disembodied spirits, than by thought, or word, or deed. Such sayings as those tend to destroy the distinction between good and evil, and leave the infidel and the believer on a par as to their moral state. The people of God should be careful how they use them. 7. It must be granted that these commandments are not only to be understood in the letter, but also in the spirit, and that therefore they may be broken in the heart while outwardly kept inviolate; yet this does not prove that a soul influenced by the grace and Spirit of Christ cannot most conscientiously observe them; for the grace of the gospel not only saves a man from outward but also from inward sin; for, says the heavenly messenger, his name shall be called JESUS (i.e. Saviour), because he shall save (i.e. DELIVER) his people FROM their sins. It is readily granted that no man unassisted and uninfluenced by the grace of Christ can keep these commandments, either in the letter or in the spirit; but he who is truly converted to God, and has Christ dwelling in his heart by faith, can, in the letter and in the spirit, do all these things, BECAUSE CHRIST STRENGTHENS him.

CHAPTER XXI.

Laws concerning servants. They shall serve for only seven years, 1, 2. If a servant brought a wife to servitude with him, both should go out free on the seventh year, 3. If his master had given him a wife, and she bore him children, he might go out free on the seventh year, but his wife and children must remain, as the property of the master, 4. If, through love to his master, wife, and children, he did not choose to avail himself of the privilege granted by the law, of going out free on the seventh year, his ear was to be bored to the door-post with an awl, as an emblem of his being attached to the family for ever, 5, 6. Laws concerning maid-servants, betrothed to their masters, or to the sons of their masters, 7-11. Laws concerning battery and murder, 12-15. Concerning men-stealing, 16. Concerning him that curses his parents, 17. Of strife between man and man, 18, 19; between a master and his servants, 20, 21. Of injuries done to women in pregnancy, 22. The LEX TALIONIS, or law of like for like, 23-25. Of injuries done to servants, by which they gain the right of freedom, 26, 27. Laws concerning the ox which has gored men, 28-32. Of the pit left uncovered, into which a man or a beast has fallen, 33, 34. Laws concerning the ox that kills another, 35, 36.

NOW these are the judgments which thou shalt set before them.

2 <sup>b</sup> If thou buy an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve: and in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing.

3 If he came in <sup>c</sup> by himself, he shall go out by himself: if he were married then, his wife shall go out with him.

4 If his master have given him a wife, and she have born him sons or daughters; the wife and her children shall be her master's, and he shall go out by himself.

5 <sup>d</sup> And if the servant <sup>e</sup> shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife, and my children; I will not go out free:

6 Then his master shall bring him unto the judges; he shall also bring him to the door, or unto the door post; and his master shall bore his ear through with an aul; and he shall serve him for ever.

7 And if a man <sup>h</sup> sell his daughter to be a maid-servant, she shall not go out <sup>i</sup> as the men-servants do.

Lev. xxiv. 17. Num. xxxv. 30, 31. Mat.

Verse 1. Now these are the judgments] There is so much good sense, feeling, humanity, equity, and justice, in the following laws, that they cannot but be admired by every intelligent reader; and they are so plain as to require very little comment. The laws in this chapter are termed political, those in the succeeding chapter judicial, laws; and are supposed to have been delivered to Moses alone, in consequence of the request of the people, chap. xx. 19, that God should communicate his will to Moses, and that Moses should, as mediator, convey it to them.

Verse 2. If thou buy an Hebrew servant] Calmet enumerates six different ways in which a Hebrew might lose his liberty: 1. In extreme poverty they might sell their liberty. 2. A father might sell his children. 3. Insolvent debtors became the slaves of their creditors. 4. A thief, if he had not money to pay the fine laid on him by the law, was to be sold for his profit whom he had robbed. 5. A Hebrew was liable to be taken prisoner in war, and so sold for a slave. 6. A Hebrew slave who had been ransomed from a Gentile by a Hebrew might be sold, by him who ransomed him, to one of his own nation.

Six years he shall serve] It was an excellent provision in these laws, that no man could finally injure himself by any rash, foolish, or precipitate act. No man could make himself a servant or slave for more than seven years; and if he mortgaged the family inheritance, it must return to the family at the jubilee, which returned every fiftieth year.

It is supposed that the term six years is to be understood as referring to the sabbatical years; for let a man come into servitude at whatever part of the interim between two sabbatical years, he could not be detained in bondage beyond a sabbatical year; so that if he fell into bondage the third year after a sabbatical year, he had but three years to serve; if the fifth, but one. Others suppose that this privilege belonged only to the year of jubilee, beyond which no man could be detained in bondage, though he had been sold only one year before.

Verse 3. If he came in by himself] If he and his wife came in together, they were to go out together: in all respects as he entered, so should he go out.

Verse 4. The wife and her children shall be her master's] It was a law among the Hebrews, that if a Hebrew had children by a Canaanitish woman, those children must be considered as Canaanitish only, and might be sold and bought, and serve for ever. The law here refers to such a case only.

Verse 6. Shall bring him unto the judges] Literally, to God; or, as the Septuagint have it, to the judgment of God; who condescended to dwell among his people; who determined all their differences till he had given them laws for all

8 If she <sup>j</sup> please not her master who hath betrothed her to himself, then shall he let her be redeemed: to sell her unto a strange nation he shall have no power, seeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her.

9 And if he have betrothed her unto his son, he shall deal with her after the manner of daughters.

10 If he take him another wife: her food, her raiment, <sup>k</sup> and her duty of marriage, shall he not diminish.

11 And if he do not these three unto her, then shall she go out free, without money.

12 <sup>l</sup> He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death.

13 And <sup>m</sup> if a man lie not in wait, but God <sup>n</sup> deliver him into his hand; then <sup>o</sup> I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee.

14 But if a man come <sup>p</sup> presumptuously upon his neighbour, to slay him with guile; <sup>q</sup> thou shalt take him from mine altar, that he may die.

15 And he that smiteth his father, or his mother, shall be surely put to death.

16 And <sup>r</sup> he that stealeth a man, and <sup>s</sup> selleth him, cases, and who, by his omniscience, brought to light the hidden things of dishonesty.

Bore his ear through with an aul] This was a ceremony sufficiently significant, as it implied, 1. That he was closely attached to that house and family. 2. That he was bound to hear all his master's orders, and to obey them punctually. Boring of the ear was an ancient custom in the East.

Verse 7. If a man sell his daughter] This the Jews allowed no man to do but in extreme distress—when he had no goods, either moveable or immoveable left, even to the clothes on his back; and he had this permission only while she was unmarriageable. It may appear at first view strange that such a law should have been given; but let it be remembered, that this servitude could extend at the utmost only to six years; and that it was nearly the same as in some cases of apprenticeship among us, where the parents bind the child for seven years, and have from the master so much per week during that period.

Verse 9. Betrothed her unto his son, he shall deal with her] He shall give her the same dowry he would give to one of his own daughters. From these laws we learn that if a man's son married his servant, by his father's consent, the father was obliged to treat her in every respect as a daughter; and if the son married another woman, as it appears he might do, ver. 10, he was obliged to make no abatement in the privileges of the first wife, either in her food, raiment, or duty of marriage.

Verse 11. These three] 1. Her food, sheerah, her flesh, for she must not, like a common slave, be fed merely on vegetables. 2. Her raiment—her private wardrobe, with all occasional necessary additions. And 3. The marriage debt—a due proportion of the husband's time and company.

Verse 13. I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee] From the earliest times the nearest akin had a right to revenge the murder of his relation, and as this right was universally acknowledged, no law was ever made on this subject; but as this might be abused, and a person who had killed another accidentally, having had no previous malice against him, might be put to death by the avenger of blood, as the nearest kinsman was termed, therefore God provided the cities of refuge to which the accidental manslayer might flee till the affair was inquired into, and settled by the civil magistrate.

Verse 14. Thou shalt take him from mine altar] Before the cities of refuge were assigned, the altar of God was the common asylum.

Verse 15. That smiteth his father, or his mother] As such a case argued peculiar depravity, therefore no mercy was to be shown to the culprit.

Verse 16. He that stealeth a man] By this law every or if he be <sup>a</sup> found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death.

17 And <sup>b</sup> he that <sup>c</sup> curseth his father, or his mother, shall surely be put to death.

18 And if men strive together, and one smite <sup>d</sup> another with a stone, or with his fist, and he die not, but keepeth his bed:

19 If he rise again, and walk abroad <sup>e</sup> upon his staff, then shall he that smote him be quit: only he shall pay for <sup>f</sup> the loss of his time and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.

20 And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall be surely <sup>g</sup> punished.

21 Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished: for <sup>h</sup> he is his money.

22 If men strive, and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart from her, and yet no mischief follow: he shall be surely punished, according as the woman's husband will lay upon him; and he shall <sup>i</sup> pay as the judges determine.

23 And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life,

24 <sup>j</sup> Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, 25 Burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.

26 And if a man smite the eye of his servant, or the eye of his maid, that it perish; he shall let him go free for his eye's sake.

27 And if he smite out his man-servant's tooth, or his maid-servant's tooth; he shall let him go free for his tooth's sake.

man-stealer, and every receiver of the stolen person, should lose his life; no matter whether the latter stole the man himself, or gave money to a slave-captain or negro-dealer to steal him for him.

Verse 19. Shall pay for the loss of his time and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.] This was a wise and excellent institution, and most courts of justice still regulate their decisions on such cases by this Mosaic precept.

Verse 21. If a slave, who had been beaten by his master died under his hand, the master was punished with death; see Gen. ix. 5, 6. But if he survived the beating a day or two the master was not punished, because it might be presumed that the man died through some other cause. And all penal laws should be construed as favourably as possible to the accused.

Verse 22. And hurt a woman with child] As a posterity among the Jews was among the peculiar promises of their covenant, and as every man had some reason to think that the Messiah should spring from his family, therefore any injury done to a woman with child, by which the fruit of her womb might be destroyed, was considered a very heavy offence. But if the child had been fully formed, and was killed by this means, or the woman lost her life in consequence, then the punishment was as in other cases of murder—the person was put to death; ver. 23.

Verse 24. Eye for eye] This is the earliest account we have of the Lex Talionis, or law of like for like, which afterwards prevailed among the Greeks and Romans. Among the latter, it constituted a part of the twelve tables so famous in antiquity; but the punishment was afterwards changed to a pecuniary fine, to be levied at the discretion of the prætor. It prevails less or more in most civilized countries. Nothing, however, of this kind was left to private revenge; the magistrate awarded the punishment when the fact was proved, otherwise the Lex Talionis would have utterly destroyed the peace of society, and have sown the seeds of hatred, revenge, and all uncharitableness.

Verse 27. If he smite out his—tooth] It was a noble law that obliged the unmerciful slave-holder to set the slave 28 If an ox gore a man or a woman, that they die: then <sup>k</sup> the ox shall be surely stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be quit.

29 But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death.

30 If there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give for <sup>l</sup> the ransom of his life whatsoever is laid upon him.

31 Whether he have gored a son, or have gored a daughter, according to this judgment shall it be done unto him.

32 If the ox shall push a man-servant or maid-servant; he shall give unto their master <sup>m</sup> thirty shekels of silver, and the <sup>n</sup> ox shall be stoned.

33 And if a man shall open a pit, or if a man shall dig a pit, and not cover it, and an ox or an ass fall therein;

34 The owner of the pit shall make it good, and give money unto the owner of them; and the dead beast shall be his.

35 And if one man's ox hurt another's, that he die; then they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money of it; and the dead ox also they shall divide.

36 Or if it be known that the ox hath used to push in time past, and his owner hath not kept him in; he shall surely pay ox for ox; and the dead shall be his own.

at liberty whose eye or tooth he had knocked out. If this did not teach them humanity, it taught them caution, as one rash blow might have deprived them of all right to the future services of the slave; and thus self-interest obliged them to be cautious and circumspect.

Verse 28. If an ox gore a man] It is more likely that a bull is here intended, as the word signifies both. Mischief of this kind was provided against by most nations. It appears that the Romans twisted hay about the horns of their dangerous cattle, that people seeing it might shun them. The laws of the twelve tables ordered, That the owner of the beast should pay for what damages he committed, or deliver him to the person injured.

His flesh shall not be eaten] This served to keep up a due detestation of murder, whether committed by man or beast; and at the same time punished the man as far as possible, by the total loss of the beast.

Verse 30. If there be laid on him a sum of money—the ransom of his life] So it appears that, though by the law he forfeited his life, yet this might be commuted for a pecuniary mulct, at which the life of the deceased might be valued by the magistrates.

Verse 32. Thirty shekels] Each worth about three shillings English. So, counting the shekel at its utmost value, the life of a slave was valued at four pounds ten shillings. And at this price these same vile people valued the life of our blessed Lord; see Zech. xi. 12, 13; Mat. xxvi. 15. And in return, the justice of God has ordered it so, that they have been sold for slaves into every country of the universe. And yet, strange to tell, they see not the hand of God in so visible a retribution!

Verse 33. And if a man shall open a pit, or—dig a pit] That is, if a man shall open a well or cistern that had been before closed up, or dig a new one, in some public place where there was danger that men or cattle might fall into it; for a man might do as he pleased in his own grounds, as those were his private right. In the above case, if he had neglected to cover the pit, and his neighbour's ox or ass was killed by falling into it, he was to pay its value in money.

The 33rd and 34th verses seem to be out of their places. They probably should conclude the chapter, as, where they are, they interrupt the statutes concerning the goring ox, which begin at verse 28.

These different regulations are as remarkable for their justice and prudence as for their humanity. Their great tendency is to show the valuable nature of human life, and the necessity of having peace and good understanding in every neighbourhood; and they possess that quality which should be the object of all good and wholesome laws—the prevention of crimes. Most criminal codes of jurisprudence seem more intent on the punishment of crimes than on preventing the commission of them. The law of God always teaches and warns, that his creatures may not fall into condemnation; for judgment is his strange work, i.e. one reluctantly and seldom executed, as this text is frequently understood.

CHAPTER XXII.

Laws concerning theft, 1-4; concerning trespass, 5; concerning casualties, 6. Laws concerning deposits, or goods left in custody of others, which may have been lost, stolen, or damaged, 7-13. Laws concerning things borrowed, or let out on hire, 14, 15. Laws concerning seduction, 16, 17. Laws concerning witchcraft, 18; bestiality, 19; idolatry, 20. Laws concerning strangers, 21; concerning widows, 22-24; lending money to the poor, 25; concerning pledges, 26; concerning respect to magistrates, 28; concerning the first ripe fruits, and the first-born of man and beast, 29, 30. Directions concerning carcasses found torn in the field, 31.

IF a man shall steal an ox, or a * sheep, and kill it or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and <sup>b</sup> four sheep for a sheep.

2 If a thief be found <sup>c</sup> breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall <sup>d</sup> no blood be shed for him.

3 If the sun be risen upon him, there shall be blood shed for him; for he should make full restitution; if he have nothing, then he shall be <sup>e</sup> sold for his theft.

4 If the theft be certainly 'found in his hand alive, whether it be ox, or ass, or sheep: he shall <sup>f</sup> restore double.

5 If a man shall cause a field or vineyard to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field: of the best of his own field, and of the best of his own vineyard, shall he make restitution.

6 If fire break out, and catch in thorns, so that the stacks of corn, or the standing corn, or the field, be consumed therewith; he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution.

7 If a man shall deliver unto his neighbour money or stuff to keep, and it be stolen out of the man's house; <sup>h</sup> if the thief be found, let him pay double.

8 If the thief be not found, then the master of the house shall be brought unto the <sup>i</sup> judges, to see whether he have put his hand unto his neighbour's goods.

9 For all manner of trespass, whether it be for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment, or for any manner of lost thing, which another challengeth to be his, the <sup>j</sup> cause of both parties shall come before the judges; and whom the judges shall condemn, he shall pay double unto his neighbour.

10 If a man deliver unto his neighbour an ass, or an ox, or a sheep, or any beast, to keep; and it die, or be hurt, or driven away, no man seeing it:

Verse 1. If a man shall steal] This chapter consists chiefly of judicial laws, as the preceding chapter does of political.

In our translation of this verse, by rendering different Hebrew words by the same term in English, we have greatly obscured the sense. If a man shall steal an ox (shor) or a sheep (seh), and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen (bakar) for an ox (shor), and four sheep (tsen) for a sheep (seh). A shor certainly is different from a bakar, and a seh from a tsen. Where the difference in every case lies, wherever these words occur, it is difficult to say.

As shor is used, Job xxi. 10, for a bull, probably it may mean so here. If a man steal a BULL, he shall give five OXEN for him, which we may presume was no more than his real value, as very few bulls could be kept in a country destitute of horses, where oxen were so necessary to till the ground. Tsen is used for a flock either of sheep or goats, and seh for an individual of either species. For every seh, four, taken indifferently from the tsen or flock, must be given; i.e. a sheep stolen might be recompensed with four out of the flock, whether of sheep or goats: so that a goat might be compensated with four sheep, or a sheep with four goats.

Verse 2. If a thief be found] If a thief was found breaking into a house in the night-season, he might be killed; but not if the sun had risen, for then he might be known and taken, and the restitution made which is mentioned in the succeeding verse.

Verse 4. He shall restore double.] In no case of theft was the life of the offender taken away; the utmost that the law says on this point is, that, if when found breaking into a house, he should be smitten so as to die, no blood should be shed for him; ver. 2. If he had stolen and sold the property, then he was to restore four or five-fold, ver. 1; but if the animal was found alive in his possession, he was to restore double.

Verse 7. Deliver unto his neighbour] This is called pledging in the law of bailments; it is a deposit of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept till the debt be discharged. Whatever goods were thus left in the hands of another person, that person, according to the Mosaic law, became responsible for them; if they were stolen, and the thief was found, he was to pay double; if he could not be found, the oath of the person who had them in keeping, made before the magistrates, that he knew nothing of them, was considered a full acquittance.

Verse 9. Challengeth to be his] It was necessary that such a matter should come before the judges, because the person in whose possession the goods were found might have had them by a fair and honest purchase; and by sifting the business, the thief might be found out, and if found, be obliged to pay double to his neighbour.

Verse 11. An oath of the Lord be between them] So neighbour's goods; and the owner of it shall accept thereof, and he shall not make it good.

12 And <sup>a</sup> if it be stolen from him, he shall make restitution unto the owner thereof.

13 If it be torn in pieces, then let him bring it for witness, and he shall not make good that which was torn.

14 And if a man borrow ought of his neighbour, and it be hurt, or die, the owner thereof being not with it he shall surely make it good.

15 But if the owner thereof be with it, he shall not make it good: if it be an hired thing, it came for his hire.

16 And <sup>b</sup> if a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, and lie with her, he shall surely endow her to be his wife.

solemn and awful were all appeals to God considered in those ancient times, that it was taken for granted that the man was innocent who could by an oath appeal to the omniscient God that he had not put his hand to his neighbour's goods. Since oaths have become multiplied, and since they have been administered on the most trifling occasions, their solemnity is gone, and their importance little regarded. Should the oath ever re-acquire its weight and importance, it must be when administered only in cases of peculiar delicacy and difficulty, and as sparingly as in the days of Moses.

Verse 13. If it be torn in pieces—let him bring it for witness] Rather, Let him bring a testimony or evidence of the torn thing, such as the horns, hoofs, &c. This is still a law in some countries among graziers; if a horse, cow, sheep, or goat, intrusted to them, be lost, and the keeper asserts it was devoured by dogs, &c., the law obliges him to produce the horns and hoofs, because on these the owner's mark is generally found. If these can be produced, the keeper is acquitted by the law. The ear is often the place marked, but this is not absolutely required, because the ravenous beast may eat the ear as well as any other part, but he cannot eat the horns or the hoofs. It seems however that in after-times two of the legs and the ear were required as evidences to acquit the shepherd of all guilt. See Amos iii. 12.

Verse 16. If a man entice a maid] This was an exceedingly wise and humane law, and must have operated powerfully against seduction and fornication; because the person who might feel inclined to take the advantage of a young woman knew that he must marry her, and give her a dowry, if her parents consented; and if they did not consent that their daughter should wed her seducer, in this case he was obliged to give her the full dowry which could have been demanded had she been still a virgin.

Verse 18. Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live.] If there had been no witches, such a law as this had never been made. The existence of the law, given under the direction of the Spirit of God, proves the existence of the thing. It has been doubted whether mechashpah, which we translate witch, really means a person who practised divination or sorcery by spiritual or infernal agency. Whether the persons thus denominated only pretended to have an art which had no existence, or whether they really possessed the power commonly attributed to them, are questions which it would be improper to discuss at length in a work of this kind; but that witches, wizards, those who dealt with familiar spirits, &c., are represented in the sacred writings as actually possessing a power to evoke the dead, to perform supernatural operations, and to discover hidden or secret things by spells, charms, incantations, &c., is evident to every unprejudiced reader of the Bible. The witch was probably a person who professed to reveal hidden mysteries by commerce with God, or the invisible world.

From the severity of this law against witches, &c., we may see in what light these were viewed by Divine Justice. They were seducers of the people from their allegiance to God, on whose judgment alone they should depend; and by impiously prying into futurity, assumed an attribute of God, the foretelling of future events, which implied in itself the grossest blasphemy, and tended to corrupt the minds of the people, by leading them away from God and the revelation he had made of himself. Many of the Israelites had, no doubt, learnt these curious arts from their long residence with the Egyptians; and so much were the Israelites attached to them, that we find such arts in repute among them, and various practices of this kind prevailed through the whole of the Jewish history, notwithstanding the offence was capital, and in all cases punished with death.

Verse 19. Lieth with a beast] If this most abominable crime had not been common, it never would have been mentioned in a sacred code of laws.

Verse 20. Utterly destroyed.] The word denotes a thing utterly and finally separated from God and devoted to destruction, without the possibility of redemption.

Verse 21. Thou shalt neither vex a stranger, nor oppress him] This was not only a very humane law, but it was also the offspring of a sound policy.

Verse 22. Ye shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child.] It is remarkable that offences against this law are not left to the discretion of the judges to be punished; God reserves the punishment to himself, and by this he strongly shows his abhorrence of the crime. It is no common crime, and shall not be punished in a common way; the wrath of God shall wax hot against him who in any wise afflicts or wrongs a widow or a fatherless child: and we may rest assured that he who helps either does a service highly acceptable in the sight of God.

Verse 25. Neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.] Neshech, from nashach, to bite, cut, or pierce with the teeth; biting usury.

It is evident that what is here said must be understood of accumulated usury, or what we call compound interest only; and accordingly neshech is mentioned with and distinguished from tarbith and marbith, interest or simple interest.

Perhaps usury may be more properly defined unlawful interest, receiving more for the loan of money than it is really worth, and more than the law allows. It is a wise regulation in the laws of England, that if a man be convicted of usury—of taking unlawful interest, the bond or security is rendered void, and he forfeits treble the sum borrowed. Against such an oppressive practice the wisdom of God saw it essentially necessary to make a law to prevent a people, who were naturally what our Lord calls the Pharisees, lovers of money (Luke xvi. 14), from oppressing each other; and who, notwithstanding the law in the text, practise usury in all places of their dispersion to the present day.

Verse 26. If thou—take thy neighbour's raiment to pledge] It seems strange that any pledge should be taken which must be so speedily restored; but it is very likely that the pledge was restored by night only, and that he who pledged it brought it back to his creditor next morning. His hijke, which serves an Arab as a plaid does a Highlander, was probably the raiment here referred to: it is a sort of coarse blanket, about six yards long, and five or six feet broad, which an Arab always carries with him, and on which he sleeps at night, it being his only substitute for a bed. As the fashions in the East scarcely ever change, it is very likely that the raiment of the Israelites was precisely the same with that of the modern Arabs, who live in the very same desert in which the Hebrews were when this law was given.

Verse 28. Thou shalt not revile the gods] Most commentators believe that the word gods here means magistrates. The original is Elohim, and should be understood of the true God only: Thou shalt not blaspheme or make light of God, the fountain of justice and power, nor curse the ruler of thy people, who derives his authority from God. We shall ever find that he who despises a good civil government, and is disaffected to that under which he lives, is one who has little fear of God before his eyes. The spirit of disaffection and sedition is ever opposed to the religion of the Bible. When those who have been pious get under this spirit of misrule, they are infallibly shorn of their spiritual strength, and become like salt that has lost its savour. He who can indulge himself in speaking evil of the civil ruler, will soon learn to blaspheme God. The highest authority says Fear God: honour the king.

Verse 29. The first of thy ripe fruits] This offering was a public acknowledgment of the bounty and goodness of God, who had given them their proper seed-time, the first and the latter rain, and the appointed weeks of harvest.

From the practice of the people of God the heathens borrowed a similar one founded on the same reason.

The rejoicings at our harvest-home are distorted remains of that gratitude which our ancestors, with all the primitive inhabitants of the earth, expressed to God with appropriate signs and ceremonies. Is it not possible to restore, in some godly form, a custom so pure, so edifying, and so becoming? There is a laudable custom, observed by some pious people, of dedicating a new house to God by prayer, &c., which cannot be too highly commended.

Verse 30. Seven days it shall be with his dam] For the mother's health it was necessary that the young one should suck so long; and prior to this time the process of nutrition in a young animal can scarcely be considered as completely formed. Among the Romans lambs were not considered as pure or clean before the eighth day; nor calves before the thirtieth.

Verse 31. Neither shall ye eat—flesh—torn of beasts in the field] This has been supposed to be an ordinance against eating flesh cut off the animal while alive, and so the Syriac seems to have understood it. The reason of the prohibition appears to have been simply this: That the people might not eat the blood, which in this case must be coagulated in the flesh; and the blood being the life of the beast, and emblematical of the blood of the covenant, was ever to be held sacred, and was prohibited from the days of Noah.

In the conclusion of this chapter we see the grand reason of all the ordinances and laws which it contains. No command was issued merely from the sovereignty of God. He gave them to the people as restraints on disorderly passions, and incentives to holiness; and hence he says, Ye shall be holy men unto me.

THOU shalt not raise a false report: put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness.

2 Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil; neither shalt thou speak in a cause to decline after many to wrest judgment:

3 Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause.

4 If thou meet thine enemy's ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again.

5 If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, and wouldest forbear to help him, thou shalt surely help with him.

6 Thou shalt not wrest the judgment of thy poor in his cause.

7 Keep thee far from a false matter; and the innocent and righteous slay thou not: for I will not justify the wicked.

8 And thou shalt take no gift: for the gift blindeth the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous.

9 Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger: for ye know the heart of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

10 And six years thou shalt sow thy land, and shalt gather in the fruits thereof:

11 But the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still; that the poor of thy people may eat: and what they leave, the beasts of the field shall eat. In like manner thou shalt deal with thy vineyard, and with thy oliveyard.

12 Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest; that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger, may be refreshed.

Verse 1. Thou shalt not raise a false report] Acting contrary to this precept is a sin against the ninth commandment. And the inventor and receiver of false and slanderous reports, are almost equally criminal. The word seems to refer to either, and our translators have very properly retained both senses, putting raise in the text, and receive in the margin. The original has been translated, thou shalt not publish. Were there no publishers of slander and calumny, there would be no receivers; and were there none to receive them, there would be none to raise them; and were there no raisers, receivers, nor propagators of calumny, lies, &c., society would be in peace.

Verse 2. Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil] Be singular. Singularity, if in the right, can never be criminal. So completely disgraceful is the way of sin, that if there were not a multitude walking in that way, who help to keep each other in countenance, every solitary sinner would be obliged to hide his head. But rabbin, which we translate multitude, sometimes signifies the great, chiefs or mighty ones; and is so understood by some eminent critics in this place: "Thou shalt not follow the example of the great or rich, who may so far disgrace their own character as to live without God in the world, and trample under foot his laws."

Verse 3. Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause] The word dal, which we translate poor man, is probably put here in opposition to rabbin, the great, or nobleman, in the preceding verse: if so, the meaning is, Thou shalt neither be influenced by the great to make an unrighteous decision, nor by the poverty or distress of the poor to give thy voice against the dictates of justice and truth. Hence the ancient maxim, PIA JUSTITIA, RUAT CÆLUM, "Let justice be done, though the heavens should be dissolved."

Verse 4. If thou meet thine enemy's ox—going astray] A precept so plain, wise, benevolent, and useful, can receive no other comment than that which its influence on the heart of a kind and merciful man produces in his life.

Verse 6. Thou shalt not wrest the judgment of thy poor] Thou shalt neither countenance him in his crimes, nor condemn him in his righteousness.

Verse 8. Thou shalt take no gift] A strong ordinance against selling justice, which has been the disgrace and ruin of every state where it has been practised. In Magna Charta, there is one article expressly on this head: "To none will we sell, to none will we deny or defer, right or justice."

Verse 9. Ye know the heart of a stranger] Having been strangers yourselves, under severe, long continued, and cruel oppression, ye know the fears, cares, anxieties, and dismal forebodings which the heart of a stranger feels. What a forcible appeal to humanity and compassion!

Verse 11. The seventh year thou shalt let it rest] As every seventh day was a sabbath day, so every seventh year was to be a sabbath year.

That God intended to teach them the doctrine of providence by this ordinance, there can be no doubt; and this is marked very distinctly, Lev. xxv. 20, 21: "And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase: then I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years." That is, There shall be, not three crops in one year, but one crop equal in abundance to three, because it must supply the wants of three years. 1. For the sixth year, supplying fruit for its own consumption; 2. For the seventh year, in which they were neither to sow nor reap; and 3. For the eighth year, for though they ploughed, sowed, &c., that year, yet a whole course of its seasons was requisite to bring all these fruits to perfection, so that they could not have the fruits of the eighth year till the ninth (see ver. 22), till which time God promised that they should eat of the old store. What an astonishing proof did this give of the being, power, providence, mercy, and goodness of God!

It is very remarkable that the observance of this ordinance is no where expressly mentioned in the sacred writings; though some suppose, but without sufficient reason, that there is a reference to it in Jer. xxxiv. 8, 9. Perhaps the major part of the people could not trust God, and therefore continued to sow and reap on the seventh year, as on the preceding. This greatly displeased the Lord, and therefore he sent them into captivity; so that the land enjoyed those sabbaths, through lack of inhabitants, of which their ungodliness had deprived it. Commentators have been much puzzled to ascertain the time in which the sabbatical year began; because, if it began in Abib or March, they must have lost two harvests; for they could neither reap nor plant that year, and of course they could have no crop the year following; but if it began with what was called the civil year, or in Sisri or Marcheshvan, which answers to the beginning of our autumn, they would then have had that year's produce reaped and gathered in.

Verse 12. Six days thou shalt do thy work] Though they were thus bound to keep the sabbatical year, yet they must not neglect the seventh day's rest or weekly sabbath; for that was of perpetual obligation, and was paramount to all others. That the sanctification of the sabbath was of great consequence in the sight of God, we may learn from the various repetitions of this law; and we may observe that it has still for its object not only the benefit of the soul, but the health and comfort of the body also. Doth Verse 14. Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year.] The three feasts here referred to were, 1. The feast of the PASSOVER; 2. The feast of PENTECOST; 3. The feast of TABERNACLES.

1. The feast of the Passover was celebrated to keep in remembrance the wonderful deliverance of the Hebrews from Egypt. 2. The feast of Pentecost, called also the feast of harvest and the feast of weeks, chap. xxxiv. 22, was celebrated fifty days after the Passover to commemorate the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, which took place fifty days after, and hence called by the Greeks Pentecost. 3. The feast of Tabernacles, called also the feast of the ingathering, was celebrated about the 15th of the month Tisri, to commemorate the Israelites' dwelling in tents for forty years, during their stay in the wilderness. See on Lev. xxiii.

Besides the feasts mentioned above, the Jews had,

1. The feast of the Sabbath, which was a weekly feast.

2. The feast of the Sabbatical Year, which was a septennial feast.

3. The feast of Trumpets, which was celebrated on the first day of what was called their civil year, which was ushered in by the blowing of a trumpet; Lev. xxiii. 23, &c.

4. The feast of the New Moon, which was celebrated on the first day the moon appeared after her change.

5. The feast of Expiation, which was celebrated annually on the tenth day of Tisri or September, on which a general atonement was made for all the sins, negligences, and ignorances, throughout the year.

6. The feast of Lots or Purim, to commemorate the preservation of the Jews from the general massacre projected by Haman. See the Book of Esther.

7. The feast of the Dedication, or rather the Restoration of the temple, which had been profaned by Antiochus Epiphanes. This was also called the feast of Lights.

Besides these the Jews have had several other feasts, such as the feast of Branches, to commemorate the taking of Jericho.

Verse 17. All thy mates] Old men, sick men, male idiots, and male children under thirteen years of age, excepted; for so the Jewish doctors understand this command.

Verse 18. The blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread.] The sacrifice here mentioned is undoubtedly the Passover; this is called by way of eminence my sacrifice, because God had instituted it for that especial purpose, the redemption of Israel from the Egyptian bondage, and because it typified THE LAMB OF GOD, who taketh away the sin of the world. We have already seen how strict the prohibition against leaven was during this festival, and what was signified by it.

Verse 19. Thou shalt not see the kid in his mother's milk.] This passage has greatly perplexed commentators.

The simple object of the precept seems to be this: "Thou shalt do nothing that may have any tendency to blunt thy moral feelings, or teach thee hardness of heart." Even human nature shudders at the thought of causing the mother to lend her milk to seethe the flesh of her young one! We need go no farther for the delicate, tender, humane, and impressive meaning of this precept.

Verse 20. Behold, I send an Angel before thee] Some have thought that this was Moses, others Joshua, because the word malach signifies an angel or messenger; but as it is said, ver. 21, My name is in him (bekirbo, intimately, essentially in him) it is more likely that the great Angel of the Covenant, the Lord Jesus Christ, is meant, in whom dwell all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

Verse 21. He will not pardon your transgressions] He is not like a man, with whom ye may think that ye may trifle; were he either man or angel, in the common acceptance of the term, it need not be said, He will not pardon your transgressions, for neither man nor angel could do it.

My name is in him.] The Jehovah dwells in him; in him dwell all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; and because of this he could either pardon or punish.

Verse 23. Unto the Amorites] There are only six of the seven nations mentioned here, but the Septuagint, Samaritan, Coptic, and one Hebrew MS., add Girgashite, thus making the seven nations.

Verse 24. Break down their images.] Matssebotheyhem

28 And <sup>h</sup> I will send hornets before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite, from before thee.

Verse 25. Shall bless thy bread and thy water] That is, all thy provisions, no matter of what sort; the meanest fare shall be sufficiently nutritive when God's blessing is in it.

Verse 26. There shall nothing cast their young, nor be barren] Hence there must be a very great increase both of men and cattle.

The number of thy days I will fulfil.] Ye shall all live to a good old age, and none die before his time.

Verse 28. I will send hornets before thee] The root is not found in Hebrew, but it may be the same with the Arabic sarra, to lay prostrate, to strike down; the hornet, probably so called from the destruction occasioned by the violence of its sting. The hornet, in natural history, belongs to the species crabro, of the genus vespa or wasps; it is a most voracious insect, and is exceedingly strong for its size, which is generally an inch in length. How distressing and destructive a multitude of these might be, any person may conjecture; even the bees of one hive would be sufficient to sting a thousand men to madness, but how much worse must wasps and hornets be! No armour, no weapons, could avail against these. A few thousands of them would be quite sufficient to throw the best disciplined army into confusion and rout. From Josh. xxiv. 12 we find that two kings of the Amorites were actually driven out of the land by these hornets, so that the Israelites were not obliged to use either sword or bow in the conquest.

30 By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land.

31 And <sup>j</sup> I will set thy bounds from the Red Sea even unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the desert unto the river: for I will <sup>k</sup> deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand; and thou shalt drive them out before thee.

32 <sup>l</sup> Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor with their gods.

33 They shall not dwell in thy land, lest they make thee sin against me: for if thou serve their gods, <sup>m</sup> it will surely be a snare unto thee.

Verse 31. I will set thy bounds from the Red Sea] Or, in general terms, from the Euphrates on the east, to the Mediterranean Sea on the west: and from Mount Libanus on the north, to the Red Sea and the Nile on the south. This promise was not completely fulfilled till the days of David and Solomon. The general disobedience of the people before this time prevented a more speedy accomplishment; and their disobedience afterwards caused them to lose the possession. So, though all the promises of God are YEA and AMEN, yet they are fulfilled but to a few, because men are slow of heart to believe; and the blessings of providence and grace are taken away from several because of their unfaithfulness.

Verse 32. Thou shalt make no covenant with them] They were incurable idolaters, and the cup of their iniquity was full. And had the Israelites contracted any alliance with them, either sacred or civil, they would have enticed them into their idolatries, to which the Jews were at all times most unhappily prone.

They shall not dwell in thy land] The land was the Lord's, and he had given it to the progenitors of this people, to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The latter being obliged to leave it because of a famine, God is now conducting back his posterity, who alone had a divine and natural right to it, and therefore their seeking to possess the inheritance of their fathers can be criminal only in the sight of those who are systematically opposed to the thing, because it is a part of divine revelation.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and the seventy elders, are commanded to go to the mount to meet the Lord, 1.

*Moses alone to come near to the divine presence, 2. He informs the people, and they promise obedience, 3. He writes the words of the Lord, erects an altar at the foot of the hill, and sets up twelve pillars for the twelve tribes, 4. The young priests offer burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, 5. Moses reads the book of the covenant, sprinkles the people with the blood, and they promise obedience, 6-8. Moses, Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and the seventy elders of Israel, go up to the mount, and get a striking display of the majesty of God, 9-11. Moses alone is called up into the mount, in order to receive the tables of stone, written by the hand of God, 12. Moses and his servant Joshua go up, and Aaron and Hur are left regents of the people during his absence, 13, 14. The glory of the Lord rests on the mount, and the cloud covers it for six days, and on the seventh God speaks to Moses out of the cloud, 15, 16. manner, probably like the hoarse grumbling sound of distant thunder; see chap. xx. 18.

Verse 2. Moses alone shall come near] The people stood at the foot of the mountain. Aaron and his two sons and the words of the LORD, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, * All the words which the LORD hath said will we do.

4 And Moses <sup>b</sup> wrote all the words of the LORD, and rose up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve <sup>c</sup> pillars according to the twelve tribes of Israel.

5 And he sent young men of the children of Israel, which offered burnt-offerings, and sacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the LORD.

6 And Moses <sup>d</sup> took half of the blood, and put it in basons; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar.

7 And he <sup>e</sup> took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, ' All that the LORD hath said will we do, and be obedient.

seventy elders went up probably about half way, and Moses alone went to the summit.

Verse 3. Moses—told the people all the words of the Lord] That is, the ten commandments, and the various laws and ordinances mentioned from the beginning of the 20th to the end of the 23rd chapter.

Verse 4. Moses wrote all the words of the Lord] 1. As legislator, he reduces to writing all the articles and conditions of the agreement, with the people's act of consent. 2. As their mediator and the deputy of the Lord, he accepts on his part the resolution of the people; and Jehovah on his part engages himself to Israel, to be their God, their King, and Protector, and to fulfil to them all the promises he had made to their fathers. 3. To make this the more solemn and affecting, and to ratify the covenant, which could not be done without sacrifice, shedding and sprinkling of blood, Moses builds an altar, probably of turf, as was commanded chap. xx. 24, and erects twelve pillars, no doubt of unhewn stone, and probably set round about the altar. The altar itself represented the throne of God; the twelve stones the twelve tribes of Israel. These were the two parties who were to contract, or enter into covenant, on this occasion.

Verse 5. He sent young men] Stout, able, reputable young men, chosen out of the different tribes, for the purpose of killing, flaying, and offering the oxen mentioned here.

Burnt-offerings] They generally consisted of sheep and goats, Lev. i. 10. These were wholly consumed by fire.

Peace-offerings] Bullocks or goats; see Heb. ix. 19. The blood of these was poured out before the Lord, and then the priests and people might feast on the flesh.

Verse 7. The book of the covenant] The writing containing the laws mentioned in the three preceding chapters. As this writing contained the agreement made between God and them, it was called the book of the covenant; but as no covenant was considered to be ratified or binding till a sacrifice had been offered on the occasion, hence the necessity of the sacrifices mentioned here.

Half of the blood being sprinkled on the ALTAR, and half of it sprinkled on the PEOPLE, showed that both God and they were mutually bound by this covenant. God was bound to the PEOPLE to support, defend, and save them; the PEOPLE were bound to God to fear, love, and serve him. Thus the blood of the new covenant was necessary to propitiate the throne of justice on the one hand, and to reconcile men to God on the other.

Verse 10. They saw the God of Israel] The seventy elders, who were representatives of the whole congregation, were chosen to witness the manifestation of God, that they might be satisfied of the truth of the revelation which he had made of himself and of his will; and on this occasion it was necessary that the people also should be favoured with a sight of the glory of God; see chap. xx. 18. Thus the certainty of the revelation was established by many witnesses, and by those especially of the most competent kind.

A paved work of a sapphire stone] Or, sapphire brick-work. I suppose that something of the Musive or Mosaic

8 And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold * the blood of the covenant, which the LORD hath made with you concerning all these words.

9 Then <sup>b</sup> went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel:

10 And they <sup>c</sup> saw the God of Israel: and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a <sup>d</sup> sapphire stone, and as it were the <sup>e</sup> body of heaven in his clearness.

11 And upon the nobles of the children of Israel he <sup>f</sup> laid not his hand: also <sup>g</sup> they saw God, and did <sup>h</sup> eat and drink.

12 And the LORD said unto Moses, <sup>i</sup> Come up to me into the mount, and be there: and I will give thee <sup>j</sup> tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them.

pavement is here intended; floors most curiously inlaid with variously coloured stones or small square tiles, disposed in a great variety of ornamental forms.

Sapphire is a precious stone of a fine blue colour, next in hardness to the diamond. The ruby is considered by most mineralogists of the same genus; so is also the topaz: hence we cannot say that the sapphire is only of a blue colour; it is blue, red, or yellow, as it may be called sapphire, ruby, or topaz; and some of them are blue or green, according to the light in which they are held; and some white. The ancient oriental sapphire is supposed to have been the same with the lapis lazuli. Supposing that these different kinds of sapphires are here intended, how glorious must a pavement be, constituted of polished stones of this sort, perfectly transparent, with an effulgence of heavenly splendour poured out upon them! The red, the blue, the green, and the yellow, arranged by the wisdom of God, into the most beautiful emblematic representations and the whole body of heaven in its clearness shining upon them, must have made a most glorious appearance. As the divine glory appeared above the mount, it is reasonable to suppose that the Israelites saw the sapphire pavement over their heads, as it might have occupied a space in the atmosphere equal in extent to the base of the mountain; and being transparent, the intense brightness shining upon it must have greatly heightened the effect.

It is necessary further to observe that all this must have been only an appearance, unconnected with any personal similitude; for this Moses expressly asserts, Deut. iv. 15. And though the feet are here mentioned, this can only be understood of the sapphirine basis or pavement, on which this celestial and indescribable glory of the Lord appeared. Thus God took care to preserve them from all incentives to idolatry, while he gave them the fullest proofs of his being.

Verse 11. Upon the nobles of—Israel he laid not his hand] This laying on of the hand has been variously explained. 1. He did not conceal himself from the nobles of Israel by covering them with his hand, as he did Moses, chap. xxxiii. 22. 2. He did not endue any of the nobles, i.e. the seventy elders, with the gift of prophecy; for so laying on of the hand has been understood. 3. He did not slay any of them; none of them received any injury; which is certainly one meaning of the phrase: see Neh. xiii. 21; Ps. lv. 20. Also they saw God, i.e. although they had this discovery of his majesty, yet they did eat and drink, i.e. were preserved alive and unharmed. Perhaps the eating and drinking here may refer to the peace-offerings on which they feasted, and the libations that were then offered on the ratification of the covenant. But they rejoiced the more because they had been so highly favoured, and were still permitted to live; for it was generally apprehended that God never showed his glory in this signal manner but for the purpose of manifesting his justice; and therefore it appeared a strange thing that these should have seen God as it were face to face, and yet live.

Verse 12. Come up to me into the mount, and be there] We may suppose Moses to have been, with Aaron, Nadab, 13 And Moses rose up, and <sup>a</sup> his minister Joshua : and Moses <sup>b</sup> went up into the mount of God.

14 And he said unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you : and, behold, Aaron and Hur are with you ; if any man have any matter to do, let him come unto them.

15 And Moses went up into the mount, and <sup>c</sup> a cloud covered the mount.

16 And <sup>d</sup> the glory of the Lord abode upon Mount

Abihu, and the seventy elders, about midway up the mount ; for it plainly appears that there were several stations on it.

Verse 13. Moses rose up] The glory was probably above the cloud, and it was to the cloud that Moses and his servant Joshua ascended at this time, leaving Aaron and the elders below. After they had been in this region, viz., where the cloud encompassed the mountain, for six days, God appears to have called Moses up higher. Moses then ascended to the glory, leaving Joshua in the cloud, with whom he had, no doubt, frequent conferences during the forty days he continued with God on the mount.

Verse 14. Tarry ye here for us] Probably Moses did not know that he was to continue so long on the mount, nor is it likely that the elders tarried the whole forty days where they were : they doubtless, after waiting some considerable time, returned to the camp ; and their return is supposed to have been the grand cause why the Israelites made the golden calf, as they probably reported that Moses was lost.

Aaron and Hur are with you] Not knowing how long he might be detained on the mount, and knowing that many cases might occur which would require the interference of the chief magistrate, Moses constituted them regents of the people during the time he should be absent.

Verse 15. And the seventh day he called] It is very likely that Moses went up into the mount on the first day of the week ; and having with Joshua remained in the region of the cloud during six days, on the seventh, which was the sabbath, God spake to him, and delivered successively to him, during forty days and forty nights, the different statutes and ordinances which are afterwards mentioned.

Verse 17. The glory of the Lord was like devouring fire] This appearance was well calculated to inspire the people with the deepest reverence and godly fear. Seeing the glory of the Lord upon the mount like a devouring fire, Moses Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days : and the seventh day he called unto Moses, out of the midst of the cloud.

17 And the sight of the glory of the Lord was like <sup>a</sup> devouring fire, on the top of the mount, in the eyes of the children of Israel.

18 And Moses went into the midst of the cloud, and gat him up into the mount : and <sup>b</sup> Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights.

having tarried long, they probably supposed that he had been devoured or consumed by it, and therefore the more easily fell into idolatry. But how could they do this, with this tremendous sight of God's glory before their eyes ?

Verse 18. Forty days and forty nights.] During the whole of this time he neither ate bread nor drank water ; see chap. xxxiv. 28, Deut. ix. 9. Both his body and soul were so sustained by the invigorating presence of God, that he needed no earthly support, and this may be the simple reason why he took none.

1. Moses, who was the mediator of the Old Covenant, is alone permitted to draw nigh to God ; none of the people are suffered to come up to the divine glory, not even Aaron, nor his sons, nor the nobles of Israel. Moses was a type of Christ, who is the mediator of the New Covenant ; and he alone has access to God in behalf of the human race, as Moses had in behalf of Israel.

2. The law can inspire nothing but terror, when viewed unconnected with its sacrifices, and those sacrifices are nothing but as they refer to Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God, who alone, by the sacrifice of himself, bears away the sin of the world.

3. The blood of the victims was sprinkled both on the altar and on the people, to show that the death of Christ gave to divine justice what it demanded, and to men what they needed. The people were sanctified by it unto God, and God was propitiated by it unto the people. By this sacrifice the law was magnified and made honourable, so divine justice received its due ; and those who believe are justified from all guilt, and sanctified from all sin, so they receive all that they need. Thus God is well pleased, and believers eternally saved. This is a glorious economy, highly worthy of God, its author.

10 * And they shall make an ark of shittim wood :

*Ch. xxxvii 1 D-ut.

Verse 2. That they bring me an offering] The offering here mentioned is the terumah, a kind of free-will offering, consisting of any thing that was necessary for the occasion. It signifies properly any thing that was lifted up, the heave-offering, because in presenting it to God it was lifted up, to be laid on his altar; but see on chap. xxix. 26. God requires that they should build him a tent, suited in some sort to his dignity and eminence, because he was to act as their king, and to dwell among them; and they were to consider themselves as his subjects, and in this character to bring him presents, which was considered to be the duty of every subject appearing before his prince.

Verse 3. This is the offering] There were three kinds of metals: 1. GOLD, sahab, which may properly signify wrought gold; what was bright and resplendent, as the word implies, so called from its well-known colour.

3. BRASS, nechosheth, copper; unless we suppose that the factitious metal commonly called brass is intended: this is formed by a combination of the oxide or ore of zinc, called lapis calaminaris, with copper. Brass seems to have been very anciently in use, as we find it mentioned Gen. iv. 22; and the preparation of copper, to transform it into this factitious metal, seems to be very pointedly referred to Job xxviii. 2.

Verse 4. Blue] Techeleth, generally supposed to mean an azure or sky colour; rendered by the Septuagint and by the Vulgate, a sky-blue or deep violet.

Purple] Argaman, a very precious colour, extracted from the purpura or murex, a species of shell-fish, from which it is supposed the famous Tyrian purple came, so costly, and so much celebrated in antiquity.

Scarlet] Tolaath signifies a worm, of which this colouring matter was made; and, joined with shani, which signifies to repeat or double, implies that to strike this colour the wool or cloth was twice dipped; hence the Vulgate renders the original "scarlet twice dyed."

Fine linen] Shesh; whether this means linen, cotton, or silk, is not agreed on among interpreters. Because shesh means six, the rabbins suppose that it always signifies the fine linen of Egypt, in which six folds constituted one thread; and that when a single fold was meant, bad is the term used.

Goats' hair] In different parts of Asia Minor, Syria, Cilicia, and Phrygia, the goats have long, fine, and beautiful hair, in some cases almost as fine as silk, which they shear at proper times, and manufacture into garments.

Verse 5. Rams' skins dyed red] Literally, the skins of red rams. It is a fact attested by many respectable travellers, that in the Levant sheep are often to be met with that have red or violet-coloured fleeces.

Badgers' skins] Few terms have afforded greater perplexity to critics and commentators than this. Bochart has exhausted the subject, and seems to have proved that no kind of animal is here intended, but a colour. None of the ancient Versions acknowledge an animal of any kind except the Chaldee, which seems to think the badger is intended, and from it we have borrowed our translation of the word. The Septuagint and Vulgate have skins dyed a violet colour; the Syriac, azure; the Arabic, black; the Coptic, violet; the modern Persic, ram-skins, &c. The colour contended for by Bochart is the hyssopus, which is a very deep blue. [Bochart's interpretation cannot be sustained. The use of the same word as the material out of which shoes were made (Ezekiel xvi. 10) is conclusive against it. But there is a perplexing variety of opinion as to the animal mentioned. Kalisch prefers the common version.]

Shittim wood] By some supposed to be the finest species of the cedar; by others, the acacia Nilotica, a species of thorn, solid, light, and very beautiful. This acacia is known to have been plentiful in Egypt, and it abounds in Arabia Deserta, the very place in which Moses was when he built the tabernacle; and hence it is reasonable to suppose that he built it of that wood, which was every way proper for his purpose.

Verse 6. Oil for the light] This they must have brought with them from Egypt, for they could not get any in the wilderness where there were no olives; but it is likely that two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

x. 3. Heb. ix. 4.

this and some other directions refer more to what was to be done when in their fixed and settled residence, than while wandering in the wilderness.

Spices] To make a confection for sweet incense, abounded in different parts of these countries.

Verse 7. Onyx stones] We have already met with the stone called shoham, Gen. ii. 12, and acknowledged the difficulty of ascertaining what is meant by it. Some think the onyx, some the sardine, and some the emerald, is meant.

Stones to be set in the ephod] The ephod.—It is very difficult to tell what this was, or in what form it was made. It was a garment of some kind peculiar to the priests, and ever considered essential to all the parts of divine worship, for without it no person attempted to inquire of God. As the word itself comes from the root aphad, he tied or bound close, Calmet supposes that it was a kind of girdle which, brought from behind the neck and over the shoulders, and so hanging down before, was put cross upon the stomach, and then carried round the waist, and thus made a girdle to the tunic. Where the ephod crossed on the breast there was a square ornament called choshen, the breastplate, in which twelve precious stones were set, each having one of the names of the twelve sons of Jacob engraven on it. There were two sorts of ephods, one of plain linen for the priests, the other very much embroidered for the high-priest. As there was nothing singular in this common sort, no particular description is given; but that of the high-priest is described very much in detail, chap. xxviii. 6-8. It was distinguished from the common ephod by being composed of gold, blue, purple, scarlet, fine twisted linen, and cunning work, i.e. superbly ornamented and embroidered. This ephod was fastened on the shoulders with two precious stones, on which the twelve names of the twelve tribes of Israel were engraved, six names on each stone. These two stones thus engraved, were different from those on the breastplate, with which they have been confounded.

Verse 8. Let them make me a sanctuary] This was that part of the tabernacle that was called the most holy place, into which the high-priest entered only once a-year, on the great day of atonement.

That I may dwell among them.] As the dwelling in this tabernacle was the highest proof of God's grace and mercy towards the Israelites, so it typified Christ's dwelling by faith in the hearts of believers, and thus giving them the highest and surest proof of their reconciliation to God, and of his love and favour to them; see Eph. i. 22, iii. 17.

Verse 9. After the pattern of the tabernacle] It has been supposed that there had been a tabernacle before that erected by Moses, though it probably did not now exist; but the tabernacle which Moses is ordered to make was to be formed exactly on the model of this ancient one, the pattern of which God showed him in the mount, ver. 40. The word mishcan signifies literally the dwelling or habitation; and this was so called because it was the dwelling-place of God; and the only place on the earth in which he made himself manifest. [There is little reason for supposing the existence of a former tabernacle.]

Verse 10. They shall make an ark] Aron signifies an ark, chest, coffer, or coffin. It is used particularly to designate that chest or coffer in which the testimony or two tables of the covenant was laid up, on the top of which was the propitiatory or mercy-seat (see on ver. 17), and at the end of which were the cherubim of gold (ver. 18-20), between whom the visible sign of the presence of the supreme God appeared as seated upon his throne. The ark was the most excellent of all the holy things which belonged to the Mosaic economy, and for its sake the tabernacle and the temple were built, chap. xxvi. 33, xl. 18, 21. It was considered as conferring a sanctity wherever it was fixed, 2 Chron. viii. 11, 2 Sam. vi. 12.

Two cubits and a half shall be the length, &c.] About four feet five inches in length, taking the cubit at twenty-one inches, and two feet six inches in breadth and in depth. As this ark was chiefly intended to deposit the two tables of stone in, which had been written by the finger of God, we may very reasonably conjecture that the length of those tables was not less than four feet, and their breadth not less than two. As to their thickness we can say nothing, as the depth of the ark was intended for other matters besides the two tables, such as Aaron's rod, the pot of manna, &c., &c., though probably these were laid up beside, not in, the ark.

11 And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, within and without shalt thou overlay it, and shalt make upon it a crown of gold round about.

13 And thou shalt make staves of shittim wood, and overlay them with gold.

14 And thou shalt put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, that the ark may be borne with them.

Verse 11. A crown of gold round about. [A border or, as the Septuagint have it, waves of gold wreathed round about.]

Verse 15. The staves—shall not be taken from it. Because it should ever be considered as in readiness to be removed, God not having told them at what hour he should command them to strike their tents. If the staves were never to be taken out, how can it be said, as in Num. iv. 6, that when the camp should set forward, they should put in the staves thereof, which intimates that when they uncamped they took out the staves, which appears to be contrary to what is here said? To reconcile these two places it has been supposed that besides the staves which passed through the rings of the ark, and by which it was carried, there were two other staves or poles in the form of a bier or hand-barrow, on which the ark was laid in order to be transported in their journeyings, when it and its own staves, still in their rings, had been wrapped up in the covering of what is called badgers' skins and blue cloth.

Verse 16. The testimony. The two tables of stone, which were not yet given; these tables were called eduth, from ad, forward, onward, to bear witness to or of a person or thing. Not only the tables of stone, but all the contents of the ark, Aaron's rod, the pot of manna, the holy anointing oil, &c., bore testimony to the Messiah in his prophetic, sacerdotal, and regal offices.

Verse 17. A mercy-seat. Capporeth, from caphar, to cover or overspread; because by an act of pardon sins are represented as being covered, so that they no longer appear in the eye of divine justice to displease, irritate, and call for punishment; and the person of the offender is covered or protected from the stroke of the broken law. In the Septuagint the word hilasterion is used, which signifies a propitiatory, and is the name used by the apostle, Heb. ix. 5. This mercy-seat or propitiatory was made of pure gold; it was properly the lid or covering of that vessel so well known by the name of the ark and ark of the covenant. On and before this, the high-priest was to sprinkle the blood of the expiatory sacrifices on the great day of atonement: and it was in this place that God promised to meet the people (see ver. 22); for there he dwelt, and there was the symbol of the divine presence. At each end of this propitiatory was a cherub, between whom this glory was manifested; hence in scripture it is so often said that he dwelleth between the cherubim. As the word propitiatory or mercy-seat is applied to Christ, Rom. iii. 25, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood—for the remission of sins that are past; hence we learn that Christ was the true mercy-seat, the thing signified by the capporeth, to the ancient believers. And we learn further that it was by his blood that an atonement was to be made for the sins of the world. And as God showed himself between the cherubim over this propitiatory or mercy-seat, so it is said, God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself; 2 Cor v. 19, &c. See on Lev. vii.

Verse 18. Thou shalt make two cherubims. What these were we cannot distinctly say. It is generally supposed that a cherub was a creature with four heads and one body; and the animals, of which these emblematical forms consisted, were the noblest of their kinds; the lion among the wild beasts, the bull among the tame ones, the eagle among the birds, and man at the head of all; so that they might be the representatives of all nature. Concerning their forms and design there is much difference of opinion among divines. It is probable that the term often means a figure of any kind, such as was ordinarily sculptured on stone, engraved on metal, carved on wood, or embroidered on cloth. It may be only necessary to add, that cherub is the singular number; cherubim, not cherubims, the plural.

Verse 22. And there I will meet with thee. That is, over the mercy-seat, between the cherubim. In this place God chose to give the most especial manifestations of himself; here the divine glory was to be seen; and here Moses was to come in order to consult Jehovah, relative to the management of the people.

Verse 23. Thou shalt also make a table of shittim wood. The same wood, the acacia, of which the ark-staves, &c., were made.

Verse 29. The dishes thereof. Probably the deep bowls in which they kneaded the mass out of which they made the shew-bread.

And spoons thereof. Censers, on which they put the incense; as seems pretty evident from Numb. vii. 14, 20, 26, 36 Their knops and their branches shall be of the same: all of it shall be one beaten work of pure gold.

37 And thou shalt make the seven lamps thereof: and <sup>d</sup>they shall <sup>e</sup>light the lamps thereof, that they may <sup>f</sup>give light over against <sup>g</sup>it.

Covers thereof] Supposed to be a large cup or tankard, in which pure wine was kept on the table along with the shew-bread for libations, which were poured out before the Lord every sabbath, when the old bread was removed, and the new bread laid on the table.

Bowls thereof] From nakah, to clear away, remove, empty, &c.; supposed by Calmet to mean, either the sieves by which the Levites cleansed the wheat they made into bread, or the ovens in which the bread was baked. Others suppose they were vessels which they dipped into the kesoth, to take out the wine for libations.

Verse 30. Shew-bread] Literally, bread of faces; so called, either because they were placed before the presence or face of God in the sanctuary, or because they were made square, as the Jews will have it. It is probable that they were in the form of cubes or hexaedrons, each side presenting the same appearance; and hence the Jews might suppose they were called the bread or loaves of faces: but the Hebrew text seems to intimate that they were called the bread of faces, panim, because, as the Lord says, they were set tephannai, before my face. These loaves or cakes were twelve, representing, as is generally supposed, the twelve tribes of Israel. They were in two rows of six each. On the top of each row there was a golden dish with frankincense, which was burned before the Lord, as a memorial, at the end of the week, when the old loaves were removed and replaced by new ones, the priests taking the former for their domestic use.

It is more difficult to ascertain the use of these, or what they represented, than almost any other emblem in the whole Jewish economy. Many have conjectured their meaning, and I feel no disposition to increase their number by any addition of my own.

Verse 31. A candlestick of pure gold] This candlestick or chandelier is generally described as having one shaft or stock, with six branches proceeding from it, adorned at equal distances with six flowers like lilies, with as many bowls and knops placed alternately. On each of the branches there was a lamp, and one on the top of the shaft which occupied the centre; thus there were seven lamps in all, ver. 37. These seven lamps were lighted every evening and extinguished every morning.

We are not so certain of the precise form of any instrument or utensil of the tabernacle or temple, as we are of this, the golden table, and the two silver trumpets.

Titus, after the overthrow of Jerusalem, A.D. 70, had the golden candlestick and the golden table of the shew-bread, the silver trumpets, and the book of the Law, taken out of the temple and carried in triumph to Rome; and Vespasian lodged them in the temple which he had consecrated to the goddess of Peace. Some plants also of the balm of Jericho are said to have been carried in the procession. At the foot of Mount Palatine there are the ruins of an arch on which the triumph of Titus for his conquest of the Jews is represented, and on which the several monuments which were carried in the procession are sculptured, and particularly the golden candlestick, the table of the shew-bread, and the two silver trumpets. To see these sacred articles given up by that God who ordered them to be made according to a pattern exhibited by himself, gracing the triumph of a heathen emperor, and at last consecrated to an idol, affords melancholy reflections to a pious mind. But these things had accomplished the end for which they were instituted, and they were now of no further use. The glorious personage typified by all this ancient apparatus, had about seventy years before this made his appearance. The true light was come, and the holy Spirit poured out from on high; and therefore the golden candlestick, by which they were typified, was given up. The over-during bread had been sent from heaven; and therefore the golden table, which bore its representative, the shew-bread, was now no longer needful. The joyful sound of the everlasting gospel was then published in the world; and therefore the silver trumpets that typified this were carried into captivity, and their sound was no more to be heard. Strange providence, but unutterable mercy of God! The Jews lost both the sign and the thing signified; and that very people, who destroyed the holy city, carried away the spoils of the temple, and dedicated them to the objects of their idolatry, were the first in the universe to receive the preaching of the gospel, the light of salvation, and the bread of life! There is a sort of coincidence or association here, which is worthy of the most serious observation. The Jews had these significant emblems to lead them to, and prepare them for, the things signified. They trusted in the former, and rejected the latter! God therefore deprived them of both, and gave up their temple to the spoilers, their land to desolation, and themselves to captivity and to the sword. The heathens then carried away the emblems of their salvation, and God shortly gave unto those heathens that very salvation of which these things were the emblems!

Verse 39. Of a talent of pure gold shall he make it, with all these vessels.] That is, a talent of gold in weight was used in making the candlestick, and the different vessels and instruments which belonged to it. According to Bishop Cumberland, a talent was three thousand shekels. The sum of seven thousand and thirteen pounds was expended on the candlestick and its furniture. It is no wonder then (if the candlestick in the second temple was equal in value to that in the ancient tabernacle), that Titus should think it of sufficient consequence to be one of the articles, with the golden table and silver trumpets, that should be employed to grace his triumph. Their intrinsic worth was a matter of no consequence to him, whose are the silver and gold, the earth and its fulness; they had accomplished their design, and were of no further use, either in the kingdom of Providence, or the kingdom of Grace.

Verse 40. And look that thou make, &c.] This verse should be understood as an order to Moses after the tabernacle, &c., had been described to him; as if he had said:

"When thou comest to make all the things that I have already described to thee, with the other matters of which I shall afterwards treat, see that thou make every thing according to the pattern which thou didst see in the mount." It appears to me that St. Paul had this command particularly in view when he gave that to his son Timothy, which we find in the second epistle, chap. i. 13: "Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard of me." The tabernacle was a type of the church of God; that church is built upon the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone, Eph. ii. 20-22: the doctrines, therefore, delivered by the prophets, Jesus Christ, and his apostles, are essential to the constitution of this church. As God, therefore, gave the plan or form according to which the tabernacle must be constructed, so he gives the doctrines according to which the Christian church is to be modelled; and apostles, and subordinate builders, are to have and hold fast that form of sound words, and construct this heavenly building according to that form or pattern which has come through the express revelation of God.

In different parts of this work we have had occasion to remark that the heathens borrowed their best things from divine revelation, both as it refers to what was pure in their doctrines, and significant in their religious rites. Indeed, they seem in many cases to have studied the closest imitation possible, consistent with the adaptation of all to their preposterous and idolatrous worship. They had their Jove, in imitation of the true JEHOVAH; and from different attributes of the Divine Nature they formed an innumerable group of gods and goddesses. They had also their temples in imitation of the temple of God; and in these they had their holy and more holy places, in imitation of the courts of the Lord's house. The heathen temples consisted of several parts or divisions: 1. The area or porch; 2. The temple, similar to the nave of our churches; 3. The adytum or holy place, called also penetrals and sacrarium; and 4. The inner temple, the most secret recess, where they had their mysteria, and which answered to the Holy of Holies in the tabernacle. And as there is no evidence whatever that there was any temple among the heathens prior to the tabernacle, it is reasonable to conclude that it served as a model for all that they afterwards built. They had even their portable temples, to imitate the tabernacle; and the shrines for Diana, mentioned Acts xix. 24, were of this kind. They had even their arks or sacred coffers, where they kept their most holy things, and the mysterious emblems of their religion; together with candlesticks or lamps, to illuminate their temples, which had few windows, to imitate the golden candlestick in the Mosaic tabernacle. They had even their processions, in imitation of the carrying about of the ark in the wilderness, accompanied by such ceremonies as sufficiently show to an unprejudiced mind, that they borrowed them from this sacred original.

From the solemn and very particular charge, Look that thou make them after their pattern, which was shewed thee in the mount, it appears plainly that God showed Moses a model of the tabernacle and all its furniture; and to receive instructions relative to this was one part of his employment while on the mount forty days with God. As God designed that this building, and all that belonged to it, should be patterns or representations of good things to come, it was indispensably necessary that Moses should receive a model and specification of the whole, according to which he might direct the different artificers in their constructing the work. 1. We may observe that the whole tabernacle and its furniture resembled a dwelling-house and its furniture. 2. That this tabernacle was the house of God, not merely for the performance of his worship, but for his residence. 3. That God had promised to dwell among this people, and this was the habitation which he appointed for his glory. 4. That the tabernacle, as well as the temple, was a type of the incarnation of Jesus Christ. 5. That as the glory of God was manifested between the cherubim, above the mercy-seat, in this tabernacle, so God was in Christ, and in him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. 6. As in the tabernacle were found bread, light, &c., probably all these were emblematical of the ample provision made in Christ for the direction, support, and salvation of the soul of man. Of these, and many other things in the law and the prophets, we shall know more when mortality is swallowed up of life.

[Verse 1. Thou shalt make the tabernacle] Mischam, from shachan, to dwell, means simply a dwelling-place or habitation of any kind, but here it means the dwelling-place of Jehovah, who, as a king in his camp, had his dwelling or pavilion among his people, his table always spread, his lamps lighted, and the priests, &c., his attendants, always in waiting. From the minute and accurate description here given, a good workman, had he the same materials, might make a perfect fac simile of the ancient Jewish tabernacle. It was a moveable building, and so constructed that it might be easily taken to pieces for the greater convenience of carriage, as they were often obliged to transport it from place to place, in their various journeyings.

2 The length of one curtain shall be eight and twenty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and every one of the curtains shall have one measure.

3 The five curtains shall be coupled together one

[Cunning work] Chosheb probably means a sort of diaper, in which the figures appear equally perfect on both sides; this was probably formed in the loom. Another kind of curious work is mentioned ver. 36, rokem, which we term needle-work; this was probably similar to our embroidery, tapestry, or cloth of arras. It has been thought unlikely that these curious works were all manufactured in the wilderness: what was done in the loom, they might have brought with them from Egypt; what could be done by hand, without the use of complex machinery, the Israelitish women could readily perform with their needles, during their stay in the wilderness. But still it seems probable that they brought even their looms with them. The whole of to another; and other five curtains shall be coupled one to another.

4 And thou shalt make loops of blue, upon the edge of the one curtain, from the selvedge in the coupling; and likewise shalt thou make in the uttermost edge of another curtain, in the coupling of the second.

5 Fifty loops shalt thou make in the one curtain, and fifty loops shalt thou make in the edge of the curtain that is in the coupling of the second; that the loops may take hold one of another.

6 And thou shalt make fifty taches of gold, and couple the curtains together with the taches; and it shall be one tabernacle.

7 And thou shalt make curtains of goats' hair, to be a covering upon the tabernacle: eleven curtains shalt thou make.

8 The length of one curtain shall be thirty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and the eleven curtains shall be all of one measure.

9 And thou shalt couple five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves, and shalt double the sixth curtain in the forefront of the tabernacle.

10 And thou shalt make fifty loops on the edge of the one curtain that is outmost in the coupling, and fifty loops in the edge of the curtain which completh the second.

11 And thou shalt make fifty taches of brass, and put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together, that it may be one.

12 And the remnant that remaineth of the curtains of the tent, the half curtain that remaineth, shall hang over the backside of the tabernacle.

13 And a cubit on the one side, and a cubit on the other side, of that which remaineth in the length of the curtains of the tent, it shall hang over the sides of the tabernacle, on this side and on that side, to cover it.

14 And thou shalt make a covering for the tent of rams' skins dyed red, and a covering above of badgers' skins.

15 And thou shalt make boards for the tabernacle of shittim wood standing up.

16 Ten cubits shall be the length of a board, and a cubit and a half shall be the breadth of one board.

17 Two tenons shall there be in one board, set in order one against another: thus shalt thou make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

18 And thou shalt make the boards for the tabernacle, twenty boards on the south side southward.

19 And thou shalt make forty sockets of silver under the twenty boards; two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons.

20 And for the second side of the tabernacle, on the north side, there shall be twenty boards:

21 And their forty sockets of silver; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

22 And for the sides of the tabernacle westward, thou shalt make six boards.

23 And two boards shalt thou make for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides.

24 And they shall be coupled together beneath, and they shall be coupled together above the head of it unto one ring: thus shall it be for them both; they shall be for the two corners.

25 And they shall be eight boards, and their sockets of silver, sixteen sockets; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

26 And thou shalt make bars of shittim wood; five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle, 27 And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the side of the tabernacle, for the two sides westward.

28 And the middle bar, in the midst of the boards, shall reach from end to end.

29 And thou shalt overlay the boards with gold, and make their rings of gold for places for the bars: and thou shalt overlay the bars with gold.

30 And thou shalt rear up the tabernacle, according to the fashion thereof, which was shewed thee in the mount.

31 And thou shalt make a veil of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen of cunning work: with cherubims shall it be made.

this account shows that not only necessary but ornamental arts had been carried to a considerable pitch of perfection, both among the Israelites and Egyptians.

The inner curtains of the tabernacle were ten in number, and each in length twenty-eight cubits, and four in breadth; about sixteen yards twelve inches long, and two yards twelve inches broad. The curtains were to be coupled together, five and five of a side, by fifty loops, ver. 5, and as many golden clasps, ver. 6, so that each might look like one curtain, and the whole make one entire covering, which was the first.

Verse 7. Curtains of goats' hair] Stuff made of goats' hair. This was the second covering.

Verse 14. Rams' skins dyed red] This was the third covering; and what is called the badgers' skins was the fourth. Why there should have been four coverings does not appear. They might have been designed partly for respect; and partly to keep off dust and dirt, and the extremely fine sand which in that desert rises as it were on every breeze; and partly to keep off the intense heat of the sun, which would otherwise have destroyed the poles, bars, boards, and the whole of the wood-work. As to the conjecture of some that "the four coverings were intended the better to keep off the rain," it must appear unfounded to those who know that in that desert rain was rarely ever seen.

Verse 15. Thou shalt make boards] These formed what might be called the walls of the tabernacle. To have worked the acacia into these boards or planks, the Israelites must have had sawyers, joiners, &c., among them; but how they got the tools is a question. But as the Israelites were the general workmen of Egypt, and were brought up to every kind of trade for the service of their oppressors, we may naturally suppose that every artificer brought off some of his tools with him. For though it is not at all likely that they had any armour or defensive weapons in their power, yet for the reason above assigned they must have had the implements which were requisite for their respective trades.

Verse 16. Ten cubits shall be the length of a board] Each of these boards or planks was about five yards and two feet and a half long, and thirty-two inches broad; and as they are said to be standing up, this was the HEIGHT of the tabernacle. The length being thirty cubits, twenty boards of one cubit and a half broad each, make about seventeen yards and a half, and the BREADTH was about five yards.

Verse 29. Thou shalt overlay the boards with gold] It is not said how thick the gold was by which these boards, &c., were overlaid; it was no doubt done with gold plates, but these must have been very thin, else the boards, &c., must have been insupportably heavy. The gold was probably something like our gold-leaf, but not brought to so great a degree of tenuity.

Verse 31. Thou shalt make a veil] Parocheth, from parach, to break or rend; the inner veil of the tabernacle or temple which broke, interrupted, or divided between the holy place and the most holy; the Holy Ghost thus signifying 32 And thou shalt hang it upon four pillars of shittim wood, overlaid with gold: their hooks shall be of gold, upon the four sockets of silver.

33 And thou shalt hang up the veil under the taches, that thou mayest bring in thither within the veil <sup>a</sup>the ark of the testimony: and the veil shall divide unto you between <sup>b</sup>the holy place and the most holy.

34 And <sup>c</sup>thou shalt put the mercy-seat upon the ark of the testimony, in the most holy place.

35 And <sup>d</sup>thou shalt set the table without the

that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was standing.

Does not the Hebrew name parocheth moreover intimate the typical correspondence of this veil to the body or flesh of Christ? For this veil was his flesh which, being rent, affords us a new and living way into the holiest of all, i.e. into heaven itself.

And accordingly when his blessed body was rent upon the cross, this veil also was RENT in twain from the top to the bottom; Matt. xxvii. 51.

The veil in the tabernacle was exceedingly costly; it was made of the same materials with the inner covering, blue, purple, scarlet, fine twined linen embroidered with cherubim, &c. It served to divide the tabernacle into two parts: one, the outermost, called the holy place; the other, or innermost, called the Holy of holies, or the most holy place. In this was deposited the ark of the covenant, and the other things that were laid up by way of memorial. Into this the high-priest alone was permitted to enter, and that only once in the year, on the great day of atonement. It was in this inner place that Jehovah manifested himself between the cherubim.

Verse 32. Their hooks shall be of gold] As the word vav or vau, plural ravin, occurs only in this book, chap. xxvi. 32, 37, xxvii. 10, 11, 17, xxxvi. 36, 38, xxxviii. 10, 11, 12, 17, 19, 28, and is used in these places in reference to the same subject, it is very difficult to ascertain its precise meaning. Most commentators and lexicographers think that the ideal meaning of the word is to connect, attach, join to, hook; and that the letter vau has its name from its hook-like form, and its use as a particle in the Hebrew language, because it serves to connect the words and members of a sentence, and the sentences of a discourse together, and that therefore hook veil, and <sup>e</sup>the candlestick over against the table on the side of the tabernacle toward the south: and thou shalt put the table on the north side.

36 And <sup>f</sup>thou shalt make an hanging for the door of the tent, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, wrought with needlework.

37 And thou shalt make for the hanging <sup>g</sup>five pillars of shittim wood, and overlay them with gold, and their hooks shall be of gold: and thou shalt cast five sockets of brass for them.

must be the obvious meaning of the word in all the above texts. On the whole it appears much more reasonable to translate the original by capitals than by hooks.

Verse 36. An hanging for the door of the tent] This may be called the first veil, as it occupied the door or entrance to the tabernacle; the veil that separated the holy place from the Holy of Holies is called the second veil, Heb. ix. 3. These two veils and the inner covering of the tabernacle were all of the same materials, and of the same workmanship.

1. While the reader is struck with the curious and costly nature of this building, as described by Moses, let him consider how pure and holy that church should be of which it was a very expressive type: and what manner of person he should be in all holy conversation and godliness, who professes to be a member of that church for which, it is written, Christ has given himself, that he might sanctify and cleanse it; that he might present it unto himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.

2. In the Jewish tabernacle almost every thing was placed out of the sight of the people. The holy of holies was inaccessible, the testimony was comparatively hidden, as were also the mercy-seat and the Divine Glory. Under the gospel all these things are laid open, the way to the holiest is made manifest, the veil is rent, and we have an entrance to the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; Heb. x. 19, 20. How abundantly has God brought life and immortality to light by the gospel! The awful distance is abolished, the ministry of reconciliation is proclaimed, the kingdom of heaven is opened to all believers, and the Lord is in his holy temple.

Gate of the court, its pillars, hangings, length, breadth, and height, 16-18. All the vessels used in the court of the tabernacle to be of brass, 19. The Israelites to provide pure olive oil for the light, 20. Every thing to be ordered by Aaron and his sons, 21.

AND thou shalt make <sup>a</sup>an altar of shittim wood, five cubits long, and five cubits broad: the altar shall be foursquare; and the height thereof shall be three cubits.

Verse 1. Foursquare] As this altar was five cubits long and five broad, and the cubit is reckoned to be twenty-one inches, hence it must have been eight feet nine inches square, and about five feet three inches in height, the amount of cubits, taken at the same ratio.

Verse 2. Thou shalt make the horns of it] The horns might have three uses: 1. For ornament. 2. to prevent carcases, &c., from falling off. 3. To tie the victim to, previously to its being sacrificed. So David: Bind the sacrifice with cords to the horns of the altar; Ps. cxviii. 27. Horns were much used in all ancient altars among the heathen, and some of them were entirely constructed of the horns of the beasts that had been offered in sacrifice; but such altars appear to be erected rather as trophies in honour of their gods. On the reverses of several medals we find altars represented with horns at the corners.

Verse 3. Thou shalt make his pans] Sirothain, a sort of large brazen dishes, which stood under the altar to receive the ashes that fell through the grating.

His shovels] Some render this besoms; but as these were ashes, and his shovels, and his basons, and his flesh-hooks, and his firepans: all the vessels thereof thou shalt make of brass.

4 And thou shalt make for it a grate of network of brass; and upon the net shalt thou make four brasen rings in the four corners thereof.

5 And thou shalt put it under the compass of the altar beneath, that the net may be even to the midst of the altar.

6 And thou shalt make staves for the altar, staves of shittim wood, and overlay them with brass.

7 And the staves shall be put into the rings, and the staves shall be upon the two sides of the altar, to bear it.

8 Hollow with boards shalt thou make it: *as <sup>b</sup>it was shewed thee in the mount, so shall they make it.

9 And *thou shalt make the court of the tabernacle: for the south side southward, there shall be hangings for the court of fine twined linen of an hundred cubits long for one side:

10 And the twenty pillars thereof and their twenty sockets shall be of brass; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets shall be of silver.

11 And likewise for the north side, in length there shall be hangings of an hundred cubits long, and his twenty pillars and their twenty sockets of brass; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver.

12 And for the breadth of the court on the west side shall be hangings of fifty cubits: their pillars ten, and their sockets ten.

13 And the breadth of the court on the east side eastward shall be fifty cubits.

14 The hangings of one side of the gate shall be fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their sockets three.

15 And on the other side shall be hangings fifteen cubits: their pillars three, and their sockets three.

16 And for the gate of the court shall be an hanging of twenty cubits, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, wrought with needlework: and their pillars shall be four, and their sockets four.

17 All the pillars round about the court shall be filleted with silver; their hooks shall be of silver, and their sockets of brass.

18 The length of the court shall be an hundred cubits, and the breadth <sup>d</sup>fifty every where, and the height five cubits of fine twined linen, and their sockets of brass.

19 All the vessels of the tabernacle in all the service thereof, and all the pins thereof, and all the pins of the court, shall be of brass.

20 And *thou shalt command the children of Israel, that they bring thee pure oil olive beaten for the light, to cause the lamp <sup>f</sup>to burn always, brazen instruments, it is more natural to suppose that some kind of fire-shovels are intended, or scuttles, which were used to carry off the ashes that fell through the grating into the large pan or siroth.

His basons] Mizrekothaiv, from zarak, to sprinkle or disperse; bowls or basons to receive the blood of the sacrifices, in order that it might be sprinkled on the people before the altar, &c.

His flesh-hooks] That this word is rightly translated flesh-hooks is fully evident from 1 Sam. ii. 13, where the same word is used in such a connexion as demonstrates its meaning. It was probably a kind of trident, or fork with three prongs, and these bent to a right angle at the middle, as the ideal meaning of the Hebrew seems to imply crookedness or curvature in general.

His fire pans] Bishop Patrick and others suppose that "this was a larger sort of vessel, wherein, probably, the sacred fire which came down from heaven (Lev. ix. 24) was kept burning, whilst they cleansed the altar and the grate from the coals and the ashes; and while the altar was carried from one place to another, as it often was in the wilderness."

Verse 4. Thou shalt make for it a grate] Calmot supposes this altar to have been a sort of box, covered with brass plates, on the top of which was a grating to supply the fire with air, and permit the ashes to fall through into the siroth or pan that was placed below. At the four corners of the grating were four rings and four chains, by which it was attached to the four horns; and at the sides were rings for the poles of shittim wood with which it was carried.

Verse 8. Hollow with boards] It seems to have been a kind of frame-work, and to have had nothing solid in the inside, and only covered with the grating at the top. This rendered it more light and portable.

Verse 9. The court of the tabernacle] The tabernacle stood in an inclosure or court, open at the top. This court was made with pillars or posts, and hangings. It was one hundred cubits, or about fifty-eight yards and a half, in length; the breadth we learn from verses 12 and 18; and five cubits, or nearly three yards, high, ver. 18. And as this was but half the height of the tabernacle, chap. xxvi. 16, that sacred building might easily be seen by the people from without.

Verse 16. And for the gate of the court] It appears that the hangings of this gate were of the same materials and workmanship with that of the inner covering of the tabernacle, and the outer and inner veil.

Verse 19. All the vessels—shall be of brass.] It would have been improper to have used instruments made of the more precious metals about this altar, as they must have been soon worn out by the severity of the service.

Verse 20. Pure oil olive beaten] That is, such oil as could easily be expressed from the olives after they had been bruised in a mortar; the mother drop, as it is called, which drops out of itself as soon as the olives are a little broken, and which is much purer than that which is obtained after the olives are put under the press.

To cause the lamp to burn always] They were to be kept burning through the whole of the night, and some think all the day besides; but there is a difference of sentiment upon this subject.

This oil and continual flame were not only emblematical of the unction and influences of the Holy Ghost, but also of that pure spirit of devotion which ever animates the hearts and minds of the genuine worshippers of the true God.

Verse 21. The tabernacle of the congregation] The place where all the assembly of the people were to worship, where the God of that assembly was pleased to reside, and to which as the habitation of their king and protector, they were ever to turn their faces in all their adorations.

Before the testimony] That is, the ark where the tables of the covenant were deposited.

Aaron and his sons] These and their descendants being the only legitimate priests, God having established the priesthood in this family.

It appears that the business of the priests was to light the lamps in the evening; and either to extinguish them in the morning, or permit them to burn out, having put in the night before as much oil as was necessary to last till daylight.

A statute for ever] This ordering of the lamps night and morning, and attendance on the service of the tabernacle, was a statute that was to be in full force while the tabernacle and temple stood, and should have its spiritual accomplishment in the Christian church to the end of time. The seven golden candlesticks were typical of this church and the glorious light it possesses: Rev. i. 12-20; and Jesus Christ, the Fountain and Dispenser of this true light, walks in the midst of them.

The two onyx stones, on which the names of the twelve tribes were to be engraven, 9-14. The breastplate of judgment; its twelve precious stones, engravings, rings, chains, and its use, 15-29. The Urim and Thummim, 30. The robe of the ephod, its borders, bells, pomegranates, &c., and their use, 31-35. The plate of pure gold and its motto, 36, to be placed on Aaron's mitre, 37, 38. The embroidered coat for Aaron, 39. Coats, girdles, and bonnets, 40. Aaron and his sons to be anointed for the priest's office, 41. Other articles of clothing and their use, 42, 43.

AND take thou unto thee * Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office, even Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar, Aaron's sons, * Num. xviii. 7. Eccles. xlv. 6. Heb. v. 1, 4.—Ch. xxix. 5, 29. xxxi. 10. xxxix. 1, 2. Lev. viii. 7, 30. Num. xx. 26, 28. Eccles.

Verse 1. Aaron—and his sons]. The priesthood was to be restrained to this family because the public worship was to be confined to one place; and previously to this the eldest in every family officiated as priest, there being no settled place of worship. It has been very properly observed that, if Moses had not acted by the divine appointment, he would not have passed by his own family, which continued in the condition of ordinary Levites, and established the priesthood, the only dignity in the nation, in the family of his brother Aaron.

Verse 2. For glory and for beauty.] Four articles of dress were prescribed for the priests in ordinary, and four more for the high priest. Those for the priests in general were a coat, drawers, a girdle, and a bonnet. Besides these the high-priest had a robe, an ephod, a breastplate, and a plate or diadem of gold on his forehead. The garments, says the sacred historian, were for honour and for beauty. They were emblematical of the office in which they ministered. 1. It was honourable. They were the ministers of the Most High, and employed by him in transacting the most important concerns between God and his people, concerns in which all the attributes of the Divine Being were interested, as well as those which referred to the present and eternal happiness of his creatures. 2. They were for beauty. They were emblematical of that holiness and purity which ever characterize the divine nature and the worship which is worthy of him, and which are essentially necessary to all those who wish to serve him in the beauty of holiness here below, and without which none can ever see his face in the realms of glory. Should not the garments of all those who minister in holy things still be emblematical of the things in which they minister? Is then the dismal black, now worn by almost all kinds of priests and ministers, for glory and for beauty? Is it emblematical of any thing that is good, glorious or excellent? How unbecoming the glad tidings announced by Christian ministers is a colour emblematical of nothing but mourning, and woe, sin, desolation, and death! The white surplice in the service of the church is almost the only thing that remains of those ancient and becoming vestments, which God commanded to be made for glory and beauty. Clothing, emblematical of office, is of more consequence than is generally imagined. Were the great officers of the crown, and the great officers of justice to clothe themselves like the common people when they appear in their public capacity, both their persons and decisions would be soon held in little estimation.

Verse 3. Whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom]. So we find that ingenuity in arts and sciences, even those of the ornamental kind, comes from God. It is not intimated here that these persons were filled with the spirit of wisdom for this purpose only; for the direction to Moses is, to select those whom he found to be expert artists, and those who were such, God shows by these words, had derived their knowledge from himself. Every man should be permitted as far as possible to follow the bent or direction of his own genius, when it evidently leads him to new inventions, and improvements on old plans. How much has both the labour of men and cattle been lessened by improvements in machinery! And can we say that the wisdom which found out these improvements did not come from God? No man, by course of reading or study, ever acquired a genius of this kind: we call it natural, and say it was born with the man. Moses teaches us to consider it as divine. Who taught NEWTON to ascertain the laws by which God governs the universe? No reading, no study, no example, formed his genius. God, who made him, gave him that compass and bent of mind by which he made those discoveries, and for which his name is celebrated in the earth. When I see NAPIER inventing the logarithms; COPERNICUS, DESCARTES and KEPLER contributing to pull down the false systems of the universe, and NEWTON demonstrating the true one; and when I see the long list of PATENTERS of useful inventions, by whose industry and skill long and tedious processes in the necessary arts of life have been shortened, labour greatly lessened, and much time and expense saved; I then see, with Moses, men who are wise-hearted, whom God has filled with the spirit of wisdom for these very purposes; that he might help man by man, and that as time rolls on, he might give to his intelligent creatures such proofs of his Being, infinitely varied wisdom, and gracious providence, as should cause them to depend on him, and give him that glory which is due to his name.

How pointedly does the prophet Isaiah refer to this sort of teaching as coming from God, even in the most common and less difficult arts of life! The whole passage is worthy of the reader's most serious attention. Isaiah xxviii. 24-29.

But let us take heed not to run into extremes here; machinery is to help man, not to render him useless. The human hand is the great and most perfect machine, let it not be laid aside. In our zeal for machinery we are rendering all the lower classes useless; filling the land with beggary and vice, and the workhouses with paupers; and ruining the husbandman with oppressive poor-rates. Keep machinery as a help to the human hand, and to lighten the labour, but never let it supersede either.

This principle, that God is the author of all arts and sciences, is too little regarded: Every good gift and every perfect gift, says St. James, comes from above, from the FATHER of LIGHTS. Why has God constructed every part of nature with such a profusion of economy and skill, if he intended this skill should never be discovered by man, or consecrate him, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

4 And these are the garments which they shall make; <sup>a</sup> a breastplate, and <sup>b</sup> an ephod, and <sup>c</sup> a robe, and <sup>d</sup> a brodered coat, a mitre, and a girdle: and they shall make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, and his sons, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

5 And they shall take gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen:

6 <sup>a</sup> And they shall make the ephod of gold, of blue, and of purple, of scarlet, and fine twined linen, with cunning work.

7 It shall have the two shoulder-pieces thereof joined at the two edges thereof; and so it shall be joined together.

8 And the <sup>a</sup> curious girdle of the ephod, which is upon it, shall be of the same, according to the work thereof; even of gold, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 And thou shalt take two onyx stones, and grave on them the names of the children of Israel:

10 Six of their names on one stone, and the other six names of the rest on the other stone, according to their birth.

that man should not attempt to examine his works in order to find them out? From the works of CREATION what proofs, astonishing and overwhelming proofs, both to believers and infidels, have been drawn both of the nature, being, attributes, and providence of God!

Verse 4. Robe] From alah, to go up, go upon; hence the meil may be considered as an upper coat, a surtout. It is described by Josephus, as a garment that reached down to the feet, not made of two distinct pieces, but was one entire long garment, woven throughout.

Brodered coat] This was immediately under the meil or robe, and answered the same purpose to the priests that our shirts do to us.

Mitre] As this word comes from the root tsanaph, to roll or wrap round, it evidently means that covering of the head so universal in the eastern countries which we call turban or turban, corrupted from the Persian doolband, which signifies what encompasses and binds the head or body; and hence is applied, not only to this covering of the head, but to a sash in general. The turban consists generally of two parts: the cap, which goes on the head; and the long sash of muslin, linen, or silk, that is wrapped round the head. These sashes are generally several yards in length.

Girdle] This seems to have been the same kind of sash or girdle, so common in the eastern countries, that confined the loose garments about the waist; and in which their long skirts were tucked up when they were employed in work, or on a journey. After being tied round the waist, the two ends of it fell down before, to the skirts of their robes.

Verse 8. The curious girdle of the ephod] The word chesheb, rendered here curious girdle, signifies merely a kind of diaper or embroidered work; and is widely different from abnet, which is properly translated girdle, ver. 4. The meaning therefore of the text, according to some, is this, that the two pieces, ver. 7, which connected the parts of the ephod at the shoulders where the onyx stones were set, should be of the same texture with the ephod itself, i.e. of gold, blue, purple, scarlet, and fine twined linen, embroidered together. But others suppose that some kind of a girdle is meant, different from the abnet, ver. 39, being only of plain workmanship.

Verse 11. Like the engravings of a signet] So signets or seals were in use at this time, and engraving on precious stones was then an art, and this art, which was one of the most elegant and ornamental, was carried in ancient times to such a pitch of perfection as has never been rivalled, and cannot now be even well imitated. And it is very likely that the Greeks borrowed this art from the ancient Hebrews, as 11 <sup>a</sup> With the work of an engraver in stone, like the engravings of a signet, shalt thou engrave the two stones with the names of the children of Israel: thou shalt make them to be set in ouches of gold.

12 And thou shalt put the two stones upon the shoulders of the ephod for stones of memorial unto the children of Israel: and <sup>b</sup> Aaron shall bear their names before the LORD, upon his two shoulders, <sup>c</sup> for a memorial.

13 And thou shalt make ouches of gold;

14 And two chains of pure gold at the ends; of wreathen work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the ouches.

15 And <sup>d</sup> thou shalt make the breastplate of judgment with cunning work; after the work of the ephod thou shalt make it; of gold, of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine twined linen, shalt thou make it.

16 Foursquare it shall be, being doubled; a span shall be the length thereof, and a span shall be the breadth thereof.

we know it flourished in Egypt and Palestine long before it was known in Greece.

Verse 12. Aaron shall bear their names before the Lord] He was to consider that he was the representative of the children of Israel; and the stones on the ephod and the stones on the breastplate were for a memorial, to put Aaron in remembrance that he was the priest and the mediator of the twelve tribes; and, speaking after the manner of men, God was to be put in mind of the children of Israel, their wants &c., as frequently as the high-priest appeared before him with the breastplate and the ephod.

Verse 13. Ouches of gold] Strait places, sockets to insert the stones in, from shabats, to close, inclose, straiten. Socket, in this place, would be a more proper translation, as ouch cannot be traced up to any legitimate authority. It appears sometimes to signify a hook, or some mode of attaching things together.

Verse 15. The breastplate of judgment] Here called the breastplate of judgment, because the high priest wore it upon his breast when he went to ask counsel of the Lord, to give judgment in any particular case; as also when he sat as judge to teach the law, and to determine controversies.

Verse 16. Foursquare it shall be] Here we have the exact dimensions of this breastplate, or more properly breast-piece or stomacher. It was a span in length and breadth when doubled, and consequently two spans long one way before it was doubled. Between those doublings, it is supposed, the Urim and Thummim were placed.

Verse 17. Four rows of stones] With a name on each stone, making in all the twelve names of the twelve tribes. These were disposed according to their birth, ver. 10.

As it is difficult to ascertain in every case what these precious stones were, it may be necessary to consider this subject more at large.

1. A SARDIUS, odem, from the root adam, he was ruddy; the ruby, a beautiful gem of a fine deep red colour. The sardius, or sardie stone, is defined to be a precious stone of a blood-red colour, the best of which come from Babylon.

2. A TOPAZ, pildah, a precious stone of a pale dead green, with a mixture of yellow, sometimes of a fine yellow; and hence it was called chrysolite by the ancients, from its gold colour. It is now considered by mineralogists as a variety of the sapphire.

3. A CARBUNCLE, bareketh, from barak, to lighten, glitter, or glister; a very elegant gem of a deep red colour, with an admixture of scarlet. From its bright lively colour it had the name carbunculus, which signifies a little coal; and among the Greeks anthrax, a coal, because when held before the 18 And the second row shall be an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond.

19 And the third row a figure, an agate, and an amethyst.

20 And the fourth row a beryl, and an onyx, and a jasper: they shall be set in gold in their 'inclosings.

21 And the stones shall be with the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet; every one with his name shall they be according to the twelve tribes.

22 And thou shalt make upon the breastplate chains at the ends of wreathen work, of pure gold, 23 And thou shalt make upon the breastplate <sup>b</sup> two rings of gold, and shalt put the two rings on the two ends of the breastplate.

24 And thou shalt put the two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings, which are on the ends of the breastplate.

25 And the other two ends of the two 'wreathen chains, thou shalt fasten in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces <sup>d</sup> of the ephod before it.

26 And thou shalt make two rings of gold, and thou shalt put them upon the two ends of the breastplate, in the border thereof, which is in the side of the ephod inward.

27 And two other rings of gold thou shalt make, and shalt put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the forepart thereof, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod.

28 And they shall bind the breastplate by the rings thereof, unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it may be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breastplate be not loosed from the ephod.

29 And Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel in the breastplate of judgment upon his heart, when he goeth in unto the holy place, <sup>e</sup> for a memorial before the Lord continually.

30 And 'thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart when he goeth in before the Lord: <sup>f</sup> and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the Lord continually.

sun it appears like a piece of bright burning charcoal. It is found only in the East Indies, and there but rarely.

4. EMERALD, nophech, the same with the ancient Smaragdus; it is one of the most beautiful of all the gems, and is of a bright green colour, without any other mixture.

5. SAPPHIRE, sappir. See this described, chap. xxiv. 10.

6. DIAMOND, yahalom, from halam, to beat or smite upon. The Diamond is supposed to have this name from its resistance to a blow, for the ancients have assured us that if it be struck with a hammer, upon an anvil, it will not break, but either break them or sink into the surface of that which is softest. This is a complete fable, as it is well known that the diamond can be easily broken, and is capable of being entirely volatilized or consumed by the action of fire. It is, however, the hardest, as it is the most valuable, of all the precious stones hitherto discovered, and one of the most combustible substances in nature.

7. FIGURE, leshem, the same as the jacinth or hyacinth; a precious stone of a dead, red or cinnamon colour, with a considerable mixture of yellow.

8. AGATE, shebo. This is a stone that assumes such a variety of hues and appearances, that Mr. Parkhurst thinks it derives its name from the root shab, to turn, to change. Agates are met with so variously figured in their substance, that they seem to represent the sky, the stars, clouds, earth, water, rocks, villages, fortifications, birds, trees, flowers, men, and animals of different kinds. Agates have a white, reddish, yellowish, or greenish ground. They are only varieties of the flint, and the lowest in value of all the precious stones.

9. AMETHYST, achlamah, a gem generally of a purple colour, composed of a strong blue and deep red. The oriental amethyst is sometimes of a dove colour, though some are purple, and others white like diamonds. The name amethyst is Greek, and it was so called because it was supposed that it prevented inebriation.

10. THE BERYL, tarshish. Mr. Parkhurst derives this name from tar, to go round, and shash, to be vivid or bright in colour. If the beryl be intended, it is a pellucid gem of a bluish green colour, found in the East Indies, and about the gold mines of Peru. But some of the most learned mineralogists and critics suppose the chrysolite to be meant. This is a gem of a yellowish green colour, and ranks at present amongst the topazes. Its name in Greek, chrysolite, literally signifies the golden stone.

11. THE ONYX, shoham. There are a great number of different sentiments on the meaning of the original; it has been translated beryl, emerald, prasiolite, sapphire, sardius, ruby, cornelian, onyx, and sardonyx. It is likely that the name may signify both the onyx and sardonyx. This latter stone is a mixture of the chalcodony and cornelian, sometimes in strata, at other times blended together, and is found striped with white and red strata or layers. It is generally allowed that there is no real difference, except in the degree of hardness, between the onyx, cornelian, chalcodony, sardonyx, and agate. It is well known that the onyx is of a darkish horny colour, resembling the hoof or nail, from which circumstance it has its name. It has often a plate of a bluish white or red in it, and when on one or both sides of this white there appears a plate of a reddish colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx.

12. JASPER, yashepheh. The similarity of the Hebrew name has determined most critics and mineralogists to adopt the jasper as intended by the original word. The jasper is usually defined a hard stone, of a beautiful bright green colour, sometimes clouded with white, and spotted with red or yellow. Mineralogists reckon not less than fifteen varieties of this stone. It can scarcely be called a precious stone; it is rather a dull opaque rock.

Verse 30. Thou shalt put in the breastplate—the Urim and the Thummim] What these were has, I believe, never yet been discovered. 1. They are nowhere described. 2. There is no direction given to Moses or any other how to make them. 3. Whatever they were, they do not appear to have been made on this occasion. 4. If they were the work of man at all, they must have been the articles in the ancient tabernacle, matters used by the patriarchs, and not here particularly described, because well known. 5. It is probable that nothing material is designed. 6. That God was often consulted by Urim and Thummim, is sufficiently evident from several scriptures; but how or in what manner he was thus consulted appears in none. 7. This mode of consultation, whatever it was, does not appear to have been in use from the consecration of Solomon's temple to the time of its destruction; and after its destruction it is never once mentioned. Hence the Jews say that the five following things, which were in the first temple, were wanting in the second: "1. The ark with the mercy-seat and cherubim; 2. The fire which came down from heaven; 3. The shechinah or divine presence; 4. The Holy Spirit, i.e. the gift of prophecy; and 5. The Urim and Thummim."

8. As the word urim signifies LIGHTS, and the word thummim PERFECTIONS, they were probably designed to point out the light—the abundant information in spiritual things afforded by the wonderful revelation which God made of himself by and under the Law; and the perfection—entire holiness and strict conformity to himself, which this dispensation required, and which are introduced and accomplished by that dispensation of light and truth, the GOSPEL, which was prefigured and pointed out by the law and its sacrifices, &c.; and in this light the subject has been viewed by the Vulgate, where the words are translated doctrina et veritas, doctrine and truth—a system of teaching proceeding from truth itself.

31 And * thou shalt make the robe of the ephod all of blue.

32 And there shall be an hole in the top of it, in the midst thereof: it shall have a binding of woven work round about the hole of it, as it were the hole of an habergeon, that it be not rent.

33 And beneath, upon the hem of it, thou shalt make pomegranates of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, round about the hem thereof; and bells of gold between them round about:

34 A golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, upon the hem of the robe round about.

35 And it shall be upon Aaron to minister: and his sound shall be heard when he goeth in unto the holy place before the LORD, and when he cometh out, that he die not.

36 And * thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it, like the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

The Septuagint translate the original by the manifestation and the truth; meaning probably the manifestation which God made of himself to Moses and the Israelites, and the truth which he had revealed to them, of which this breast-plate should be a continual memorial.

The manner in which the Jews suppose that the inquiry was made by Urim and Thummin is the following: "When they inquired the priest stood with his face before the ark, and he that inquired stood behind him with his face to the back of the priest: and the inquirer said, Shall I go up? or, Shall I not go up? And forthwith the Holy Ghost came upon the priest, and he beheld the breastplate, and saw therein by the vision of prophecy, Go up, or, Go not up, in the letters which showed forth themselves upon the breastplate before his face."

It was the letters that formed the names of the twelve tribes upon the breastplate, which the Jews suppose were used in a miraculous way to give answers to the inquirers.

Among the Egyptians, a breastplate something like that of the Jewish high-priest was worn by the president of the courts of Justice.

Verse 31. The robe of the ephod] From this description, and from what Josephus says, who must have been well acquainted with its form, we find that this neil, or robe, was one long straight piece of blue cloth, with a hole or opening in the centre for the head to pass through; which hole or opening was bound about, that it might not be rent in putting it on or taking it off, ver. 32.

Verse 35. His sound shall be heard] The bells were doubtless intended to keep up the people's attention to the very solemn and important office which the priest was then performing, that they might all have their hearts engaged in the work; and at the same time to keep Aaron himself in remembrance that he ministered before Jehovah, and should not come into his presence without due reverence.

That he die not.] This seems an allusion to certain ceremonies which still prevail in the eastern countries. Jehovah appeared among his people in the tabernacle as an emperor in his tent among his troops. At the doors of the tents or palaces of grandees was generally placed some sonorous body, either of metal or wood, which was struck to advertise those within that a person prayed for admittance to the presence of the king, &c. As the tabernacle had no door, but a veil, and consequently nothing to prevent any person from going in, Aaron was commanded to put the bells on his robe, that his sound might be heard when he went into the holy place before the Lord.

Aaron may 'bear the iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the LORD.

39 And thou shalt embroider the coat of fine linen, and thou shalt make the mitre of fine linen, and thou shalt make the girdle of needle-work.

40 And for Aaron's sons thou shalt make coats, and thou shalt make for them girdles, and bonnets shalt thou make for them, for glory and for beauty.

41 And thou shalt put them upon Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him; and shalt anoint them, and consecrate them, and sanctify them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office.

42 And thou shalt make them linen breeches to cover their nakedness; from the loins even unto the thighs they shall reach;

43 And they shall be upon Aaron, and upon his sons, when they come in unto the tabernacle of the congregation, or when they come near unto the altar, to minister in the holy place; that they bear not iniquity, and die: it shall be a statute for ever unto him, and his seed after him.

Verse 36. Thou shalt make a plate of pure gold] The word tsits, which we render plate, means a flower or any appearance of this kind. The Septuagint translate it by a leaf; hence we might be led to infer that this plate resembled a wreath of flowers or leaves; and as it is called, chap. xxix. 6, nezor, a crown, it was probably of the form of the radiated crown worn by the ancient Roman emperors, which was a gold band that went round the head from the vertex to the occiput; but the position of the Jewish sacerdotal crown was different, as that went round the forehead, under which there was a blue lace or fillet, ver. 37, which was probably attached to the mitre or turban, and formed its lowest part or border.

HOLINESS TO THE LORD.] This we may consider as the grand badge of the sacerdotal office. 1. The priest was to minister in holy things. 2. He was the representative of a holy God. 3. He was to offer sacrifices to make an atonement for and to put away sin. 4. He was to teach the people the way of righteousness and true holiness. 5. As mediator, he was to obtain for them those divine influences by which they should be made holy, and be prepared to dwell with holy spirits in the kingdom of glory. 6. In the sacerdotal office he was the type of that holy and just ONE who, in the fulness of time, was to come and put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

Verse 38. May bear the iniquity of the holy things] Aaron was, as the high-priest of the Jews, the type or representative of our blessed Redeemer; and as he offered the sacrifices prescribed by the law to make an atonement for sin, and was thereby represented as bearing their sins because he was bound to make an atonement for them; so Christ is represented as bearing their sins, i.e. the punishment due to the sins of the world, in his becoming a sacrifice for the human race. By the inscription on the plate on his forehead, Aaron was acknowledged as the holy minister of the holy God. To the people's services and their offerings much imperfection was attached, and therefore Aaron was represented, not only as making an atonement in general for the sins of the people by the sacrifices they brought, but also as making an atonement for the imperfection of the atonement itself, and the manner in which it was brought.

It shall be always upon his forehead] The plate inscribed with Holiness to the Lord should be always on his forehead, to teach that the law required holiness; that this was its aim, design, and end; and the same is required by the gospel; for under this dispensation it is expressly said, Without holiness no man shall see the Lord; Heb. xii. 14.

Verse 42. Linen breeches] This command had in view the necessity of purity and decency in every part of the divine worship, in opposition to the shocking indocency of the pagan worship in general, in which the priests often ministered naked, as in the sacrifices to Bacchus, &c.

On the garments of the high-priest some general reflections have already been made; see ver. 2: and to what is there said it may be just necessary to add, that there can be no doubt of their being all emblematical of spiritual things; but of which, and in what way, no man can positively say. These garments were all made for glory and for beauty, and this is the general account that it has pleased God to give of their nature and design; in a general sense, they represented, 1. The necessity of purity in every part of the divine worship; 2. The necessity of an atonement for sin; 3. The purity and justice of the Divine Majesty; and 4. The absolute necessity of that holiness without which none can see the Lord.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Ceremonies to be used in consecrating Aaron and his sons, 1-3. They are to be washed, 4. Aaron is to be clothed with the holy vestments, 5, 6; to be anointed, 7. His sons to be clothed and girded, 8, 9. They are to offer a bullock for a sin-offering, 10-14; and a ram for a burnt-offering, 15-18; and a second ram for a consecration-offering, 19-22. A loaf, a cake, and a wafer or thin cake, for a wave-offering, 23-25. The breast of the wave-offering and the shoulder of the heave-offering to be sanctified, 26-28. Aaron's vestments to descend to his son, who shall succeed him, 29, 30. Aaron and his sons to eat the flesh of the ram of consecration, 31, 32. No stranger to eat of it, 33. Nothing of it to be left till the morning, but to be burnt with fire, 34. Seven days to be employed in consecrating Aaron and his sons, 35-37. Two lambs, one for the morning and the other for the evening sacrifice, to be offered continually, 38-42. God promises to sanctify Israel with his glory, and to dwell among them, 43-46.

AND this is the thing that thou shalt do unto them to hallow them, to minister unto me in the priest's office: *Take one young bullock, and two rams without blemish,

2 And <sup>b</sup> unleavened bread, and cakes unleavened tempered with oil, and wafers unleavened anointed with oil; of wheaten flour shalt thou make them.

3 And thou shalt put them into one basket, and bring them in the basket, with the bullock and the two rams.

4 And Aaron and his sons thou shalt bring unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, * and shalt wash them with water.

5 <sup>d</sup> And thou shalt take the garments, and put upon Aaron the coat, and the robe of the ephod, and the ephod, and the breastplate, and gird him with * the curious girdle of the ephod:

6 <sup>e</sup> And thou shalt put the mitre upon his head, and put the holy crown upon the mitre.

7 Then shalt thou take the anointing * oil, and pour it upon his head, and anoint him.

8 And <sup>b</sup> thou shalt bring his sons, and put coats upon them.

9 And thou shalt gird them with girdles, Aaron and his sons, and <sup>1</sup> put the bonnets on them: and <sup>1</sup> the priest's office shall be theirs for a perpetual statute: and thou shalt <sup>2</sup> consecrate <sup>1</sup> Aaron and his sons.

Verse 1. Take one young bullock] This consecration did not take place till after the erection of the tabernacle.

Verse 2. Unleavened bread] Three kinds of bread as to its form are mentioned here, but all unleavened: 1. matsoth, unleavened bread, no matter in what shape; 2. challoth, cakes, pricked or perforated, as the root implies; 3. rekikey, an exceeding thin cake, from rak, to be extenuated, properly enough translated wafer. The manner in which these were prepared is sufficiently plain from the text, and probably these were the principal forms in which flour was prepared for household use during their stay in the wilderness. These were all waved before the Lord, ver. 24, as an acknowledgment that the bread that sustains the body, as well as the mercy which saves the soul, comes from God alone.

Verse 4. Thou—shalt wash them] *That was done emblematically, to signify that they were to put away all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, and perfect holiness in the fear of God; 2 Cor. vii. 1.

Verse 5. Thou shalt take the garments] As most offices of spiritual and secular dignity had appropriate habits and insignia, hence, when a person was appointed to an office and habited for the purpose, he was said to be invested with that office, from in, used intensively, and vestio, I clothe, because he was then clothed with the vestments peculiar to that office.

Verse 7. Then shalt thou take the anointing oil] It appears, from Isa. lxi. 1, that anointing with oil, in consecrating a person to any important office, whether civil or religious, was considered as an emblem of the communication of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. This ceremony was used on three occasions, viz., the installation of prophets, priests, and kings, into their respective offices. But why should such an anointing be deemed necessary? Because the common sense of men taught them that all good, whether spiritual or secular, must come from God, its origin and cause. Hence it was taken for granted, 1. That no man could foretell events unless inspired by the Spirit of God. And therefore the prophet was anointed, to signify the communication of the Spirit of wisdom and knowledge. 2. That no person could offer an acceptable sacrifice to God for the sins of men, or profitably minister in holy things, unless enlightened, influenced, and directed by the Spirit of grace and holiness. 3. That no man could enact just and equitable laws, which should have the prosperity of the community and the welfare of the individual continually in view, or could use the power confided to him only for the suppression of vice and the encouragement of virtue, but that man who was ever under the inspiration of the Almighty. Hence kings were inaugurated by anointing with oil. Two of these offices only exist in all civilized nations, the sacerdotal and regal; and in some countries the priest and king are still consecrated by anointing. In the Hebrew language mashach signifies to anoint, and mashiach, the anointed person. But as no man was ever dignified by holding the three offices, so no person ever had the title mashiach, the anointed one, but Jesus the Christ. He alone is King of kings and Lord of lords: the king who governs the universe, and rules in the hearts of his followers; the prophet, to instruct men in the 10 And thou shalt cause a bullock to be brought before the tabernacle of the congregation: and * Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the bullock.

11 And thou shalt kill the bullock before the LORD, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

12 And thou <sup>b</sup> shalt take of the blood of the bullock, and put it upon <sup>c</sup> the horns of the altar with thy finger, and pour all the blood beside the bottom of the altar.

13 And <sup>d</sup> thou shalt take all the fat that covereth the inwards, and * the caul that is above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and burn them upon the altar.

14 But <sup>e</sup> the flesh of the bullock, and his skin, and his dung, shalt thou burn with fire without the camp: it is a sin-offering.

15 * Thou shalt also take one ram; and Aaron and his sons shall <sup>h</sup> put their hands upon the head of the ram.

16 And thou shalt slay the ram, and thou shalt take his blood, and sprinkle it round about upon the altar.

17 And thou shalt cut the ram in pieces, and wash the inwards of him, and his legs, and put them unto his pieces, and <sup>i</sup> unto his head.

18 And thou shalt burn the whole ram upon the altar: it is a burnt-offering unto the LORD: it is a <sup>j</sup> sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

19 * And thou shalt take the other ram; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram:

20 Then shalt thou kill the ram, and take of his blood, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of Aaron, and upon the tip of the right ear of his sons, and upon the thumb of their right hand, and upon the great toe of their right foot, and sprinkle the blood upon the altar round about.

21 And thou shalt take of the blood that is upon the altar, and of <sup>k</sup> the anointing oil, and sprinkle it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon the garments of his sons with him: and <sup>m</sup> he shall be hallowed, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.

22 Also thou shalt take of the ram the fat and the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and the right shoulder; for it is a ram of consecration:

23 * And one loaf of bread, and one cake of oiled bread, and one wafer out of the basket of the unleavened bread, that is before the LORD:

24 And thou shalt put all in the hands of Aaron, and in the hands of his sons: and shalt <sup>n</sup> wave <sup>p</sup> them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

25 * And thou shalt receive them of their hands, and burn them upon the altar for a burnt-offering, for a sweet savour before the LORD: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

26 And thou shalt take <sup>q</sup> the breast of the ram of Aaron's consecration, and wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD: and <sup>r</sup> it shall be thy part.

27 And thou shalt sanctify <sup>s</sup> the breast of the wave-offering, and the shoulder of the heave-offering, which is waved, and which is heaved up, of the ram way wherein they should go; and the great high-priest, to make atonement for their sins. Hence he is called the Messias, a corruption of the word hammashiach, the anointed one, in Hebrew; which gave birth to ho Christos, which has precisely the same signification in Greek. Of him, Melchizedek, Abraham, Aaron, David, and others were illustrious types. But none of these had the title of THE MESSIAH, or THE ANOINTED OF GOD. This does, and ever will, belong exclusively to JESUS THE CHRIST.

Verse 10. Shall put their hands upon the head of the bullock.] By this rite the animal was consecrated to God, and was then proper to be offered in sacrifice. Imposition of hands also signified that they offered the life of this animal as an atonement for their sins, and to redeem their lives from that death which, through their sinfulness, they had deserved. In the case of the sin-offering and trespass-offering, the person who brought the sacrifice placed his hands on the head of the animal between the horns, and confessed his sin over the sin-offering, and his trespass over the trespass-offering, saying, "I have sinned, I have done iniquity; I have trespassed, and have done thus and thus: and do return by repentance before thee, and with this I make atonement." Then the animal was considered as vicariously bearing the sins of the person who brought it.

Verse 19. The other ram.] There were two rams brought on this occasion: one was for a burnt-offering, and was to be entirely consumed: the other was the ram of consecration, ver. 22, eil milluim, the ram of filling up, because when a person was dedicated or consecrated to God, his hands were filled with some particular offering proper for the occasion, which he presented to God. Hence the word consecration signifies the filling up or filling the hands, some part of the sacrifice being put into the hands of such persons, denoting thereby that they had now a right to offer sacrifices and oblations to God. The filling the hands refer also to the presents which, in the eastern countries, every inferior was obliged to bring when brought into the presence of a superior. Thus the sacrifice was considered, not only as an atonement for sin, but also as a means of approach and as a present to Jehovah.

Verse 20. Take of his blood.] The putting the blood of the sacrifice on the tip of the right ear, the thumb of the right hand, and the great toe of the right foot, was doubtless intended to signify that they should dedicate all their faculties and powers to the service of God; their ears to the hearing and study of his law, their hands to diligence in the sacred ministry and to all acts of obedience, and their feet to walking in the way of God's precepts. And this sprinkling appears to have been used to teach them that they could neither hear, work, nor walk profitably, uprightly and well-pleasing in the sight of God, without this application of the blood of the sacrifice.

Verse 22. The fat and the rump.] The rump or tail of some of the eastern sheep is the best part of the animal, and is counted a great delicacy.

Verse 23. And one loaf of bread.] The bread of different kinds in this offering, seems to have been intended as a minchah, or offering of grateful acknowledgment for providential blessings. The essence of worship consisted in acknowledging God, 1. As the Creator, Governor, and Preserver of all things, and the Dispenser of every good and perfect gift. 2. As the Judge of men, the Punisher of sin, and he who alone could pardon it. The minchahs, heave-offerings, wave-offerings, and thank-offerings, referred to the first point. The burnt-offerings, sin-offerings, and sacrifices in general, referred to the second.

Verse 25. Thou shalt receive them of their hands.] Aaron and his sons are here considered merely as any common persons bringing an offering to God, and not having, as yet, any authority to present it themselves but through the medium of a priest. Moses, therefore, was now to Aaron and his sons what they were afterwards to the children of Israel; and as the minister of God he now consecrates them to the sacred office, and presents their offerings to Jehovah.

Verse 27. The breast of the wave-offering, and the shoulder of the heave-offering.] As the wave-offering was agitated to 28 And it shall be Aaron's and his sons' *by a statute for ever from the children of Israel: for it is an heave-offering: and <sup>b</sup> it shall be an heave-offering from the children of Israel, of the sacrifice of their peace-offerings, even their heave-offering unto the LORD.

29 And the holy garments of Aaron *shall be his sons' after him, <sup>a</sup> to be anointed therein, and to be consecrated in them.

and fro, and the heave-offering up and down, some have conceived that this twofold action represented the figure of the cross, on which the great Peace-offering between God and man was offered in the personal sacrifice of our blessed Redeemer.

It is worthy of remark, that although Moses himself had no consecration to the sacerdotal office, yet he acts here as high-priest, consecrates a high-priest, and receives the breast and the shoulder, which were the priests' portion! But Moses was an extraordinary messenger, and derived his authority, without the medium of rites or ceremonies, immediately from God himself. It does not appear that Christ either baptized the twelve apostles, or ordained them by imposition of hands; yet, from his own infinite sufficiency, he gave them authority both to baptize, and to lay on hands, in appointing others to the work of the sacred ministry.

Verse 29. The holy garments—shall be his sons' after him] These garments were to be descended from father to son, and no new garments were to be made.

Verse 30. Seven days] The priest in his consecration was to abide seven days and nights at the door of the tabernacle, keeping the Lord's watch. See Lev. viii. 33, &c. The number seven is what is called among the Hebrews a number of perfection; and it is often used to denote the completion, accomplishment, fulness, or perfection of a thing, as this period contained the whole course of that time in which God created the world, and appointed the day of rest. As this act of consecration lasted seven days, it signified a perfect consecration; and intimated to the priest that his whole body and soul, his time and talents, should be devoted to the service of God and his people.

Verse 33. But a stranger shall not eat thereof] That is, no person who was not of the family of Aaron—no Israelite, and not even a Levite.

Verse 34. Burn the remainder with fire] Common, voluntary, and peace-offerings might be eaten even on the second day; see Lev. vii. 16, xix. 5, 6. But this being a peculiar consecration, in order to qualify a person to offer sacrifices for sin, like that great sacrifice, the paschal lamb, that typified the atonement made by Christ, none of it was to be left till the morning, lest putrefaction should commence, which would be utterly improper in a sacrifice that was to make expiation for sin, and bring the soul into a state of holiness and perfection with God.

Verso 36. Thou shalt cleanse the altar] The altar was to be sanctified for seven days: and it is likely that on each day, previously to the consecration service, the altar was wiped clean, and the former day's ashes, &c., removed.

Verse 37. Whatsoever toucheth the altar shall be holy] To this our Lord refers, Matt. xxiii. 19, where he says the altar sanctifies the gift; and this may be understood as implying that whatever was laid on the altar became the Lord's property, and must be wholly devoted to sacred uses, for in no other sense could such things be sanctified by touching the altar.

Verse 39. One lamb thou shalt offer in the morning] These two lambs, one in the morning, and the other in the evening, were generally termed the morning and evening daily sacrifices, and were offered from the time of their settlement in the promised land to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. The use of these sacrifices according to the Jews was this: "The morning sacrifice made atonement for the sins committed in the night, and the evening sacrifice expiated the sins committed during the day."

Verse 40. A tenth deal of flour] Deal signifies a part. From Num. xxviii. 5, we learn that this tenth deal was the tenth part of an ephah, which constituted what is called an omer. The omer contained about three quarts English.

The fourth part of an hin] The hin contained one gallon and two pints. The fourth part of this was about one quart and a half of a pint.

Drink-offering] A libation poured out before the Lord. Verse 44. I will sanctify—both Aaron and his sons] So we find the sanctification by Moses according to the divine institution was only symbolical; and that Aaron and his sons must be sanctified, i.e. made holy, by God himself before they could officiate in holy things. From this, as well as from many other things mentioned in the sacred writings, we may safely infer that no designation by man only is sufficient to qualify any person to fill the office of a minister of the sanctuary. The approbation and consecration of man have both their propriety and use, but must never be made substitutes for the unction and inspiration of the Almighty. Let holy men ordain, but let God sanctify; then we may expect that this church shall be built up on its most holy faith.

Verse 45. I will dwell among the children of Israel] This is the great charter of the people of God, both under the Old and New Testaments; see chap. xxv. 8; Lev. xxvi. 11, 12; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Rev. xxi. 3. God dwells AMONG them: he is ever to be found in his church, to enlighten, quicken, comfort, and support it; to dispense the light of life by the preaching of his word and the influences of his Spirit for the conviction and conversion of sinners. And he dwells IN those who believe; and this is the very tenour of the New Covenant which God promised to make with the house of Israel. And because God had promised to dwell in all his genuine followers, hence the frequent reference to this covenant and its privileges in the New Testament. And hence it is so frequently and strongly asserted that every believer is a habitation of God through the Spirit, Eph. ii. 22. That the spirit of God witnesses with their spirits that they are the children of God, Rom. viii. 16. That the Spirit of Christ in their hearts enables them to call God their Father, their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them: I am the LORD their God.

xiv. 17, 23. 2 Cor. vi. 16. Rev. xxi. 3.—b Ch. xx. 2.

Gal. iv. 6. And that if any man have not this Spirit, he is none of his, Rom. viii. 9, &c. And hence St. Paul states this to be the sum and substance of apostolic preaching, viz., Christ in you the hope of glory.

Verse 46. And they shall know that I am the Lord their God] That is, They shall acknowledge God, and their infinite obligations to him. In a multitude of places in scripture the word know should be thus understood.

That I may dwell among them] For without this acknowledgment and consequent dependence on and gratitude and obedience to God, they could not expect him to dwell among them.

By dwelling among the people God shows that he would be a continual resident in their houses and their hearts; that he would be their God—the sole object of their religious worship, to whom they should turn, and on whom they should trust in all difficulties and distresses; and that he would be to them all that the Creator could be to his creatures. That in consequence they should have a full conviction of his presence and blessing, and a consciousness that HE was their God, and that they were his people. Thus then God dwells among men that they may know him; and they must know him that he may continue to dwell among them. He who does not experimentally know God, cannot have him as an indwelling Saviour; and he who does not continue to know—to acknowledge, love, and obey him, cannot retain him as his Preserver and Sanctifier. From the beginning of the world the salvation of the souls of men necessarily implied the indwelling influences of God.

*The altar of burnt incense, 1. Dimensions, 2. Golden crown, 3. Rings and staves, 4, 5. Where placed, 6, 7. Use, 8-10. The ransom price of half a shekel, 11-13. Who were to pay it, 14. AND thou shalt make *an altar <sup>b</sup>to burn incense upon; of shittim wood shalt thou make it.

2 A cubit shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof; foursquare shall it be: and two cubits shall be the height thereof: the horns thereof shall be of the same.

3 And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, the top thereof, and the sides thereof round about, and the horns thereof; and thou shalt make unto it a crown of gold round about.

Verse 1. Shittim wood] The same of which the preceding articles were made, because it was abundant in those parts, and because it was very durable; hence every where the Septuagint translation, which was made in Egypt, renders the original by incorruptible wood.

Verse 2. Foursquare] That is, on the upper or under surface, as it showed four equal sides; but it was twice as high as it was broad, being twenty-one inches broad, and three feet six inches high. It was called, not only the altar of incense, but also the golden altar, Num. iv. 11.

4 And two golden rings shalt thou make to it under the crown of it, by the two corners thereof upon the two sides of it shalt thou make it; and they shall be for places for the staves to bear it withal.

5 And thou shalt make the staves of shittim wood, and overlay them with gold.

6 And thou shalt put it before the veil that is by the ark of the testimony, before the mercy-seat that is over the testimony, where I will meet with thee.

viii. 3.—c Heb. roof.—d Heb. walls.—e Heb. ribs.—f Ch. xxv. 21, 22.

Verse 6. Before the mercy-seat that is over the testimony] These words in the original are supposed to be a repetition, by mistake, of the preceding clause; the word happaroeth, the veil, being corrupted by interchanging two letters into haccapporeth, the mercy-seat; and this places the altar of incense before the mercy-seat, and consequently IN the Holy of Holies! Now this could not be, as the altar of incense was attended every day, and the Holy of Holies entered only once in the year. The five words which appear to be a repetition are wanting in twenty-six of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and in the Samaritan. The verso reads better without them, and is more consistent with the rest of the account.

Verse 7. When he dresseth the lamps] Prepares the wicks, and puts in fresh oil for the evening.

Shall burn incense upon it.] Where so many sacrifices were offered it was essentially necessary to have some pleasing perfume to counteract the disagreeable smells that must have arisen from the slaughter of so many animals, the sprinkling of so much blood, and the burning of so much flesh, &c. The perfume that was to be burnt on this altar is described ver. 34. No blood was ever sprinkled on this altar, except on the day of general expiation, which happened only once in the year, ver. 10. But the perfume was necessary in every part of the tabernacle and its environs.

Verse 9. No strange incense] None made in any other way.

Nor burnt sacrifice] It should be an altar for incense, and for no other use.

Verse 10. An atonement—once in a year] On the tenth day of the seventh month.

Verse 12. Then shall they give every man a ransom for his soul] This was a very important ordinance, and should be seriously considered.

Verse 13. Half a shekel] Each of the Israelites was ordered to give as a ransom for his soul (i.e. for his life) half a shekel, according to the shekel of the sanctuary. From this we may learn, 1. That the life of every man was considered as being forfeited to divine justice. 2. That the redemption money given, which was doubtless used in the service of the sanctuary, was ultimately devoted to the use and profit of those who gave it. 3. That the standard by which the value of coin was ascertained, was kept in the sanctuary; for this appears to be the meaning of the words, after the shekel of the sanctuary. 4. The shekel is generally considered to be equal in value to three shillings English; the redemption money, therefore, must be about one shilling and sixpence. 5. The rich were not to give more, the poor not to give less; to signify that all souls were equally precious in the sight of God, and that no difference of outward circumstances could affect the state of the soul; all had sinned, and all must be redeemed by the same price.

15 The <sup>p</sup> rich shall not <sup>q</sup> give more, and the poor shall not <sup>r</sup> give less than half a shekel, when they give an offering unto the LORD, to make an <sup>s</sup> atonement for your souls.

16 And thou shalt take the atonement money of the children of Israel, and <sup>t</sup> shalt appoint it for the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; that it may be <sup>u</sup> a memorial unto the children of Israel before the LORD, to make an atonement for your souls.

17 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 <sup>v</sup> Thou shalt also make a laver of brass, and his foot <sup>w</sup> also of brass, to wash <sup>x</sup> withal: and thou shalt <sup>y</sup> put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shalt put water therein.

19 For Aaron and his sons <sup>z</sup> shall wash their hands and their feet thereat:

20 When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation, they shall wash with water, that they die not; or when they come near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the LORD.

21 So they shall wash their hands and their feet, that they die not: and <sup>aa</sup> it shall be a statute for ever to them, <sup>ab</sup> even to him and to his seed throughout their generations.

22 Moreover the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Take thou also unto thee <sup>ac</sup> principal spices, of pure <sup>ad</sup> myrrh five hundred shekels, and of sweet

6. This atonement must be made that there might be no plague among them, intimating that a plague or curse from God must light on those souls for whom the atonement was not made. 7. This was to be a memorial unto the children of Israel, ver. 16, to bring to their remembrance their past deliverance, and to keep in view their future redemption. 8. St. Peter seems to allude to this, and to intimate that this mode of atonement was ineffectual in itself, and only pointed out the great sacrifice which, in the fulness of time, should be made for the sin of the world. 9. Therefore all these things seem to refer to Christ alone, and to the atonement made by his blood; and upon him who is not interested in this atonement, God's plagues must be expected to fall.

Verse 18. A laver of brass] Kiyor sometimes signifies a caldron, 1 Sam. ii. 14; but it seems to signify any large round vessel or basin used for washing the hands and feet. There were doubtless cocks or spigots in it to draw off the water, as it is not likely the feet were put into it in order to be washed. The foot of the laver must mean the pedestal on which it stood.

Verse 20. They shall wash with water, that they die not] This was certainly an emblematical washing; and as the hands and the feet are particularly mentioned, it must refer to the purity of their whole conduct. Their hands—all their works, their feet—all their goings, must be washed—must be holiness unto the Lord. And this washing must be repeated every time they entered into the tabernacle, or when they came near to the altar to minister. This washing was needful because the priests all ministered barefoot; but it was equally so because of the guilt they might have contracted, for the washing was emblematical of the putting away of sin, or what St. Paul calls the laver of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost (Tit. iii. 5), as the influences of the Spirit must be repeated for the purification of the soul, as frequently as any moral defilement has been contracted.

Verse 21. And it shall be a statute for ever] To continue, in its literal meaning, as long as the Jewish economy lasted, and, in its spiritual meaning, to the end of time. What an important lesson does this teach the ministers of the gospel of Christ! Each time they minister in public, whether in cinnamon half so much, even two hundred and fifty shekels, and of sweet <sup>a</sup>calamus two hundred and fifty shekels,

24 And of <sup>b</sup>cassia five hundred shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, and of oil olive an <sup>c</sup>hin :

25 And thou shalt make it an oil of holy ointment, an ointment compound after the art of the <sup>d</sup>apothecary : it shall be <sup>e</sup>an holy anointing oil.

26 <sup>f</sup>And thou shalt anoint the tabernacle of the congregation therewith, and the ark of the testimony.

27 And the table and all his vessels, and the candlestick and his vessels, and the altar of incense, 28 And the altar of burnt-offering with all his vessels, and the laver and his foot.

29 And thou shalt sanctify them, that they may be most holy : <sup>g</sup>whatsoever toucheth them shall be holy.

30 <sup>h</sup>And thou shalt anoint Aaron and his sons, and consecrate them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office.

31 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, This shall be an holy anointing oil unto me throughout your generations.

dispensing the word or the sacraments, they should take heed that they have a fresh application of the grace and spirit of Christ, to make their ministrations spirit and life to the people.

Verse 23. Take—unto thee principal spices] Myrrh is the produce of an oriental tree not well known, and is collected by making an incision in the tree. Olive oil is supposed to be the best preservative of odours. As the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit are termed the anointing of the Holy Ghost, therefore this holy ointment appears to have been designed as emblematical of those gifts and graces.

Verse 25. After the art of the apothecary] The original rokeach, signifies a compounder or confectioner ; any person who compounds drugs, aromatics, &c.

Verse 30. Thou shalt anoint Aaron and his sons] It seems that this anointing oil was an emblem of divine teaching, and especially of those influences by which the church of Christ was, in the beginning, guided into all truth ; as is evident from the allusion to it by St. John : “ Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things.”

Verse 34. Take unto thee sweet spices] The holy perfume was compounded of the following ingredients :

Stacte] Nataph, supposed to be the same with what was afterwards called the balm of Jericho. Stacte is the gum which spontaneously flows from the tree which produces myrrh.

Onycha] Shecheleth, allowed by the best critics to be the unguis odoriferans, which is the external crust of the shell-fish purpura or murex, and is the basis of the principal perfumes made in the East Indies.

Galbanum] Chelbenah, the buhon gummiferum or African ferula ; it rises with a ligneous stalk from eight to ten feet, and is garnished with leaves at each joint. The top of the stalk is terminated by an umbel of yellow flowers, which are succeeded by oblong channelled seeds, which have a thin membrane or wing on their border. When any part of the plant is broken, there issues out a little thin milk of a cream colour. The gummy resinous juice which proceeds from this plant is what is commonly called galbanum, from the chelbenah of the Hebrews.

32 Upon man's flesh shall it not be poured, neither shall ye make any other like it, after the composition of it : <sup>a</sup>it is holy, and it shall be holy unto you.

33 <sup>b</sup>Whosoever compoundeth any like it, or whosoever putteth any of it upon a stranger, <sup>c</sup>shall even be cut off from his people.

34 And the Lord said unto Moses, <sup>d</sup>Take unto thee sweet spices, stacte, and onycha, and galbanum ; these sweet spices with pure frankincense : of each shall there be a like weight :

35 And thou shalt make it a perfume, a confection <sup>e</sup>after the art of the apothecary, <sup>f</sup>tempered together, pure and holy :

36 And thou shalt beat some of it very small, and put of it before the testimony in the tabernacle of the congregation, <sup>g</sup>where I will meet with thee : <sup>h</sup>it shall be unto you most holy.

37 And as for the perfume which thou shalt make, <sup>i</sup>ye shall not make to yourselves according to the composition thereof : it shall be unto thee holy for the Lord.

38 <sup>j</sup>Whosoever shall make like unto that, to smell thereto, shall even be cut off from his people.

14. Ch. xii. 15. Lev. vii. 20, 21.—<sup>1</sup> Ch. xxv. 6. xxxvii. 29.—<sup>2</sup> Ver. 25.—<sup>3</sup> Heb. salled. Lev. ii. 13.—<sup>4</sup> Ch. xxix. 42. Lev. xvi. 2.—<sup>5</sup> Ver. 32. Ch. xxix. 37. Lev. ii. 3.—<sup>6</sup> Ver. 32.—<sup>7</sup> Ver. 33.

Pure frankincense] Frankincense is supposed to derive its name from frank, free, because of its liberal or ready distribution of its odours. It is a dry resinous substance, in pieces or drops of a pale yellowish white colour, has a strong smell, and bitter acrid taste. The tree which produces it is not well known.

The Israelites were most strictly prohibited, on the most awful penalties, from making any anointing oil or perfume similar to those described in this chapter. He that should compound such, or apply any of this to any common purpose, even to smell to, verse 38, should be cut off, that is, excommunicated from his people, and so lose all right, title, and interest in the promises of God and the redemption of Israel. From all this we may learn how careful the Divine Being is to preserve his own worship and his own truth, so as to prevent them from being adulterated by human inventions ; for he will save men in his own way, and upon his own terms. What are called human inventions, in matters of religion, are not only of no worth, but are in general deceptive and ruinous. Arts and sciences in a certain way may be called inventions of men, for the spirit of a man knoweth the things of a man—can comprehend, plan, and execute, under the general influence of God, every thing in which human life is immediately concerned ; but religion, as it is the gift, so it is the invention of God : its doctrines and its ceremonies proceed from his wisdom and goodness, for He alone could devise the plan by which the human race may be restored to his favour and image, and taught to worship him in spirit and in truth. And that worship which himself has prescribed, we may rest assured, will be most pleasing in his sight. Nadab and Abihu offered strange fire before the Lord ; and their destruction by the fire of Jehovah is recorded as a lasting warning to all presumptuous worshippers, and to all who attempt to model his religion according to their own caprice, and to minister in sacred things without that authority which proceeds from himself alone. The imposition of hands, whether of pope, cardinal, or bishop, can avail nothing here. The call and unction of God alone can qualify the minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Bezaleel appointed for the work of the tabernacle, 1-5. Aholiab appointed for the same, 6. The particular things on which they were to be employed, the ark and mercy-seat, 7. Table, candlestick, and altar of incense, 8. Altar of burnt-offering and the laver, 9. Priest's garments, 10. Anointing oil and sweet incense, 11. God renews the command relative to the sanctification of the sabbath, 12-17. Delivers to Moses the two tables of stone, 18.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 * See, I have called by name Bezaleel the <sup>b</sup> son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah :

3 And I have <sup>c</sup> filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship,

4 To devise cunning works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass,

5 And in cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of timber, to work in all manner of workmanship.

6 And I, behold, I have given with him <sup>d</sup> Aholiab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan : and in the hearts of all that are <sup>e</sup> wise-hearted I have put wisdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee ;

7 * The tabernacle of the congregation, and <sup>g</sup> the ark of the testimony, and <sup>h</sup> the mercy-seat that is thereupon, and all the <sup>i</sup> furniture of the tabernacle,

8 And <sup>j</sup> the table and his furniture, and <sup>k</sup> the pure candlestick with all his furniture, and the altar of incense ;

9 And <sup>l</sup> the altar of burnt-offering with all his furniture, and <sup>m</sup> the laver and his foot,

10 And <sup>n</sup> the cloths of service, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office ;

Verse 2. I have called by name Bezaleel] That is, I have particularly appointed this person to be the chief superintendent of the whole work. His name is significant, betsal-el, in or under the shadow of God, meaning, under the especial protection of the Most High. He was the son of Uri, the son of Hur, the son of Caleb or Chelubai, the son of Esron, the son of Pharez, the son of Judah.

Verse 3. In wisdom] Chochmah, from chacham, to be wise, skilful, or prudent, denoting the compass of mind and strength of capacity necessary to form a wise man.

Understanding] Tebunah, from ban or bun, to separate, distinguish, discern ; capacity to comprehend the different parts of a work, how to connect, arrange, &c., in order to make a complete whole.

Knowledge] Doath, denoting particular acquaintance with a person or thing ; practical, experimental knowledge.

Verse 4. Cunning works] Machashaboth, works of invention or genius, in the goldsmith and silversmith line.

Verse 5. In cutting of stones, &c.] Everything that concerned the lapidary's, jeweller's, and carver's art.

Verse 6. In the hearts of all that are wise-hearted I have put wisdom] So every man that had a natural genius, as we term it, had an increase of wisdom by immediate inspiration from God, so that he knew how to execute the different works which divine wisdom designed for the tabernacle and its furniture. Dark as were the heathens, yet they acknowledged that all talents, and the seeds of all arts, came from God.

There is something remarkable in the name of this second superintendent, Aholiab, the tabernacle of the father, or the father is my tabernacle ; a name nearly similar in its meaning to that of Bezaleel.

11 * And the anointing oil, and <sup>p</sup> sweet incense for the holy place : according to all that I have commanded thee, shall they do.

12 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

13 Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, * Verily my sabbaths ye shall keep : for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations ; that ye may know that I am the LORD that doth sanctify you.

14 * Ye shall keep the sabbath therefore ; for it is holy unto you : every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death : for <sup>q</sup> whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

15 * Six days may work be done ; but in the <sup>r</sup> seventh is the sabbath of rest, <sup>s</sup> holy to the LORD : whosoever doeth any work in the sabbath, he shall surely be put to death.

16 Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant.

17 It is a <sup>t</sup> sign between me and the children of Israel for ever : for <sup>u</sup> in six days the LORD made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed.

18 And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon Mount Sinai, <sup>v</sup> two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God.

Deut. iv. 13. v. 22. ix. 10, 11. 2 Cor. iii. 3.

Verse 8. The pure candlestick] Called so, either because of the pure gold of which it was made, or the brightness and splendour of its workmanship, or of the light which it imparted in the tabernacle, as the purest, finest oil was always burnt in it.

Verse 9. The laver and his foot] The pedestal on which it stood.

Verse 10. Cloths of service] Vestments for the ordinary work of their ministry ; the holy garments—those which were peculiar to the high-priest.

Verse 14. Every one that defileth it] By any kind of idolatrous or profane worship.

Shall surely be put to death] The magistrates shall examine into the business, and if the accused be found guilty, he shall be stoned to death.

Shall be cut off] Because that person who could so far contemn the sabbath, which was a sign to them of the rest which remained for the people of God, was of course an infidel, and should be cut off from all the privileges and expectations of an Israelite.

Verse 16. A perpetual covenant] Because it is a sign of this future rest and blessedness, therefore the religious observance of it must be perpetually kept up. The type must continue in force till the antitype come.

Verse 17. Rested, and was refreshed] God, in condescension to human weakness, applies to himself here what belongs to man. If a man religiously rests on the sabbath, both his body and soul shall be refreshed ; he shall acquire new light and life.

Verse 18. When he had made an end of communing] When the forty days and forty nights were ended.

Tables of stone] That the record might be lasting, because it was a testimony that referred to future generations, and therefore the materials should be durable.

It is evident that this writing was properly and literally the writing of God himself. God wrote now on tables of stone what he had originally written on the heart of man, and in mercy he placed that before his eyes which by sin had been obliterated from his soul; and by this he shows us what, by the Spirit of Christ, must be re-written in the mind, 2 Cor. iii. 8; and this is according to the covenant which God long before promised to make with mankind, Jer. xxxi. 33.

CHAPTER XXXII.

The Israelites, finding that Moses delayed his return, desire Aaron to make them gods to go before them, 1. Aaron consents, and requires their ornaments, 2. They deliver them to him, and he makes a molten calf, 3, 4. He builds an altar before it, 5; and the people offer burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, 6. The Lord commands Moses to go down, telling him that the people had corrupted themselves, 7, 8. The Lord is angry, and threatens to destroy them, 9, 10. Moses intercedes for them, 11-13. And the Lord promises to spare them, 14. Moses goes down with the tables in his hands, 15-16. Joshua, hearing the noise they made in their festival, makes some remarks on it, 17, 18. Moses, coming to the camp, and seeing their idolatrous worship, is greatly distressed, throws down, and breaks the two tables, 19. Takes the calf, reduces it to powder, strews it upon the water, and causes them to drink it, 20. Moses expostulates with Aaron, 21. Aaron vindicates himself, 22-24. Moses orders the Levites to slay the transgressors, 25-27. They do so, and 3000 fall, 28, 29. Moses returns to the Lord on the mount, and makes supplication for the people, 30-32. God threatens and yet spares, 33. Commands Moses to lead the people, and promises him the direction of an angel, 34. The people are plagued because of their sin, 35.

AND when the people saw that Moses <sup>a</sup>delayed to come down out of the mount, the people gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him, <sup>b</sup>Up, make us gods, which shall <sup>c</sup>go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

2 And Aaron said unto them, Break off the <sup>d</sup>golden ear-rings, which are in the ears of your wives, of your sons, and of your daughters, and bring them unto me.

3 And all the people brake off the golden earrings which were in their ears, and brought them unto Aaron.

4 <sup>e</sup>And he received them at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf; and they said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

5 And when Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it; and Aaron made <sup>f</sup>proclamation, and said, To-morrow is a feast to the LORD.

Acts vii. 41. Rom. i. 23.—<sup>f</sup> Lev. xxiii. 2, 4, 21, 37. 2 Kings x. 20. 2 Chron. xxx. 6.

Verse 1. When the people saw that Moses delayed] How long this was before the expiration of the forty days, we cannot tell; but it certainly must have been some considerable time, as the ornaments must be collected, and the calf or ox, after having been founded, must require a considerable time to fashion it with the graving tool; and certainly not more than two or three persons could work on it at once. This work, therefore, must have required several days.

The people gathered themselves together] They came in a tumultuous and seditious manner, insisting on having an object of religious worship made for them, as they intended under its direction to return to Egypt.

As for this Moses, the man that brought us up] This seems to be the language of great contempt, and by it we may see the truth of the character given them by Aaron, verse 22, they were set on mischief. It is likely they might have supposed that Moses had perished in the fire, which they saw had invested the top of the mountain into which he went.

Verse 2. Golden ear-rings] Both men and women wore these ornaments, and we may suppose that these were a part of the spoils which they brought out of Egypt. How strange, that the very things which were granted them by an especial influence and providence of God, should be now abused to the basest idolatrous purposes! But it is frequently the case that the gifts of God become desecrated by being employed in the service of sin; I will curse your blessings, saith the Lord, Mal. ii. 2.

Verse 3. And all the people brake off the golden ear-rings] The human being is naturally fond of dress, though this has been improperly attributed to the female sex alone, and those are most fond of it who have the shallowest capacities; but on this occasion the bent of the people to idolatry was greater than even their love of dress, so that they readily stripped themselves of their ornaments in order to get a molten god.

Verse 4. Fashioned it with a graving tool] There has been much controversy about the meaning of the word cheret, in the text; some make it a mould, others a garment, cloth, or apron; some a purse, or bag, and others a graver. It is likely that some mould was made on this occasion, that the gold when fused was cast into it, and that afterwards it was brought into form and symmetry by the action of the chisel and graver.

These be thy gods, O Israel] The whole of this is a most strange and unaccountable transaction. Was it possible that the people could have so soon lost sight of the wonderful manifestations of God upon the mount? Was it possible that Aaron could have imagined that he could make any god that could help them? And yet it does not appear that he ever remonstrated with the people! Possibly he only intended to make them some symbolical representation of the divine power and energy, that might be as evident to them as the pillar of cloud and fire had been, and to which God might attach an always present energy and influence; or in requiring them to sacrifice their ornaments, he might have supposed they would have desisted from urging their request; but all this is mere conjecture, with very little probability to support it. It must however be granted that Aaron does not appear to have even designed a worship that should supersede the worship of the Most High; hence we find him making proclamation, To-morrow is a feast to the LORD; and we find further that some of the proper rites of the true worship were observed on this occasion. It has been supposed that the calf was an exact resemblance of the famous Egyptian god Apis, who was worshipped under the form of an ox, which worship the Israelites no doubt saw often practised in 6 And they rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt-offerings, and brought peace-offerings; and the *people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play.

7 And the LORD said unto Moses, <sup>b</sup>Go, get thee down; for thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, <sup>c</sup>have corrupted themselves:

8 They have turned aside quickly out of the way which <sup>d</sup>I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshipped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, * These be thy gods, O Israel, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, <sup>e</sup>I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiff-necked people:

10 Now therefore <sup>f</sup>let me alone, that <sup>g</sup>my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them: and <sup>h</sup>I will make of thee a great nation.

11 <sup>i</sup>And Moses besought <sup>k</sup>the LORD his God, and said, LORD, why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt with great power, and with a mighty hand?

12 <sup>l</sup>Wherefore should the Egyptians speak, and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and <sup>m</sup>repent of this evil against thy people.

13 Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou <sup>n</sup>swarest by thine own self,

Egypt. Some however think that this worship of Apis was not then established; but we have already had sufficient proof that different animals were sacred among the Egyptians, nor have we any account of any worship in Egypt earlier than that offered to Apis, under the figure of an OX.

Verse 6. The people sat down to eat and to drink] The burnt-offerings were wholly consumed; the peace-offerings, when the blood had been poured out, became the food of the priests, &c. When therefore the strictly religious part of those ceremonies was finished, the people sat down to eat of the peace-offerings, and this they did merely as the idolaters, eating and drinking to excess. And it appears they went much farther, for it is said they rose up to play, letsachek, a word of ominous import, which seems to imply here fornicating, and adulterous intercourse; and in some countries the verb to play is still used precisely in this sense.

Verse 7. Thy people—have corrupted themselves] They had not only got into the spirit of idolatry, but they had become abominable in their conduct, so that God disowns them to be his: Thy people have broken the covenant, and are no longer entitled to my protection and love.

This is one pretence that the Roman Catholics have for the idolatry in their image worship. Their high-priest, the pope, collects the ornaments of the people, and makes an image, a crucifix, a madonna, &c. The people worship it; but the pope says it is only to keep God in remembrance. But of the whole God says, Thy people have corrupted themselves; and thus, as they continue in their idolatry, they have forfeited the blessings of the Lord's covenant.

Verse 9. A stiff-necked people] Probably an allusion to the stiff-necked ox, the object of their worship.

Verse 10. Now therefore let me alone] Moses had already begun to plead with God in the behalf of this rebellious and ungrateful people; and so powerful was his intercession that even the Omnipotent represents himself as incapable of doing any thing in the way of judgment, unless his creature desisted from praying for mercy!

Verse 14. And the Lord repented of the evil] This is spoken merely after the manner of men who, having formed a pur-and saidst unto them, * I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it for ever.

14 And the LORD <sup>a</sup>repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people.

15 And <sup>b</sup>Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written.

16 And the <sup>c</sup>tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables.

17 And when Joshua heard the noise of the people as they shouted, he said unto Moses, There is a noise of war in the camp.

18 And he said, It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery, neither is it the voice of them that cry for being overcome: but the noise of them that sing do I hear.

19 And it came to pass, as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that <sup>d</sup>he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount.

20 <sup>e</sup>And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strawed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it.

pose, permit themselves to be diverted from it by strong and forcible reasons, and so change their minds relative to their former intentions.

Verse 15. The tables were written on both their sides] On this transaction there are the three following opinions: 1. We may conceive the tables of stone to have been thin slabs or a kind of slate, and the writing on the back side to have been a continuation of that on the front, the first not being sufficient to contain the whole. 2. Or the writing on the back side was probably the precepts that accompanied the ten commandments; the latter were written by the Lord, the former by Moses; see the note on chap. xxxiv. 1, 27. 3. Or the same words were written on both sides, so that when held up two parties might read at the same time.

Verse 16. The tables were the work of God] Because such a law could proceed from none but himself; God alone is the fountain and author of LAW, of what is right, just, holy, and good.

The writing was the writing of God] For as he is the sole author of law and justice, so he alone can write them on the heart of man.

Verse 17. Joshua—said—There is a noise of war in the camp] How natural was this thought to the mind of a military man! Hearing a confused noise he supposed that the Israelitish camp had been attacked by some of the neighbouring tribes.

Verse 18. And he said] That is, Moses returned this answer to the observations of Joshua.

He cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them] He might have done this through distress and anguish of spirit, on beholding their abominable idolatry and dissolute conduct; or he probably did it emblematically, intimating thereby that, as by this act of his the tables were broken in pieces, on which the law of God was written; so they, by their present conduct, had made a breach in the covenant, and broken the laws of their Maker. But we must not excuse this act, it was rash and irreverent; God's writing should not have been treated in this way.

Verse 20. He took the calf—and burnt—and ground it to 21 And Moses said unto Aaron, * What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought so great a sin upon them ?

22 And Aaron said, Let not the anger of my lord wax hot : <sup>b</sup> thou knowest the people, that they are set on mischief.

23 For they said unto me, * Make us gods, which shall go before us : for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

24 And I said unto them, Whosoever hath any gold, let him break it off. So they gave it me : then I cast it into the fire, and there <sup>d</sup> came out this calf.

25 And when Moses saw that the people were * naked, (for Aaron <sup>f</sup> had made them naked, unto their shame, among * their enemies :)

26 Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the LORD's side? let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him.

powder, &c.] How truly contemptible must the object of their idolatry appear when they were obliged to drink their god, reduced to powder and strewn on the water ! "But," says an objector, "how could gold, the most ductile of all metals, and the most ponderous, be stamped into dust, and strewn on water ?" In Deut. ix. 21 this matter is fully explained : I took, says Moses, your sin, the calf which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, that is, melted it down, probably into ingots or gross plates, and stamped it, that is, beat it into thin laminae, something like our gold leaf, and ground it very small, even, until it was as small as dust, which might be very easily done by the action of the hands, when beat into thin plates or leaves, as the original words imply. And I cast the dust thereof into the brook, and being thus lighter than the water, it would readily float, so that they could easily see, in this reduced and useless state, the idol to which they had been lately offering divine honours, and from which they were vainly expecting protection and defence. No mode of argumentation could have served so forcibly to demonstrate the folly of their conduct, as this method pursued by Moses.

Verse 21. What did this people unto thee] It seems, if Aaron had been firm, this evil might have been prevented.

Verse 22. Thou knowest the people] He excuses himself by the wicked and seditious spirit of the people, intimating that he was obliged to accede to their desires.

Verse 24. I cast it into the fire, and there came out this calf] What a silly, and ridiculous subterfuge ! He seems to insinuate that he only threw the metal into the fire, and that the calf came unexpectedly out by mere accident.

Verse 25. Moses saw that the people were naked] They were stripped, says the Targum, of the holy crown that was upon their heads, on which the great and precious name JEHOVAH was engraved. But it is more likely that the word parua implies that they were reduced to the most helpless and wretched state, being abandoned by God in the midst of their enemies. This is exactly similar to that expression, 2 Chron. xxviii. 19. Their nakedness, therefore, though in the first sense it may imply that several of them were despoiled of their ornaments, may also express their defenceless and abandoned state, in consequence of their sin. That they could not literally have all been despoiled of their ornaments, appears evident from their offerings.

Verse 26. Who is on the Lord's side ?] That is, Who among you is free from this transgression ? And all the sons of Levi, &c.] It seems they had no part in this idolatrous business.

Verse 27. From gate to gate] It is probable that there was an inclosed or intrenched camp, in which the chief rulers and heads of the people were, and that this camp had 29 <sup>1</sup> For <sup>2</sup> Moses had said, <sup>3</sup> Consecrate yourselves to day to the LORD, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother ; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day.

30 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses said unto the people, <sup>1</sup> Ye have sinned a great sin : and now I will go up unto the LORD ; <sup>m</sup> peradventure I shall <sup>n</sup> make an atonement for your sin.

31 And Moses <sup>o</sup> returned unto the LORD, and said, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have <sup>p</sup> made them gods of gold ;

two gates or outlets ; and the Levites were commanded to pass from one to the other, slaying as many of the transgressors as they could find.

Verse 28. There fell—about three thousand men.] These were no doubt the chief transgressors ; having broken the covenant by having other gods besides Jehovah, they lost the divine protection, and then the justice of God laid hold on and slew them. Moses doubtless had positive orders from God for this act of justice ; for though through his intercession the people were spared, so as not to be exterminated as a nation, yet the principal transgressors, those who were set on mischief, ver. 22, were to be put to death.

Verse 29. For Moses had said, Consecrate yourselves] Fill your hands to the Lord.

Verse 31. Moses returned unto the Lord] Before he went down from the mountain, God had acquainted him with the general defection of the people, whereupon he immediately, without knowing the extent of their crime, began to make intercession for them ; and God, having given him a general assurance that they should not be cut off, hastened him to go down, and bring them off from their idolatry.

Verse 32. Forgive their sin— ; and if not, blot me—out of thy book] It is probable that one part of Moses' work during the forty years of his residence on the mount with God, was his regulating the muster-roll of all the tribes and families of Israel, in reference to the parts they were respectively to act in the different transactions in the wilderness, promised land, &c. ; and this being done under the immediate direction of God, is termed God's book, which he had written : and it is probable that God had told him, that those who should break the covenant which he had then made with them should be blotted out of that list, and never enter into the promised land. All this Moses appears to have particularly in view : therefore he says, This people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold ; thus they had broken the covenant (see the first and second commandments), and by this had forfeited their right to Canaan. Yet now, he adds, if thou wilt forgive their sin, that they may yet attain the promised inheritance— ; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written— if thou wilt blot out their names from this register, and never suffer them to enter Canaan, blot me out also : for I cannot bear the thought of enjoying that blessedness, while my people and their posterity shall be for ever excluded. And God, in kindness to Moses, spared him the mortification of going into Canaan without taking the people with him. They had forfeited their lives, and were sentenced to die in the wilderness ; and Moses' prayer was answered in mercy to him, while the people suffered under the hand of justice. But the promise of God did not fail ; for although those who 33 And the LORD said unto Moses, * Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book.

34 Therefore now go, lead the people unto the place of which I have spoken unto thee: <sup>b</sup> behold, * Lev. xxiii. 30. Ezek. xviii. 4.—<sup>b</sup> Ch. xxxiii. 2, 14, &c. Num. xx. 16.

sinned were blotted out of the book, yet their posterity enjoyed the inheritance.

This seems to be the simple and pure light in which this place should be viewed; and in this sense St. Paul is to be understood, Rom. ix. 3, where he says: For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh; who are ISRAELITES; to whom pertaineth the ADOPTION, and the GLORY, and the COVENANTS. Moses could not survive the destruction of his people, nor their exclusion from the promised land; and St. Paul was willing to be deprived of every earthly blessing, and even to become a sacrifice for them, if this might contribute to the preservation and salvation of the Jews. But certainly, neither Moses nor Paul could wish to go to eternal perdition, to save their countrymen from being cut off, the one by the sword of the Philistines, the other by that of the Romans. Even the supposition is monstrous.

On this mode of interpretation we may at once see what is implied in the book of life, and being written in or blotted out of such a book. In the public registers, all that were born of a particular tribe were entered in the list of their respective families under that tribe. This was the book of life; but when any of those died his name might be considered as blotted out from this list.

Verse 33. Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out] As if the Divine Being had said: "All my conduct is regulated by infinite justice and righteousness: in no case shall the innocent ever suffer for the guilty. That no man may transgress through ignorance, I have given you my law, and thus published my covenant; the people themselves have acknowledged its justice and equity, and have voluntarily ratified it. He then that sins against me, him will I blot out of my book." And is it not remarkable that to these conditions of the covenant, God strictly adhered, so that not one soul of these transgressors ever entered into the promised rest? Here was justice. And yet, though they deserved death, they were spared! Here was mercy. Thus, as far as justice would permit, mercy extended; and as far as mercy would permit, justice proceeded. Behold the GOODNESS and SEVERITY of GOD! MERCY saves all that JUSTICE can spare; and JUSTICE destroys all that MERCY should not save.

mine Angel shall go before thee: nevertheless, <sup>c</sup> in the day when I visit, I will visit their sin upon them.

35 And the LORD plagued the people, because <sup>d</sup> they made the calf, which Aaron made.

Verse 34. Lead the people unto the place] The word place is not in the text, and is with great propriety omitted. For Moses never led this people into that place, they all died in the wilderness except Joshua and Caleb; but Moses led them towards the place, and thus the particle el here should be understood, unless we suppose that God designed to lead them to the borders of the land, but not to take them into it.

I will visit their sin] I will not destroy them, but they shall not enter into the promised land. They shall wander in the wilderness till the present generation become extinct.

Verse 35. The Lord plagued the people] Every time they transgressed afterwards divine justice seems to have remembered this transgression against them. The Jews have a metaphorical saying, apparently founded on this text: "No affliction has ever happened to Israel in which there was not some particle of the dust of the golden calf."

1. For want of a little more dependence upon God, how often does an excellent beginning come to an unhappy conclusion! Many who were just on the borders of the promised land, and about to cross Jordan, have, through an act of unfaithfulness, been turned back to wander many a dreary year in the wilderness. Reader, be on thy guard. Trust in Christ, and watch unto prayer.

2. Many people have been greatly distressed on losing their baptismal register, and have been reduced in consequence to great political inconvenience. But still they had their lives, and should a living man complain? But a man may so sin as to provoke God to cut him off; or, like a fruitless tree, be cut down, because he encumbers the ground. Or he may have sinned a sin unto death, 1 John v. 16, 17, that is, a sin which God will punish with temporal death, while he extends mercy to the soul.

3. With respect to the blotting out of God's book, on which there has been so much controversy, is it not evident that a soul could not be blotted out of a book in which it had never been written? And is it not further evident, from ver. 32, 33, that, although a man be written in God's book, if he sins he may be blotted out? Let him that readeth understand; and let him that standeth take heed lest he fall.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Moses is commanded to depart from the mount, and lead up the people towards the promised land, 1. An angel is promised to be their guide, 2. The land is described, and the Lord refuses to go with them, 3. The people mourn, and strip themselves of their ornaments, 4-6. The tabernacle or tent is pitched without the camp, 7. Moses goes to it to consult the Lord, and the cloudy pillar descends on it, 8, 9. The people, standing at their tent doors, witness this, 10. The Lord speaks familiarly with Moses; he returns to the camp, and leaves Joshua in the tabernacle, 11. Moses pleads with God, and desires to know whom he will send to be their guide, and to be informed of the way of the Lord, 12, 13. The Lord promises that his presence shall go with them, 14. Moses pleads that the people may be taken under the divine protection, 15, 16. The Lord promises to do so, 17. Moses requests to see the divine glory, 18. And God promises to make his goodness pass before him, and to proclaim his name, 19. Shows that no man can see his glory and live, 20; but promises to put him in a cleft of the rock, and to cover him with his hand while his glory passed by, and then to remove his hand and let him see his back parts, 21-23.

<sup>b</sup> Gen. xii. 7. Ch. xxxii. 13.

Verse 1. Unto the land] That is, towards it, or to the borders of it.

Verse 2. I will send an angel] In chap. xxxiii. 20, God promises to send an angel to conduct them into the good land, in whom the name of God should be; that is, in whom God should dwell. Here he promises that an angel shall be

2 * And I will send an angel before thee; <sup>b</sup> and I will drive out the Canaanite, the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite :

3 * Unto a land flowing with milk and honey : <sup>d</sup> for I will not go up in the midst of thee, for thou art a * stiff-necked people, lest <sup>f</sup> I consume thee in the way.

4 And when the people heard these evil tidings, <sup>e</sup> they mourned; <sup>h</sup> and no man did put on him his ornaments.

5 For the LORD had said unto Moses, Say unto the children of Israel, <sup>i</sup> Ye are a stiff-necked people : I will come up <sup>j</sup> into the midst of thee in a moment, and consume thee; therefore now put off thy ornaments from thee, that I may <sup>k</sup> know what to do unto thee.

6 And the children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornaments by the mount Horeb.

7 And Moses took the tabernacle, and pitched it without the camp, afar off from the camp, <sup>l</sup> and called it the Tabernacle of the Congregation. And it came to pass, <sup>m</sup> that every one which <sup>n</sup> sought the LORD went out unto the tabernacle of the congregation, which <sup>o</sup> was without the camp.

8 And it came to pass, when Moses went out unto the tabernacle, <sup>p</sup> that all the people rose up, and stood every man <sup>q</sup> at his tent door, and looked after Moses, until he was gone unto the tabernacle.

9 And it came to pass, as Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and <sup>r</sup> the LORD <sup>s</sup> talked with Moses.

10 And all the people saw the cloudy pillar stand at the tabernacle door : and all the people rose up and <sup>t</sup> worshipped, every man <sup>u</sup> in his tent door.

11 And <sup>v</sup> the LORD spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend. And he turned again into the camp : but <sup>w</sup> his servant Joshua, the son of Nun, a young man, departed not out of the tabernacle.

12 And Moses said unto the LORD, See, <sup>x</sup> thou sayest unto me, Bring up this people : and thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, <sup>y</sup> I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight.

13 Now therefore, I pray thee, <sup>z</sup> if I have found grace in thy sight, <sup>a</sup> shew me now thy way, that I may know thee, that I may find grace in thy sight : and consider that this nation is <sup>b</sup> thy people.

14 And he said, <sup>c</sup> My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee <sup>d</sup> rest.

15 And he said unto him, <sup>e</sup> If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence.

their conductor; but as there is nothing particularly specified of him, it has been thought that an ordinary angel is intended, and not that Angel of the Covenant promised before. And this sentiment seems to be confirmed by the following verse.

Verse 3. I will not go up in the midst of thee] Consequently, the angel here promised to be their guide was not that angel in whom Jehovah's name was : and so the people understood it; hence the mourning which is afterwards mentioned.

Verse 5. Now put off thy ornaments from thee] The ancient Jewish commentators were of opinion that the Israelites had the name Jehovah inscribed on them in such a way as to ensure them the divine protection; and that this, inscribed probably on a plate of gold, was considered their choicest ornament : and that when they gave their ornaments to make the golden calf, this was given by many, in consequence of which they were considered as naked and defenceless. All the remaining parts of their ornaments, which it is likely were all emblematical of spiritual things, God commands them here to lay off; for they could not with propriety bear the symbols of the divine protection, who had forfeited that protection for their transgression.

That I may know what to do unto thee] For it seems that while they had these emblematical ornaments on them, they were still considered as under the divine protection. These were a shield to them, which God commands them to throw aside. Though many had parted with their choicest ornaments, yet not all, only a few comparatively, of the wives, daughters, and sons of 600,000 men, could have been thus stripped to make one golden calf. The major part still had these ornaments, and they are now commanded to lay them aside.

Verse 7. Moses took the tabernacle] Probably the tent of Moses, which was before in the midst of the camp, and to which the congregation came for judgment, and where, no doubt, God frequently met with his servant. This is now removed to a considerable distance from the camp, as God refuses to dwell any longer among this rebellious people. And as this was the place to which all the people came for justice and judgment, hence it was probably called the Tabernacle, more properly the tent, of the Congregation.

Verse 9. The cloudy pillar descended] This very circumstance precluded the possibility of deception. The cloud descending at these times, and at none others, was a full proof that it was miraculous, and a pledge of the divine presence. It was beyond the power of human art to counterfeit such an appearance; and let it be observed that all the people saw this, ver. 10. How many indubitable and irrefragable proofs of its own authenticity and divine origin does the Pentateuch contain!

Verse 11. The Lord spake unto Moses face to face] That there was no personal appearance here we may readily conceive : and that the communications made by God to Moses were not by visions, ecstasies, dreams, inward inspirations, or the mediation of angels, is sufficiently evident : we may therefore consider the passage as implying that familiarity and confidence with which the Divine Being treated his servant, and that he spake with him by articulate sounds in his own language, though no shape or similitude was then to be seen.

Joshua the son of Nun, a young man] Joshua certainly was not a young man in the literal sense of the word. Perhaps the word naar, here translated young man, means a single person, one unmarried.

Verse 12. Moses said unto the Lord] We may suppose that after Moses had quitted the tabernacle he went to the camp, and gave the people some general information relative to the conversation he lately had with the Lord : after which he returned to the tabernacle or tent, and began to plead with God, as we find in this and the following verses.

Thou hast not let me know, &c.] As God had said he would not go up with this people, Moses wished to know whom he would send with him, as he had only said, in general terms, that he would send an angel.

Verse 13. Shew me now thy way] Let me know the manner in which thou wouldst have this people led up and governed, because this nation is thy people, and should be governed and guided in thy own way.

Verse 14. My presence shall go with thee] My faces shall go. I shall give thee manifestations of my grace and goodness through the whole of thy journey. I shall vary my appearances for thee as thy necessities shall require.

Verse 15. If thy presence go not] Without supernatural

16 For wherein shall it be known here that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? <sup>a</sup> is it not in that thou goest with us? so <sup>b</sup> shall we be separated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth.

17 And the LORD said unto Moses, <sup>c</sup> I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken: for <sup>d</sup> thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name.

18 And he said, I beseech thee, shew me <sup>e</sup> thy glory.

19 And he said, 'I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the LORD before thee, <sup>f</sup> and will be <sup>g</sup> gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will shew mercy on whom I will shew mercy.

assistance, and a most particular providence, he knew that it would be impossible either to govern such a people, or support them in the desert; and therefore he wishes to be well assured on this head, that he may lead them up with confidence, and be able to give them the most explicit assurances of support and protection. But by what means should these manifestations take place? This question seems to be answered by the prophet Isaiah, chap. lxiii. 9: In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the Angel of his presence (paravit, of his faces) saved them.

Verse 16. So shall we be separated. By having this divine protection we shall be saved from idolatry, and be preserved in thy truth and in the true worshipping of thee; and thus shall we be separated from all the people that are upon the face of the earth: as all the nations of the world, the Jews only excepted, were at this time idolaters.

Verse 17. I will do this thing also. My presence shall go with thee, and I will keep thee separate from all the people of the earth. Both these promises have been remarkably fulfilled. God continued miraculously with them till he brought them into the promised land: and from the day in which he brought them out of Egypt to the present day, he has kept them a distinct, unmixed people! Who can account for this on any principle but that of a continual especial providence, and a constant divine interference? The Jews have ever been a people fond of money; had they been mingled with the people of the earth among whom they have been scattered, their secular interests would have been greatly promoted by it; and they who have sacrificed every thing besides to their love of money, on this point have been incorruptible! They chose in every part of their dispersions rather to be a poor, despised, persecuted people, and continue separate from all the people of the earth, than to enjoy ease and affluence by becoming mixed with the nations.

Verse 18. Shew me thy glory. Moses probably desired to see that which constitutes the peculiar glory or excellence of the divine nature as it stands in reference to man. By many this is thought to signify his eternal mercy in sending Christ Jesus into the world. Moses perceived that what God was now doing had the most important and gracious designs, which at present he could not distinctly discover; therefore he desires God to show him his glory. God graciously promises to indulge him in this request as far as possible, by proclaiming his name, and making all his goodness pass before him, ver. 19. But at the same time he assures him that he could not see his face—the fulness of his perfections and the grandeur of his designs, and live, as no human being could bear, in the present state, this full discovery. But he adds, Thou shalt see my back parts, etc. achorai, probably meaning that appearance which he should assume in after times, when it should be said, God is manifest in the flesh. This appearance did take place, for we find God putting him into a cleft of a rock, covering him with his hand, and passing by in such a way as to exhibit a human similitude. John may have had this in view when he said, The word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth, and we beheld his glory. What this glory was, and what was implied by this grace and truth, we shall see in the succeeding chapter.

Verse 19. I will make all my goodness pass before thee. Thou shalt not have a sight of my justice, for thou couldst not bear the infinite splendour of my purity; but I shall show myself to thee as the fountain of inexhaustible compassion, the sovereign Dispenser of my own mercy in my own way, being gracious to whom I will be gracious, and showing mercy on whom I will show mercy.

Verse 20. No man see me, and live. The splendour would be insufferable to man; he only, whose mortality is swallowed up of life, can see God as he is. See 1 John iii. 2.

Verse 21. Behold, there is a place by me. There seems to be a reference here to a well-known place on the mount where God was accustomed to meet with Moses.

1. The conclusion of this chapter is very obscure; and it is very probable that the whole concerned Moses alone. He had received general directions to decamp, and lead the people towards the promised land; but this was accompanied with a threat that Jehovah would not go with them. The prospect that was before him was exceedingly gloomy and discouraging; and it was rendered the more so because God predicted their persevering stiff-neckedness, and gave this as one reason why he would not go up among them, for their provocations would be so great and so frequent that his justice would be so provoked as to break through in a moment, and consume them. Moses, well knowing that God must have some great and important design in delivering them and bringing them thus far, earnestly entreated him to give him some discovery of it, that his own mind might be satisfied. God mercifully condescends to meet his wishes in such a way as no doubt gave him full satisfaction; but as this referred to himself alone, the circumstances are not related, as probably they could be of no further use to us than the mere gratifying of a principle of curiosity.

2. On some occasions to be kept in the dark is as instructive as to be brought into the light. In many cases those words of the prophet are strictly applicable: Verily, thou art a God who hidest thyself, O God of Israel, the Saviour! One point we see here very plainly, that while the people continued obstinate and rebellious, that presence of God by which his approbation was signified could not be manifested among them; and yet, without his presence to guide, protect, and provide for them, they could neither go up, nor be saved. This presence is promised, and on the fulfilment of the promise the safety of Israel depended. The church of God is often now in such a state that the approbation of God cannot be manifested in it; and yet if his presence were wholly withdrawn, truth would fall in the streets, equity go backward, and the church must become extinct. How have the seeds of light and life been preserved, during the long, dark, and cold periods when error was triumphant, and the pure worship of God adulterated by the impurities of idolatry and the thick darkness of superstition, by the presence of his endless mercy, preserving his own truth in circumstances in which he could not show his approbation! He was with the church in the wilderness, and preserved the living oracles, kept alive the heavenly seeds, and is now showing forth the glory of those designs which before he concealed from mankind.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Moses is commanded to hew two tables similar to the first, and bring them up to the mount, to get the covenant renewed, 1-3. He prepares the tables and goes up to meet the Lord, 4. The Lord descends, and proclaims his name JEHOVAH, 5. What this name signifies, 6, 7. Moses worships and intercedes, 8, 9. The Lord promises to renew the covenant, work miracles among the people, and drive out the Canaanites, &c., 10, 11. No covenant to be made with the idolatrous nations, but their altars and images to be destroyed, 12-15. No matrimonial alliances to be contracted with them, 16. The Israelites must have no mollen gods, 17. The commandment of the feast of unleavened bread, and of the sanctification of the first-born renewed, 18-20; as also that of the sabbath, and the three great annual feasts, 21-23. The promise that the surrounding nations shall not invade their territories, while all the males were at Jerusalem celebrating the annual feasts, 24. Directions concerning the passover, 25; and the first-fruits, 26. Moses is commanded to write all these words, as containing the covenant which God had now renewed with the Israelites, 27. Moses, being forty days with God without eating or drinking, writes the words of the covenant; and the Lord writes the ten commandments upon the tables of stone, 28. Moses descends with the tables; his face shines, 29. Aaron and the people are afraid to approach him, because of his glorious appearance, 30. Moses delivers to them the covenant and commandments of the Lord; and puts a veil over his face while he is speaking, 31-33, but takes it off when he goes to minister before the Lord, 34, 35.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, *Hew thee two tables of stones like unto the first: <sup>b</sup>and I will write upon these tables the words that were in the first tables, which thou brakest.

2 And be ready in the morning, and come up in the morning unto Mount Sinai, and present thyself there to me <sup>c</sup>in the top of the mount.

3 And no man shall <sup>d</sup>come up with thee, neither let any man be seen throughout all the mount; neither let the flocks nor herds feed before that mount.

Verse 1. Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first] God wrote the first tables himself. But here, in ver. 27, it seems as if Moses was commanded to write these words, and in ver. 28 it is said, And he wrote upon the tables; but in Deut. x. 1-4 it is expressly said that God wrote the second tables as well as the first.

In order to reconcile these accounts, let us suppose that the ten words, or ten commandments, were written on both tables by the hand of God himself, and that what Moses wrote, ver. 27, was a copy of these to be delivered to the people, while the tables themselves were laid up in the ark before the testimony, whither the people could not go to consult them, and therefore a copy was necessary for the use of the congregation; this copy, being taken off under the direction of God, was authenticated equally with the original, and the original itself was laid up as a record to which all succeeding copies might be continually referred, in order to prevent corruption. This supposition removes the apparent contradiction; and thus both God and Moses may be said to have written the covenant and the ten commandments: the former, the original; the latter, the copy. This supposition is rendered still more probable by the 27th verse itself: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Write thou these words (that is, as I understand it, a copy of the words which God had already written); for AFTER THE TENOR (al pi, ACCORDING TO THE MOUTH) of these words, I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel." Here the original writing is represented by an elegant prosopopoeia, or personification, as speaking and giving out from its own mouth a copy of itself. It may be supposed that this mode of interpretation is contradicted by the 28th verse: AND HE wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant; but that the pronoun HE refers to the Lord, and not to Moses, is sufficiently proved by the parallel place, Deut. x. 1-4.

There still remains a controversy whether what are called the ten commandments were at all written on the first tables, those tables containing, according to some, only the terms of the covenant without the ten words, which are supposed to 4 And he hewed two tables of stone like unto the first; and Moses rose up early in the morning, and went up unto mount Sinai, as the LORD had commanded him, and took in his hand the two tables of stone.

5 And the LORD descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and *proclaimed the name of the LORD.

6 And the LORD passed before him, and proclaimed, The LORD, The LORD 'God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in 'goodness and <sup>b</sup>truth, be added here for the first time. It is very likely that the commandments, laws, &c., were first published by the Lord in the hearing of the people; repeated afterwards by Moses; and the ten words or commandments, containing the sum and substance of the whole, afterwards written on the first tables of stone, to be kept for a record in the ark. These being broken, as is related chap. xxxii. 19, Moses is commanded to hew out two tables like to the first, and bring them up to the mountain, that God might write upon them what he had written on the former. chap. xxxiv. 1.

Verse 6. And the Lord passed by—and proclaimed, The Lord, &c.] It would be much better to read this verse thus: "And the LORD passed by before him, and proclaimed JEHOVAH," that is, showed Moses fully what was implied in this august name. Moses had requested God to show him his glory, and God promised to proclaim or fully declare the name JEHOVAH (verse 19); by which proclamation or interpretation Moses should see how God would "be gracious to whom he would be gracious," and how he would "be merciful to those to whom he would show mercy." Here therefore God fulfils that promise by proclaiming this name. It has long been a question, what is the meaning of the word JEHOVAH, Yehovah, Yehue, Yehveh, or Yewe, Jeeu, Jao, Iao, Jhueh, and Jove; for it has been as variously pronounced as it has been differently interpreted. Some have maintained that it is utterly inexplicable; these of course have offered no mode of interpretation. Others say that it implies the essence of the divine nature. Others, that it expresses the doctrine of the Trinity connected with the incarnation; the letter yod standing for the Father, he for the Son, and vau (the connecting particle) for the Holy Spirit; and they add that the he being repeated in the word, signifies the human nature united to the divine in the incarnation. These speculations are calculated to give very little satisfaction. How strange is it that none of these learned men have discovered that God himself interprets this name in verses 6 and 7 of this chapter!

The different names in this and the following verse have

7 *Keeping mercy for thousands, <sup>b</sup>forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and <sup>c</sup>that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation.

8 And Moses made haste, and <sup>d</sup>bowed his head toward the earth, and worshipped.

9 And he said, If now I have found grace in thy sight, O LORD, <sup>e</sup>let my LORD, I pray thee, go among us; for <sup>f</sup>it is a stiff-necked people; and pardon our iniquity and our sin, and take us for <sup>g</sup>thine inheritance.

10 And he said, Behold, <sup>h</sup>I make a covenant: before all thy people I will <sup>i</sup>do marvels, such as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation: and all the people among which thou art shall see the work of the LORD; for it is <sup>j</sup>a terrible thing that I will do with thee.

11 <sup>k</sup>Observe thou that which I command thee this day; behold, <sup>l</sup>I drive out before thee the Amorite, and the Canaanite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Hivite, and the Jebusite.

12 <sup>m</sup>Take heed to thyself, lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land whither thou goest, lest it be for <sup>n</sup>a snare in the midst of thee:

13 But ye shall <sup>o</sup>destroy their altars, break their <sup>p</sup>images, and <sup>q</sup>cut down their groves:

been considered as so many attributes of the divine nature. Commentators divide them into eleven, thus: 1. JEHOVAH. 2. EL, the strong or mighty God. 3. RACHUM, the merciful Being, who is full of tenderness and compassion. 4. CHANUN, the gracious One; he whose nature is goodness itself; the loving God. 5. ERECH APPAYIM, long-suffering; the Being who, because of his goodness and tenderness, is not easily irritated, but suffers long and is kind. 6. RAB, the great or mighty One. 7. CHESED, the bountiful Being; he who is exuberant in his beneficence. 8. EMEH, the truth or true One; he alone who can neither deceive nor be deceived, who is the fountain of truth, and from whom all wisdom and knowledge must be derived. 9. NOTSER CHESED, the preserver of bountifulness; he whose beneficence never ends, keeping mercy for thousands of generations, showing compassion and mercy while the world endures. 10. NOSSE AVON VAPHESHA VECHATAH, he who bears away iniquity and transgression and sin: properly, the REDEEMER, the Pardoner, the Forgiver: the Being whose prerogative alone it is to forgive sin and save the soul. NAKKEH LO YENNAKEH, the righteous Judge, who distributes justice with an impartial hand, with whom no innocent person can ever be condemned. And 11. POKED AVON, &c.; he who visits iniquity, who punishes transgressors, and from whose justice no sinner can escape. The God of retributive and vindictive justice.

These eleven attributes, as they have been termed, are all included in the name JEHOVAH, and are, as we have before seen, the proper interpretation of it; but the meaning of several of these words has been variously understood.

Verse 7. That will by no means clear the guilty] This last clause is rather difficult; literally translated, it signifies, in clearing he will not clear. But the Samaritan, reading lo, to him, instead of the negative, lo, not, renders the clause thus: With whom the innocent shall be innocent; i.e., an innocent or holy person shall never be treated as if he were a transgressor, by this just and holy God. The Arabic Version has it, He justifies and is not justified; and the Septuagint is nearly as our English text, and he doth not purify the guilty. The Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint, edited by Dr. Grabe, has, And the guilty he will not cleanse with a purification-offering. The Coptic is to the same purpose. The Vulgate is a paraphrase: "and no person is innocent by or of himself before thee." This gives a sound theological sense, stating a great truth, That no man can make an atonement for his own sins, or purify his own heart; and that all have sinned and come short of the glory of God.

Verse 9. O Lord, let my Lord, I pray thee, go among us] The original is not Jehovah, but Adonai in both these places, and seems to refer particularly to the Angel of the Covenant, the Messiah.

Verse 10. I will do marvels] This seems to refer to what God did in putting them in possession of the land of Canaan, causing the walls of Jericho to fall down; making the sun and moon to stand still, &c. And thus God made his covenant with them; binding himself to put them in possession of the promised land, and binding them to observe the precepts laid down in the following verses, from the 11th to the 26th inclusive.

Verse 21. In eaving time and in harvest thou shalt rest.] This commandment is worthy of especial note; many break the sabbath on the pretence of absolute necessity, because, if in harvest-time the weather happens to be what is called bad, and the sabbath-day be fair and fine, they judge it perfectly lawful to employ that day in endeavouring to save the fruits of the field, and think that the goodness of the day beyond the preceding, is an indication from Providence that it should be thus employed. But is not the above command pointed directly against this? No man ever yet ultimately suffered loss by a conscientious attachment to his duty to God. He who is willing and obedient, shall eat the good of the land; and God will ever distinguish those in his providence who respect his commandments.

25 <sup>a</sup>Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven; <sup>c</sup>neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of the passover be left unto the morning.

26 <sup>a</sup>The first of the first-fruits of thy land thou shalt bring unto the house of the LORD thy God. <sup>c</sup>Thou shalt not see the kid in his mother's milk.

27 And the LORD said unto Moses, Write thou <sup>b</sup>these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel.

28 <sup>a</sup>And he was there with the LORD forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread, nor drink water. And <sup>b</sup>he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten <sup>c</sup>commandments.

29 And it came to pass, when Moses came down from Mount Sinai with the <sup>a</sup>two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, Verse 24. Neither shall any man desire thy land] What a manifest proof was this of the power and particular providence of God! Was not this a standing proof of the divine origin of their religion, and a barrier which no deistical mind could possibly surmount? Thrice every year did God work an especial miracle for the protection of his people; controlling even the very desires of their enemies, that they might not so much as meditate evil against them. They who have God for their protector have a sure refuge; and how true is the proverb, The path of duty is the way of safety!

Verse 25. The blood of my sacrifice] That is, the paschal lamb.

Verse 27. Write thou these words] Moses either wrote a transcript of the ten words and the accompanying precepts for the use of the people, or he wrote the precepts themselves in addition to the ten commandments which were written by the finger of God. Allowing this mode of interpretation, the accompanying precepts were, probably, what was written on the back side of the tables by Moses; the ten commandments, what were written on the front by the finger of Jehovah: for we must pay but little attention to the supposition of the rabbins, that the letters on each table were cut through the stone, so as to be legible on each side.

Verse 29. The skin of his face shone] Karan, was horned: having been long in familiar intercourse with his Maker, his flesh, as well as his soul, was penetrated with the effulgence of the divine glory, and his looks expressed the light and life which dwelt within. Probably Moses appeared now as he did when, in our Lord's transfiguration, he was seen with Elijah on the mount, Matt. xvii. As the original word karan signifies to shine out, to dart forth, as horns on the head of an animal, or rays of light reflected from a polished surface, we may suppose that the heavenly glory which filled the soul of this holy man darted out from his face in coruscations, in that manner in which light is generally represented. The Vulgate renders the passage, "and he did not know that his face was horned;" which version, misunderstood, has induced painters in general to represent Moses with two very large horns, one proceeding from each temple! But we might naturally ask, while they were indulging themselves in such fancies, why only two horns? for it is very likely that there were hundreds of these radiations, proceeding at once from the face of Moses. It was no doubt, from this very circumstance, that almost all the nations of the world who have heard of this transaction, have agreed in representing those men to whom they attributed extraordinary sanctity, and whom they supposed to have had familiar intercourse with the Deity, with a lucid nimbus or glory round their heads.

Verse 30. They were afraid to come nigh him.] A sight of his face alarmed them; their consciences were still guilty from their late transgression, and they had not yet received that Moses wist not that <sup>a</sup>the skin of his face shone while he talked with him.

30 And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone; and they were afraid to come nigh him.

31 And Moses called unto them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him: and Moses talked with them.

32 And afterwards all the children of Israel came nigh: <sup>a</sup>and he gave them in commandment all that the LORD had spoken with him in Mount Sinai.

33 And till Moses had done speaking with them, he put <sup>a</sup>a veil on his face.

34 But <sup>a</sup>when Moses went in before the LORD to speak with him, he took the veil off until he came out. And he came out, and spake unto the children of Israel that which he was commanded.

35 And the children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone: and Moses put the veil upon his face again, until he went in to speak with him.

the atonement. The very appearance of superior sanctity often awes the guilty into respect.

Verse 33. And till Moses had done speaking] The meaning of the verse appears to be this: As often as Moses spoke in public to the people, he put the veil on his face, because they could not bear to look on the brightness of his countenance; but when he entered into the tabernacle to converse with the Lord, he removed this veil, ver. 34. St. Paul, 2 Cor. iii. 7, &c., makes a very important use of the transaction recorded in this place. He represents the brightness of the face of Moses as emblematical of the glory or excellence of that dispensation; but he shows that however glorious or excellent that was, it had no glory when compared with the superior excellence of the gospel. As Moses was glorious in the eyes of the Israelites, but that glory was absorbed and lost in the splendour of God when he entered into the tabernacle, or went to meet the Lord upon the mount; so the brightness and excellence of the Mosaic dispensation are eclipsed and absorbed in the transcendent brightness or excellence of the gospel of Christ. One was the shadow, the other is the substance. One showed SIN in its exceeding sinfulness, together with the justice and immaculate purity of God; but, in and of itself, made no provision for pardon or sanctification. The other exhibits Jesus, the Lamb of God, typified by all the sacrifices under the law, putting away sin by the sacrifice of himself, reconciling God to man and man to God, diffusing his spirit through the souls of believers, and cleansing the very thoughts of their hearts by his inspiration, and causing them to perfect holiness in the fear of God. The one seems to shut heaven against mankind, because by the law was the knowledge, not the cure, of SIN: the other opens the kingdom of heaven to all believers. The former was a ministration of death, the latter a dispensation of life. The former ministered terror, so that even the high-priest was afraid to approach, the people withdrew and stood afar off, and even Moses, the mediator of it, exceedingly feared and trembled; by the latter we have boldness to enter into the holiest through the blood of Jesus, who is the end of the law for righteousness—justification, to every one that believeth.

The apostle further considers the veil on the face of Moses, as being emblematical of the metaphorical nature of the different rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic dispensation, each covering some spiritual meaning or a spiritual subject; and that the Jews did not lift the veil to penetrate the spiritual sense, and did not look to the end of the commandment, which was to be abolished, but rested in the letter or literal meaning, which conferred neither light nor life.

He considers the veil also as being emblematical of that state of intellectual darkness into which the Jewish people, by their rejection of the gospel, were plunged, and from which they have never yet been recovered. When a Jew, even at the present day, reads the law in the synagogue, he puts over his head an oblong woollen veil, with four tassels at the four corners, which is called the taled or thalet. This is a very remarkable circumstance, as it appears to be an emblem of the intellectual veil referred to by the apostle, which is still upon their hearts when Moses is read, and which prevents them from looking to the end of that which God designed should be abrogated, and which has been abolished by the introduction of the gospel.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Moses assembles the congregation to deliver to them the commandments of God, 1. Directions concerning the sabbath, 2, 3. Free-will offerings of gold, silver, brass, &c., for the tabernacle, 4-7. Of oil and spices, 8. Of precious stones, 9. Proper artists to be employed, 10. The tabernacle and its tent, 11. The ark, 12. Table of the shew-bread, 13. Candlestick, 14. Altar of incense, 15. Altar of burnt-offering, 16. Hangings, pins, &c., 17, 18. Cloths of service, and holy vestments, 19. The people cheerfully bring their ornaments as offerings to the Lord, 20-22; together with blue, purple, scarlet, &c., &c., 23, 24. The women spin, and bring the produce of their skill and industry, 25, 26. The rulers bring precious stones, &c., 27, 28. All the people offer willingly, 29. Bezaleel and Aholiab appointed to conduct and superintend all the work of the tabernacle, for which they are qualified by the spirit of wisdom, 30-35.

AND Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, and said unto them, * These are the words which the LORD hath commanded, that ye should do them.

2 <sup>b</sup> Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you 'an holy day, a sabbath of rest to the LORD: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death.

3 <sup>a</sup> Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitation upon the sabbath day.

4 And Moses spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, * This is the thing which the LORD commanded, saying,

5 Take ye from among you an offering unto the LORD: 'whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the LORD; gold, and silver, and brass,

6 And blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair,

7 And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and shittim wood,

8 And oil for the light, * and spices for anointing oil, and for the sweet incense,

9 And onyx stones, and stones to be set for the ephod, and for the breastplate.

10 And * every wise hearted among you shall come, and make all that the LORD hath commanded;

11 'The tabernacle, his tent, and his covering, his taches, and his boards, his bars, his pillars, and his sockets;

12 'The ark, and the staves thereof, with the mercy-seat, and the veil of the covering;

13 The <sup>a</sup> table, and his staves, and all his vessels, <sup>a</sup> and the shew-bread;

Verse 3. Ye shall kindle no fire] The Jews understand this precept as forbidding the kindling of fire only for the purpose of doing work or dressing victuals; but to give them light and heat, they judge it lawful to light a fire on the sabbath-day, though themselves rarely kindle it—they get Christians to do this work for them.

Verse 5. An offering] A terumah or heave-offering; see Lev. vii. 1, &c.

Verse 19. The cloths of service] Probably aprons, towels, and such like, used in the common service, and different from the vestments for Aaron and his sons.

14 * The candlestick also for the light, and his furniture, and his lamps, with the oil for the light;

15 * And the incense altar and his staves, * and the anointing oil, and <sup>a</sup> the sweet incense, and the hanging for the door at the entering in of the tabernacle;

16 <sup>a</sup> The altar of burnt-offering, with his brasen grate, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver, and his foot;

17 * The hangings of the court, his pillars, and their sockets, and the hanging for the door of the court;

18 The pins of the tabernacle, and the pins of the court, and their cords;

19 * The cloths of service, to do service in the holy place, the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office.

20 And all the congregation of the children of Israel departed from the presence of Moses.

21 And they came, every one ' whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the LORD's offering to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation, and for all his service, and for the holy garments.

22 And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing hearted, and brought bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold: and every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the LORD.

23 And * every man, with whom was found blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair, and red skins of rams, and badgers' skins, brought them.

24 Every one that did offer an offering of silver

25 And all the women that were <sup>a</sup>wise hearted did spin with their hands, and brought that which they had spun, both of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine linen.

26 And all the women whose heart stirred them up in wisdom, spun goats' hair.

27 And <sup>b</sup>the rulers brought onyx stones, and stones to be set, for the ephod and for the breast-plate;

28 And <sup>c</sup>spice, and oil for the light, and for the anointing oil, and for the sweet incense.

29 The children of Israel brought a <sup>d</sup>willing offering unto the LORD, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring for all manner of work, which the LORD had commanded to be made by the hand of Moses.

xxx. 50, supposed to be a girdle to support the breasts, Verse 25. All the women that were wise hearted did spin. They had before learned this art, they were wise hearted; and now they practise it, and God condescends to require and accept their services. The spinning practised at this time was simple, and required little apparatus. It was the plain distaff or twirling pin, which might be easily made out of any wood they met with in the wilderness.

Verse 27. The rulers brought onyx stones. These, being persons of consequence, might be naturally expected to furnish the more scarce and costly articles. See how all join in this service! The men worked and brought offerings, the women spun and brought their ornaments, the rulers united with them and delivered up their jewels! And all the children of Israel brought a willing offering unto the Lord, ver. 29.

1. From the nature of the offerings made for the service of the tabernacle, we see of what sort the spoils were which the Israelites brought out of Egypt: gold, silver, brass, blue, purple, scarlet, fine linen, rams' skins dyed red, what we call badgers' skins, oil, spices, incense, onyx stones, and other stones, the names of which are not here mentioned. They must also have brought looms, spinning wheels, instruments for cutting precious stones, anvils, hammers, furnaces, melting-pots, with a vast variety of tools for the different artists employed on the work of the tabernacle, viz., smiths, joiners, carvers, gilders, &c.

2. God could have erected his tabernacle without the help

See, * the LORD hath called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah;

31 And he hath filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship;

32 And to devise curious works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass.

33 And in the cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of wood, to make any manner of cunning work.

34 And he hath put in his heart that he may teach, both he, and <sup>a</sup>Aholiab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan:

35 Them hath he <sup>b</sup>filled with wisdom of heart, to work all manner of work, of the engraver, and of the cunning workman, and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in scarlet, and in fine linen, and of the weaver, even of them that do any work, and of those that devise cunning work.

or skill of man; but he condescended to employ him. As all are interested in the worship of God, so all should bear a part in it; here God employs the whole congregation: every male and female, with even their sons and their daughters, and the very ornaments of their persons, are given to raise and adorn the house of God. The women who had not ornaments, and could neither give gold nor silver, could spin goats' hair, and the Lord graciously employs them in this work, and accepts what they can give and what they can do, for they did it with a willing mind; they were wise of heart—had learned a useful business, their hearts were lifted up in the work, ver. 21, and all felt it a high privilege to be able to put only a nail in the holy place. By the free-will offerings of the people the tabernacle was erected, and all the costly utensils belonging to it provided. This was the primitive mode of providing proper places for divine worship; and as it was the primitive, so it is the most rational mode. Taxes levied by law for building or repairing churches were not known in the ancient times of religious simplicity. It is an honour to be permitted to do any thing for the support of public worship; and he must have a strange, unfeeling, and ungodly heart, who does not esteem it a high privilege to have a stone of his own laying or procuring in the house of God. How easily might all the buildings necessary for the purpose of public worship be raised, if the money that is spent in needless self-indulgence by ourselves, our sons, and our daughters, were devoted to this purpose! By sacrifices of this kind the house of the Lord would be soon built, and the top-stone brought on with shouting Grace, grace, unto it!

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Moses appoints Bezaleel, Aholiab, and their associates, to the work, and delivers to them the free-will offerings of the people, 1-3. The people bring offerings more than are needed for the work, and are only restrained by the proclamation of Moses, 4-7. The curtains, their loops, taches, &c., for the tabernacle, 8-18. The covering for the tent, 19. The boards, 20-30. The bars, 31-34. The veil and its pillars, 35, 36. The hangings and their pillars, 37, 38.

By reading the first word veasah, then wrought, in the future tense instead of the past, the proper connexion will be preserved; for all grammarians know that the conjunction vau is often conversive, i.e. it turns the preterite tense of

2 And Moses called Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise hearted man, in whose heart the LORD had put wisdom, even every one <sup>a</sup> whose heart stirred him up to come unto the work to do it :

3 And they received of Moses all the offering which the children of Israel <sup>b</sup> had brought for the work of the service of the sanctuary, to make it withal. And they brought yet unto him free offerings every morning.

4 And all the wise men, that wrought all the work of the sanctuary, came every man from his work which they made.

5 And they spake unto Moses, saying, <sup>c</sup> The people bring much more than enough for the service of the work, which the LORD commanded to make.

6 And Moses gave commandment, and they caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing.

7 For the stuff they had was sufficient for all the work to make it, and too much.

8 <sup>d</sup> And every wise hearted man among them that wrought the work of the tabernacle, made ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet : with cherubims of cunning work made he them.

9 The length of one curtain was twenty and eight cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits : the curtains were all of one size.

10 And he coupled the five curtains one unto another : and the other five curtains he coupled one unto another.

11 And he made loops of blue on the edge of one curtain from the selvedge in the coupling : likewise he made in the uppermost side of another curtain, in the coupling of the second.

12 <sup>e</sup> Fifty loops made he in one curtain, and fifty loops made he in the edge of the curtain which was in the coupling of the second : the loops held one curtain to another.

13 And he made fifty taches of gold, and coupled the curtains one unto another with the taches : so it became one tabernacle.

14 <sup>f</sup> And he made curtains of goats' hair for the tent over the tabernacle : eleven curtains he made them.

15 The length of one curtain was thirty cubits, and four cubits was the breadth of one curtain : the eleven curtains were of one size.

16 And he coupled five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves.

17 And he made fifty loops upon the uttermost edge of the curtain in the coupling, and fifty loops made he upon the edge of the curtain which coupleth the second.

Verse 5. The people bring much more than enough] Had Moses been intent upon gain, and had he not been perfectly disinterested, he would have encouraged them to continue their contributions, as thereby he might have multiplied to himself gold, silver, and precious stones. But he was doing 19 <sup>g</sup> And he made a covering for the tent of rams' skins dyed red, and a covering of badgers' skins above that.

22 One board had two tenons, equally distant one from another : thus did he make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

23 And he made boards for the tabernacle ; twenty boards for the south side southward :

24 And forty sockets of silver he made under the twenty boards ; two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons.

25 And for the other side of the tabernacle, which is toward the north corner, he made twenty boards.

26 And their forty sockets of silver ; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

27 And for the sides of the tabernacle westward he made six boards.

28 And two boards made he for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides.

29 And they were <sup>i</sup> coupled beneath, and coupled together at the head thereof, to one ring : thus he did to both of them, in both the corners.

30 And there were eight boards ; and their sockets were sixteen sockets of silver, <sup>j</sup> under every board two sockets.

31 And he made <sup>k</sup> bars of shittim wood ; five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle,

32 And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the tabernacle for the sides westward.

33 And he made the middle bar to shoot through the boards from the one end to the other.

34 And he overlaid the boards with gold, and made their rings of gold to be places for the bars, and overlaid the bars with gold.

35 And he made <sup>l</sup> a veil of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen : with cherubims made he it of cunning work.

36 And he made thereunto four pillars of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold : their hooks were of gold ; and he cast for them four sockets of silver.

37 And he made an <sup>m</sup> hanging for the tabernacle door, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, <sup>n</sup> of needlework ;

the Lord's work, under the inspiration of the Divine Spirit, and therefore he sought no secular gain. Every thing necessary for the worship of God will be cheerfully provided by a people whose hearts are in that worship. In a state where all forms of religion and modes of worship are tolerated by the laws, it would be well to find out some less exceptionable way of providing for the national clergy than by tithes. Let them by all means have the provision allowed them by the law ; but let them not be needlessly exposed to the resentment of the people by the mode in which this provision is made, as this often alienates the affections of their flocks from them, and exceedingly injures their usefulness.

Verse 8. Cherubims of cunning work] Probably the word means no more than figures of any kind wrought in the diaper fashion in the loom, or by the needle in embroidery, or by the chisel or graving tool in wood, stone, metal; see on chap. xxv. 18. In some places the word seems to be restricted to express a particular figure then well known; but in many other places it seems to imply any kind of figure commonly formed by sculpture on stone, by carving on wood, by engraving upon brass, and by weaving in the loom, &c.

AND Bezaleel made <sup>a</sup> the ark of shittim wood: two cubits and a half <sup>was</sup> the length of it, and a cubit and a half the breadth of it, and a cubit and a half the height of it:

2 And he overlaid it with pure gold within and without, and made a crown of gold to it round about.

3 And he cast for it four rings of gold, <sup>to be set</sup> by the four corners of it; even two rings upon the one side of it, and two rings upon the other side of it.

4 And he made staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold.

5 And he put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, to bear the ark.

6 And he made the <sup>b</sup> mercy-seat of pure gold: two cubits and a half <sup>was</sup> the length thereof, and one cubit and a half the breadth thereof.

7 And he made two cherubims of gold, beaten out of one piece made he them, on the two ends of the mercy-seat.

8 One cherub <sup>c</sup> on the end on this side, and another cherub <sup>d</sup> on the other end on that side: out of the mercy-seat made he the cherubims, on the two ends thereof.

9 And the cherubims spread out <sup>their</sup> wings on high, and covered with their wings over the mercy-seat, with their faces one to another; <sup>even</sup> to the mercy-seatward were the faces of the cherubims.

10 And he made <sup>e</sup> the table of shittim wood: two cubits <sup>was</sup> the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

11 And he overlaid it with pure gold, and made thereunto a crown of gold round about.

12 Also he made thereunto a border of an hand breadth round about; and made a crown of gold for the border thereof round about.

13 And he cast for it four rings of gold, and put the rings upon the four corners that <sup>were</sup> in the four feet thereof.

14 Over against the border were the rings, the places for the staves to bear the table.

15 And he made the staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold, to bear the table.

16 And he made the vessels which <sup>were</sup> upon the table, his <sup>f</sup> dishes, and his spoons, and his bowls, and his covers <sup>g</sup> to cover withal, of pure gold.

17 And he made the <sup>h</sup> candlestick of pure gold: of beaten work made he the candlestick; his shaft, and his branch, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers, were of the same;

18 And six branches going out of the sides thereof; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side thereof, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side thereof:

19 Three bowls made after the fashion of almonds in one branch, a knop and a flower; and three bowls made like almonds in another branch, a knop and a flower: so throughout the six branches going out of the candlestick.

20 And in the candlestick <sup>were</sup> four bowls made like almonds, his knops, and his flowers:

21 And a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, according to the six branches going out of it.

22 Their knops and their branches were of the same: all of it <sup>was</sup> one beaten work of pure gold.

23 And he made his seven lamps, and his snuffers, and his snuffdishes, of pure gold.

24 Of a talent of pure gold made he it, and all the vessels thereof.

25 <sup>i</sup> And he made the incense altar of shittim wood: the length of it <sup>was</sup> a cubit, and the breadth of it a cubit; <sup>it was</sup> foursquare; and two cubits <sup>was</sup> the height of it; the horns thereof were of the same.

26 And he overlaid it with pure gold, <sup>both</sup> the top of it, and the sides thereof round about, and the horns of it: also he made unto it a crown of gold round about.

27 And he made two rings of gold for it under the crown thereof, by the two corners of it, upon the two sides thereof, to be places for the staves to bear it withal.

28 And he made the staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold.

29 And he made <sup>j</sup> the holy anointing oil and the pure incense of sweet spices, according to the work of the apothecary.

Bezaleel makes the altar of burnt-offering, 1-7. He makes the laver and its foot, out of the mirrors given by the women, 8. The court, its pillars, hangings, &c., 9-20. The whole tabernacle and its work finished by Bezaleel, Aholiab, and their assistants, 21-23. The amount of the gold contributed, 24. The amount of the silver, and how it was expended, 25-28. The amount of the brass, and how this was used, 29-31.

AND <sup>a</sup>he made the altar of burnt-offering of shittim wood: five cubits was the length thereof, and five cubits the breadth thereof; it was foursquare; and three cubits the height thereof.

2 And he made the horns thereof on the four corners of it; the horns thereof were of the same: and he overlaid it with brass.

3 And he made all the vessels of the altar, the pots, and the shovels, and the basons, and the flesh-hooks, and the firepans: all the vessels thereof made he of brass.

4 And he made for the altar a brasen grate of network, under the compass thereof beneath, unto the midst of it.

5 And he cast four rings for the four ends of the grate of brass to be places for the staves.

6 And he made the staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with brass.

7 And he put the staves into the rings on the sides of the altar to bear it withal; he made the altar hollow with boards.

8 And he made <sup>b</sup>the laver of brass, and the foot of it of brass, of the <sup>c</sup>looking-glasses of the women: <sup>d</sup>assembling, which assembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

9 And he made <sup>e</sup>the court: on the south side southward the hangings of the court were of fine twined linen, an hundred cubits:

10 Their pillars were twenty, and their brasen sockets twenty; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets were of silver.

11 And for the north side the hangings were an hundred cubits, their pillars were twenty, and their sockets of brass twenty; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver.

12 And for the west side were hangings of fifty cubits, their pillars ten, and their sockets ten; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver.

13 And for the east side eastward, fifty cubits.

14 The hangings of the one side of the gate were fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their sockets three.

15 And for the other side of the court gate, on this hand and that hand, were hangings of fifteen cubits: their pillars three, and their sockets three.

16 All the hangings of the court round about were of fine twined linen.

17 And the sockets for the pillars were of brass; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver; and the overlaying of the chapters of silver; and all the pillars of the court were filleted with silver.

18 And the hanging for the gate of the court was needlework, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen: and twenty cubits was the length, and the height in the breadth was five cubits, answerable to the hangings of the court.

19 And their pillars were four, and their sockets of brass four; their hooks of silver, and the overlaying of their chapters and their fillets of silver.

20 And all the <sup>f</sup>pins of the tabernacle, and of the court round about, were of brass.

Verse 8. The looking-glasses] The word maroth, from raah, he saw, signifies reflectors or mirrors of any kind. Here metal, highly polished, must certainly be meant, as glass was not yet in use; and had it even been in use, we are sure that looking-glasses could not make a *brass*en laver. The word therefore should be rendered mirrors, not looking-glasses, which in the above verse is perfectly absurd, because from those maroth the *brass*en laver was made. The first mirrors known among men were the clear, still fountain, and unruffled lake; and probably the mineral called mica, which is a very general substance through all parts of the earth. Plates of it have been found of three feet square, and it is so extremely divisible into luminae, that it has been divided into plates so thin as to be only the three hundred thousandth part of an inch. A plate of this forms an excellent mirror when any thing black is attached to the opposite side. The first artificial mirrors were apparently made of brass, afterwards of polished steel, and when luxury increased they were made of silver; but they were made at a very early period of mixed metal, particularly of tin and copper, the best of which, as Pliny tells us, were formerly manufactured at Brundisium. But, according to him, the most esteemed were those made of tin; and he says that silver mirrors became so common that even the servant girls used them. When the Egyptian women went to the temples, they always carried their mirrors with them. The Israelitish women probably did the same, and Dr. Shaw states that the Arabian women carry them constantly hung at their breasts. It is worthy of remark, that at first these women freely gave up their ornaments for this important service, and now give their very mirrors, probably as being of little further service, seeing they had already given up the principal decorations of their persons. Woman has been invidiously defined by Aristotle, an animal fond of dress (though this belongs to the whole human race, and not exclusively to woman). Had this been true of the Israelitish women, in the present case we must say they nobly sacrificed their incentives to pride to the service of their God. Woman, go thou and do likewise.

Of the women—which assembled at the door] What the employment of these women was at the door of the tabernacle, is not easily known. Some think they assembled there for purposes of devotion. Others, that they kept watch there during the night; and this is the most probable opinion, for they appear to have been in the same employment as those who assembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in the days of Samuel, who were abused by the sons of the high-priest Eli, 1 Sam. ii. 22. Among the ancients women were generally employed in the office of porters or doorkeepers. Such were employed about the house of the high-priest in our Lord's time; for a woman is actually represented as keeping the door of the palace of the high-priest, John xviii. 17: see also Matt. xxvi. 69. In 2 Sam. iv. 6, both the Septuagint and Vulgate make a woman porter or doorkeeper to Ishbosheth. They relieved each other, a troop or company regularly keeping watch: this seems to be implied in the original, tsabeu, they came by troops; and these troops successively consecrated their mirrors to the service of the tabernacle.

Verse 17. The hooks—and their fillets] The capitals, and the silver bands that went round them.

Verse 21. This is the sum of the tabernacle] That is, The foregoing account contains a detail of all the articles which 22 And <sup>b</sup> Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, made all that the LORD commanded Moses.

23 And with him was Aholiab, son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan, an engraver, and a cunning workman, and an embroiderer in blue, and in purple, and in scarlet, and fine linen.

24 All the gold that was occupied for the work, in all the work of the holy place, even the gold of the offering, was twenty and nine talents, and seven hundred and thirty shekels, after <sup>c</sup> the shekel of the sanctuary.

25 And the silver of them that were numbered of the congregation was an hundred talents, and a thousand seven hundred and threescore and fifteen shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary :

Bezaleel and Aholiab were commanded to make ; and which were reckoned up by the Levites, over whom Ithamar, the son of Aaron, presided.

Verse 21. All the gold that was occupied for the work, &c. To be able to ascertain the quantum and value of the gold, silver, and brass, which were employed in the tabernacle, and its different utensils, altars, &c., it will be necessary to enter into the subject in detail.

In the course of my notes on this and the preceding book, I have had frequent occasion to speak of the shekel in use among the Hebrews, which, following Dean Prideaux, I have always computed at 3s. English.

There were twenty-nine talents seven hundred and thirty shekels of GOLD ; one hundred talents one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels of SILVER ; and seventy talents two thousand four hundred shekels of BRASS.

If with Dean Prideaux we estimate the value of the silver shekel at three shillings English, we shall obtain the weight of the shekel by making use of the following proportion. As sixty-two shillings, the value of a pound weight of silver, as settled by the British laws, is to two hundred and forty, the number of pennyweights in a pound troy, so is three shillings, the value of a shekel of silver, to 11 dwts.  $14\frac{2}{3}$  grains, the weight of the shekel required.

In the next place, to find the value of a shekel of gold we must make use of the proportion following : As one ounce troy is to £3 17s. 10½d., the legal value of an ounce of gold, so is 11 dwts.  $14\frac{2}{3}$  grains, the weight of the shekel, as found by the last proportion, to £2 5s. 2½d., the value of the shekel of gold required. From this datum we shall soon be able to ascertain the value of all the gold employed in the work of this holy place, by the following arithmetical process : Reduce £2 5s. 2½d. to the lowest term mentioned, which is 201,852 ninety-third parts of a farthing. Multiply this last number by 3000, the number of shekels in a talent, and the product by 29, the number of talents ; and add in 730 times 201,852, on account of the 730 shekels which were above the 29 talents employed in the work, and we shall went to be numbered, from twenty years old and upward, for 'six hundred thousand, and three thousand, and five hundred and fifty men.

27 And of the hundred talents of silver were cast <sup>a</sup> the sockets of the sanctuary, and the sockets of the veil ; an hundred sockets of the hundred talents, a talent for a socket.

28 And of the thousand seven hundred seventy and five shekels he made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters, and filleted them.

29 And the brass of the offering was seventy talents, and two thousand and four hundred shekels.

30 And therewith he made the sockets to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the brassen altar, and the brassen grate for it, and all the vessels of the altar.

31 And the <sup>b</sup> sockets of the court round about, and the sockets of the court gate, and all the pins of the tabernacle, and all the pins of the court round about.

have for the last product 17,708,475,960, which, divided successively by 93, 4, 12, and 20, will give £198,317 12s. 6d. for the total value of the gold employed in the tabernacle, &c.

The value of the silver contributed by 603,550 Israelites, at half a shekel or eighteen pence per man, may be found by an easy arithmetical calculation to amount to £45,206 5s.

The value of the brass at 1s. per pound will amount to £513 17s.

The gold of the holy place weighed 4245 pounds.

The silver of the tabernacle 14,602 pounds.

The brass 10,277 pounds troy weight.

The total value of all the gold, silver, and brass of the tabernacle will consequently amount to £244,127 14s. 6d.

And the total weight of all these three metals amounts to 29,124 pounds troy, which, reduced to avoirdupois weight, is nearly ten tons and a half. When all this is considered, besides the quantity of gold which was employed in the golden calf, and which was all destroyed, it is no wonder that the sacred text should say the Hebrews spoiled the Egyptians, particularly as in those early times the precious metals were probably not very plentiful in Egypt.

Verse 26. A bekah for every man] The Hebrew word beka, from baka, to divide, separate into two, seems to signify, not a particular coin, but a shekel broken or cut in two ; so, anciently, our farthing was a penny divided in the midst, and then subdivided, so that each division contained the fourth part of the penny ; hence its name fourthing or fourthling, since computed into farthing.

There appear to be three particular reasons why much riches should be employed in the construction of the tabernacle, &c. 1. To impress the people's minds with the glory and dignity of the Divine Majesty, and the importance of his service. 2. To take out of their hands the occasion of covetousness. 3. To prevent pride and vain-glory, by leading them to give up to the divine service even the ornaments of their persons, which would have had too direct a tendency to divert their minds from better things.

Bezaleel makes the cloths of service for the holy place, and the holy garments, 1. The ephod, 2. Gold is beaten into plates, and cut into wires for embroidery, 3. He makes the shoulder-pieces of the ephod, 4. The curious girdle, 5. Cuts the onyx stones for the shoulder-pieces, 6. Makes the breast-plate, its chains,ouches, rings, &c., 7-21. The robe of the ephod, 22-26. Coats of fine linen, 27. The mitre, 28. The girdle, 29. The plate of the holy crown, 30, 31. The completion of the work of the tabernacle, 32. All the work is brought unto Moses, 33-41. Moses, having examined the whole, finds every thing done as the Lord had commanded, in consequence of which he blesses the people, 42, 43.

AND of the blue, and purple, and scarlet, they made <sup>b</sup> cloths of service, to do service in the holy place, and made the holy garments for Aaron; <sup>c</sup> as the Lord commanded Moses.

2 <sup>d</sup> And he made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen,

3 And they did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires, to work it in the blue, and in the purple, and in the scarlet, and in the fine linen, with cunning work.

4 They made shoulder-pieces for it, to couple it together: by the two edges was it coupled together.

5 And the curious girdle of his ephod, that was upon it, was of the same, according to the work thereof; of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen; as the Lord commanded Moses.

6 <sup>e</sup> And they wrought onyx stones inclosed in ouches of gold, graven, as signets are graven, with the names of the children of Israel.

7 And he put them on the shoulders of the ephod, that they should be stones for a <sup>f</sup> memorial to the children of Israel; as the Lord commanded Moses.

8 <sup>g</sup> And he made the breastplate of cunning work like the work of the ephod: of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 It was foursquare; they made the breastplate double: a span was the length thereof, and a span the breadth thereof, being doubled.

10 <sup>h</sup> And they set it in four rows of stones: the first row was a <sup>i</sup> sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this was the first row.

11 And the second row, an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond.

12 And the third row, a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst.

13 And the fourth row, a beryl, an onyx, and a jasper: they were inclosed in ouches of gold in their inclosings.

14 And the stones were according to the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet, every one with his name, according to the twelve tribes.

15 And they made upon the breastplate chains at the ends, of wreathen work of pure gold.

16 And they made two ouches of gold, and two gold rings, and put the two rings in the two ends of the breastplate.

17 And they put the two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings on the ends of the breastplate.

18 And the two ends of the two wreathen chains they fastened in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod before it.

19 And they made two rings of gold, and put them on the two ends of the breastplate, upon the border of it, which was on the side of the ephod inward.

20 And they made two other golden rings, and put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the forepart of it, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod.

21 And they did bind the breastplate by his rings unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it might be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breastplate might not be loosed from the ephod: as the Lord commanded Moses.

22 <sup>j</sup> And he made the robe of the ephod of woven work, all of blue.

23 And there was an hole in the midst of the robe, as the hole of an habergeon, with a band round about the hole, that it should not rend.

24 And they made upon the hems of the robe pomegranates of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and twined linen.

25 And they made <sup>k</sup> bells of pure gold, and put the bells between the pomegranates upon the hem of the robe, round about between the pomegranates;

26 A bell and a pomegranate, a bell and a pomegranate, round about the hem of the robe to minister in, as the Lord commanded Moses.

27 <sup>l</sup> And they made coats of fine linen of woven work for Aaron, and for his sons,

28 <sup>m</sup> And a mitre of fine linen, and goodly bonnets of fine linen, and <sup>n</sup> linen breeches of fine twined linen, 29 <sup>o</sup> And a girdle of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, of needlework; as the Lord commanded Moses.

30 <sup>p</sup> And they made the plate of the holy crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing, like to the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

31 And they tied unto it a lace of blue, to fasten it on high upon the mitre; as the Lord commanded Moses.

32 Thus was all the work of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation finished: and the children of Israel did <sup>q</sup> according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so did they.

33 And they brought the tabernacle unto Moses, the tent, and all his furniture, his tables, his boards, his bars, and his pillars, and his sockets.

34 And the covering of rams' skins dyed red, and the covering of badgers' skins, and the veil of the covering.

Verse 8. They did beat the gold into thin plates] For the purpose, as it is supposed, of cutting it into wires or threads; for to twist or twine is the common acceptance of the root pathal. I cannot suppose that the Israelites had not then the art of making gold thread, as they possessed several ornamental arts much more difficult: but in the present instance, figures made in a more solid form than that which could have been effected by gold thread, might have been required.

Verse 6. Onyx stones] Possibly the Egyptian pebble.

Verse 23. As the hole of an habergeon] The habergeon or hauberk was a small coat of mail, something in the form of a half shirt, made of small iron rings curiously united together. It covered the neck and breast, was very light, and resisted the stroke of a sword. Sometimes it went over the whole head as well as over the breast. This kind of defensive armour was used among the Asiatics, particularly the ancient Persians, among whom it is still worn. It seems to have been borrowed from the Asiatics by the Norman crusaders.

Verse 30. The holy crown of pure gold] On Asiatic monuments, particularly those that appear in the ruins of Persopolis and on many Egyptian monuments, the priests are represented as wearing crowns or tiaras, and sometimes their heads are crowned with laurel.

Verse 32. Did according to all that the Lord commanded Moses] This refers to the command given chap. xxv. 40; and Moses has taken care to repeat every thing in the most circumstantial detail, to show that he had conscientiously observed all the directions he had received.

Verse 37. The lamps to be set in order] To be trimmed and fresh oiled every day, for the purpose of being lighted in the evening.

Verse 43. And Moses did look upon all the work] As being the general superintendent of the whole, under whom Bezaleel and Aholiab were employed, as the other workmen were under them.

They had done it as the Lord had commanded] Exactly according to the pattern which Moses received from the Lord, and which he laid before the workmen to work by.

And Moses blessed them.] Gave them that praise which was due to their skill, diligence, and fidelity. See a fine instance of ancient courtesy between masters and their servants, in the case of Boaz and his reapers, Ruth ii. 4. It is however very probable that Moses prayed to God in their behalf, that they might be prospered in all their undertakings, saved from every evil, and be brought at last to the inheritance that fadeth not away. This blessing seems to have been given, not only to the workmen, but to all the people. The people contributed liberally, and the workmen wrought faithfully, and the blessing of God was pronounced upon ALL.

The promptitude, cordiality, and dispatch used in this business cannot be too highly commended, and are worthy of the imitation of all who are employed in any way in the service of God. The prospect of having God to dwell among them inflamed every heart, because they well knew that on this depended their prosperity and salvation. They therefore hastened to build him a house, and they spared no expence or skill to make it, as far as a house made with hands could be, worthy of that Divine Majesty who had promised to take up his residence in it. This tabernacle, like the temple, was a type of the human nature of the Lord Jesus; that was a shrine not made with hands, formed by God himself, and worthy of that fulness of the Deity that dwelt in it.

41 The cloths of service, to do service in the holy place, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and his sons' garments, to minister in the priest's office.

42 According to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so the children of Israel <sup>b</sup> made all the work.

43 And Moses did look upon all the work, and, behold, they had done it as the Lord had commanded, even so had they done it: and Moses <sup>c</sup> blessed them.

It is scarcely possible to form an adequate opinion of the riches, costly workmanship, and splendour of the tabernacle; and who can adequately conceive the glory and excellence of that human nature in which the fulness of the Godhead bodily dwelt? That this tabernacle typified the human nature of Christ, and the divine shechinah that dwelt in it the Deity that dwelt in the man Christ Jesus, the words of St. John sufficiently prove: John i. 1, 14. And hence the Evangelist adds, And we beheld his glory; as the Israelites beheld the glory of God resting on the tabernacle, so did the disciples of Christ see the divine glory resting on him, and shewing itself forth in all his words, spirit, and works. And for what purpose was the tabernacle erected? That God might dwell in it among the children of Israel. And for what purpose was the human nature of Christ so miraculously produced? That the Godhead might dwell in it; and that God and man might be reconciled through this wonderful economy of divine grace, God being in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, 2 Cor. v. 19. And what was implied by this reconciliation? The union of the soul with God, and the indwelling of God in the soul. Reader, has God yet filled thy tabernacle with his glory?

CHAPTER XL.

Moses is commanded to set up the tabernacle, the first day of the first month of the second year of their departure from Egypt, 1, 2. The ark to be put into it, 3. The table and candlestick to be brought in also, with the golden altar, 4, 5. The altar of burnt-offering to be set up before the door, and the laver between the tent and the altar, 6, 7. The court to be set up, 8. The tabernacle and its utensils to be anointed, 9-11. Aaron and his sons to be washed, clothed, and anointed, 12-15. All these things are done accordingly, 16. The tabernacle is erected; and all its utensils, &c., placed in it on the first of the first month of the second year, 17-33. The cloud covers the tent, and the glory of the Lord fills the tabernacle, so that even Moses is not able to enter, 34, 35. When they were to journey, the cloud was taken up; when to encamp, the cloud rested on the tabernacle, 36, 37. A cloud by day and a fire by night was upon the tabernacle, in the sight of all the Israelites, through the whole course of the journeyings, 38.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 On the first day of the <sup>a</sup> first month shalt thou set up <sup>b</sup> the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

3 And <sup>c</sup> thou shalt put therein the ark of the testimony, and cover the ark with the veil.

order <sup>f</sup> the things that are to be set in order upon it; <sup>g</sup> and thou shalt bring in the candlestick, and light the lamps thereof.

5 <sup>h</sup> And thou shalt set the altar of gold for the incense before the ark of the testimony, and put the hanging of the door to the tabernacle.

as the work was finished about the end of the first year of their exodus (for it was set up the first day of the second year), that therefore they had spent about six months in before the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

7 And <sup>a</sup>thou shalt set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and shalt put water therein.

8 And thou shalt set up the court round about, and hang up the hanging at the court gate.

9 And thou shalt take the anointing oil, and <sup>b</sup>anoint the tabernacle, and all that is therein, and hallow it, and all the vessels thereof: and it shall be holy.

10 And thou shalt anoint the altar of the burnt-offering, and all his vessels, and sanctify the altar: and <sup>c</sup>it shall be an altar <sup>d</sup>most holy.

11 And thou shalt anoint the laver and his foot, and sanctify it.

12 <sup>e</sup>And thou shalt bring Aaron and his sons unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and wash them with water.

13 And thou shalt put upon Aaron the holy garments, <sup>f</sup>and anoint him, and sanctify him; that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

14 And thou shalt bring his sons, and clothe them with coats:

15 And thou shalt anoint them, as thou didst anoint their father, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office: for their anointing shall surely be <sup>g</sup>an everlasting priesthood throughout their generations.

16 Thus did Moses: according to all that the Lord commanded him, so did he.

17 And it came to pass in the first month in the second year, on the first day of the month, that the <sup>h</sup>tabernacle was reared up.

18 And Moses reared up the tabernacle, and fastened his sockets, and set up the boards thereof, and put in the bars thereof, and reared up his pillars.

19 And he spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle, and put the covering of the tent above upon it; as the Lord commanded Moses.

making it: so that the tabernacle was erected one year all but fifteen days, after they had left Egypt. Such a building, with such a profusion of curious and costly workmanship, was never got up in so short a time. But it was the work of the Lord, and the people did service as unto the Lord; for the people had a mind to work.

Verse 4. Thou shalt bring in the table, and set in order the things, &c. That is, Thou shalt place the twelve loaves upon the table in the order before mentioned.

Verse 15. For their anointing shall surely be an everlasting priesthood. By this anointing a right was given to Aaron and his family to be high-priests among the Jews for ever; so that all who should be born of this family should have a right to the priesthood without the repetition of this unction, as they should enjoy this honour in their father's right, who had it by a particular grant from God. But it appears that the high-priest on his consecration did receive the holy unction; see Lev. iv. 3, vi. 22, xxi. 10. And this continued till the destruction of the first temple, and the Babylonish captivity; and according to Eusebius, Cyril of Jerusalem, and others, this custom continued among the Jews to the advent of our Lord, after which there is no evidence it was ever practised. The Jewish high-priest was a type of Him who is called the high-priest over the house of God, Heb. x. 21; and when he came, the functions of the other necessarily ceased. This case is worthy of observation. The Jewish sacrifices were never resumed after the destruc-

20 And he took and put <sup>1</sup>the testimony into the ark, and set the staves on the ark, and put the mercy-seat above upon the ark:

21 And he brought the ark into the tabernacle, and <sup>2</sup>set up the veil of the covering, and covered the ark of the testimony; as the Lord commanded Moses.

22 <sup>3</sup>And he put the table in the tent of the congregation, upon the side of the tabernacle northward, without the veil.

23 <sup>4</sup>And he set the bread in order upon it before the Lord; as the Lord had commanded Moses.

24 <sup>5</sup>And he put the candlestick in the tent of the congregation, over against the table, on the side of the tabernacle southward.

25 And <sup>6</sup>he lighted the lamps before the Lord: as the Lord commanded Moses.

26 <sup>7</sup>And he put the golden altar in the tent of the congregation before the veil:

27 <sup>8</sup>And he burnt sweet incense thereon; as the Lord commanded Moses.

28 <sup>9</sup>And he set up the hanging at the door of the tabernacle.

29 <sup>10</sup>And he put the altar of burnt-offering by the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation, and <sup>11</sup>offered upon it the burnt-offering and the meat-offering; as the Lord commanded Moses.

30 <sup>12</sup>And he set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and put water there, to wash withal.

31 And Moses, and Aaron and his sons, washed their hands and their feet thereat:

32 When they went into the tent of the congregation, and when they came near unto the altar, they washed; <sup>13</sup>as the Lord commanded Moses.

33 <sup>14</sup>And he reared up the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, and set up the hanging of the court gate. So Moses finished the work.

34 <sup>15</sup>Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle.

tion of their city and temple, for they hold it unlawful to sacrifice any where out of Jerusalem; and the unction of their high-priests ceased from that period also; and why? Because the true priest and the true sacrifice were come, and the types of course were no longer necessary after the manifestation of the antitype.

Verse 19. He spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle. By the tent, in this and several other places, we are to understand the coverings made of rams' skins, goats' hair, &c., which were thrown over the building; for the tabernacle had no other kind of roof.

Verse 20. And put the testimony into the ark. That is, the two tables on which the ten commandments had been written.

Verse 34. Then a cloud covered the tent. Thus God gave his approbation of the work; and as this was visible, so it was a sign to all the people that Jehovah was among them.

And the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. How this was manifested we cannot tell; it was probably by some light or brightness which was insufferable to the sight, for Moses himself could not enter in because of the cloud and the glory, ver. 35. Precisely the same happened when Solomon had dedicated his temple, for it is said that the cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord; 1 Kings viii. 10, 11. Previously to this the cloud of the divine glory had rested 35 And Moses <sup>a</sup> was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon; and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

36 <sup>b</sup> And when the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle the children of Israel <sup>c</sup> went onward in all their journeys :

upon that tent or tabernacle which Moses had pitched without the camp, after the transgression in the matter of the molten calf; but now the cloud removed from that tabernacle and rested upon this one, which was made by the command and under the direction of God himself. And there is reason to believe that this tabernacle was pitched in the centre of the camp, all the twelve tribes pitching their different tents in a certain order around it.

Verse 38. For the cloud of the Lord was upon the tabernacle by day] This daily and nightly appearance was at once both a merciful providence and a demonstrative proof of the divinity of their religion; and these tokens continued with them throughout all their journeys; for, notwithstanding their frequently repeated disobedience and rebellion, God never withdrew these tokens of his presence from them till they were brought into the promised land. When, therefore, the tabernacle became fixed, because the Israelites had obtained their inheritance, this mark of the divine presence was no longer visible in the sight of all Israel, but appears to have been confined to the holy of holies, where it had its fixed residence upon the mercy-seat between the cherubim; and in this place continued till the first temple was destroyed, after which it was no more seen in Israel till God was manifested in the flesh.

As in the book of GENESIS we have God's own account of the commencement of the WORLD, the origin of nations, and the peopling of the earth; so in the book of EXODUS we have an account, from the same source of infallible truth, of the commencement of the Jewish CHURCH, and the means used by the endless mercy of God to propagate and continue his pure and undefiled religion in the earth, against which neither human nor diabolic power or policy have ever been able to prevail! The preservation of this religion, which has ever been opposed by the great mass of mankind, is a 37 But <sup>d</sup> if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not till the day that it was taken up.

38 For <sup>e</sup> the cloud of the LORD was upon the tabernacle by day, and fire was on it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeys.

standing proof of its divinity. As it has ever been in hostility against the corrupt passions of men, testifying against the world that its deeds were evil, these passions have ever been in hostility to it. Cunning and learned men have argued to render its authority dubious, and its tendency suspicious; whole states and empires have exerted themselves to the uttermost to oppress and destroy it; and its professed friends, by their conduct, have often betrayed it: yet, supported by the arm of God and its own intrinsic excellence, it lives and flourishes; and the river that makes glad the city of God has run down with the tide of time 5800 years, and is running on with a more copious and diffusive current.

We have seen how, by the miraculous cloud, all the movements of the Israelites were directed. They struck or pitched their tents, as it removed or became stationary. Every thing that concerned them was under the direction and management of God. But these things happened unto them for ensamples; and it is evident, from Isa. iv. 5, that all these things typified the presence and influence of God in his church, and in the souls of his followers. His church can possess no sanctifying knowledge, no quickening power, but from the presence and influence of his Spirit. By this influence all his followers are taught, enlightened, led, quickened, purified, and built up on their most holy faith; and without the indwelling of his Spirit, light, life, and salvation are impossible. These divine influences are necessary, not only for a time, but through all our journeys, ver. 38; through every changing scene of providence, and through every step in life. And these the followers of Christ are to possess, not by inference or inductive reasoning, but consciously. The influence is to be felt, and the fruits of it to appear as fully as the cloud of the Lord by day, and the fire by night, appeared in the sight of all the house of Israel.

PREFACE TO THE BOOK

LEVITICUS.

THE Greek Version of the SEPTUAGINT, and the VULGATE Latin, have given the title of LEVITICUS to the third book of the Pentateuch, and the name has been retained in almost all the modern Versions. The book was thus called because it treats principally of the laws and regulations of the Levites and priests in general. In Hobrew it is termed Vaiyikra, "And he called," which is the first word in the book, and which, as in preceding cases, became the running title to the whole. It contains an account of the ceremonies to be observed in the offering of burnt-sacrifices; meat, peace, and sin-offerings; the consecration of priests, together with the institution of the three grand national festivals of the Jews, the PASSOVER, PENTECOST, and TABERNACLES, with a great variety of other ecclesiastical matters. It seems to contain little more than the history of what passed during the eight days of the consecration of Aaron and his sons, though Archbishop Usher supposes that it comprises the history of the transactions of a whole month, viz., from April 21 to May 21, of the year of the world 2514, which answers to the first month of the second year after the departure from Egypt. As there are no data by which any chronological arrangement of the facts mentioned in it can be made, it would be useless to encumber the page with conjectures which, because uncertain, can answer no end to the serious reader for doctrine, reproof, or edification in righteousness. As the law was our schoolmaster unto Christ, the whole sacrificial system was intended to point out that Lamb of God, Christ Jesus, who takes away the sin of the world. In reading over this book, this point should be kept particularly in view, as without this spiritual reference, no interest can be excited by a perusal of the work.

THE THIRD BOOK OF MOSES,

CALLED

LEVITICUS.

CHAPTER I.

The Lord calls to Moses out of the tabernacle, and gives him directions concerning burnt-offerings of the beeve kind, 1, 2. The burnt-offering to be a male without blemish, 3. The person bringing it to lay his hands upon its head, that it might be accepted for him, 4. He is to kill, flay, and cut it in pieces, and bring the blood to the priests, that they might sprinkle it round about the altar, 5, 6. All the pieces to be laid upon the altar and burnt, 7-9. Directions concerning offerings of the SMALLER CATTLE, such as sheep and goats, 10-13. Directions concerning offerings of FOWLS, such as doves and pigeons, 14-17.

AND the LORD <sup>a</sup>called unto Moses, and spake unto him <sup>b</sup>out of the tabernacle of the congregation, saying,

<sup>2</sup> Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, <sup>c</sup>If any man of you bring an offering unto the LORD, ye shall bring your offering of the cattle, even of the herd, and of the flock.

<sup>3</sup> If this offering be a burnt-sacrifice of the herd, let him offer a male <sup>d</sup>without blemish: he shall offer it of his own voluntary will at the door

Verso 1. And the Lord called unto Moses] From the manner in which this book commences, it appears plainly to be a continuation of the preceding; and indeed the whole is but one law, though divided into five portions, and why thus divided is not easy to be conjectured.

Previously to the erection of the tabernacle God had given no particular directions concerning the manner of offering the different kinds of sacrifices; but as soon as this divine structure was established and consecrated, Jehovah took it as his dwelling-place; described the rites and ceremonies which he would have observed in his worship, that his people might know what was best pleasing in his sight; and that, when thus worshipping him, they might have confidence that they pleased him, every thing being done according to his own directions. A consciousness of acting according to the revealed will of God, gives strong confidence to an upright mind.

Verso 2. Bring an offering] The word korban, from karab, to approach or draw near, signifies an offering or gift by which a person had access unto God: and this receives light from the universal custom that prevails in the East, no man being permitted to approach the presence of a superior without a present or gift; and the offering thus brought was called korban, which properly means the introduction-offering, or offering of access.

Of the cattle] Habbehemah, animals of the beeve kind, such as the bull, heifer, bullock, and calf; and restrained to these alone by the term herd, bakar, which from its general use in the Levitical writings, is known to refer to the ox, heifer, &c. And therefore other animals of the beeve kind were excluded.

Of the flock.] The animals mentioned in this chapter as proper for sacrifice are the very same which God commanded Abraham to offer; see Gen. xv. 9. And thus it is evident that God delivered to the patriarchs an epitome of that law which was afterwards given in detail to Moses, the essence of which consisted in its sacrifices; and those sacrifices were of clean animals, the most perfect, useful, and healthy, of all that are brought under the immediate government and influence of man. Gross-feeding and ferocious animals were all excluded, as were also all birds of prey. In the pagan worship it was widely different; for although the ox was esteemed among them, according to Livy, as the major hostia; and according to Pliny "the chief sacrifice, and the most availing offering that could be made to the gods;" yet obscene fowls and ravenous beasts, according to the nature of their deities, were frequently offered in sacrifice. Thus they sacrificed horses to the SUN, wolves to MARS, asses to PRIAPUS, swine to CERES, dogs to HECATE, &c., &c. But in the worship of God all these were declared unclean, and only the three following kinds of QUADRUPEDS were commanded to be sacrificed: 1. The bull or ox, the cow or heifer, and the calf. 2. The he-goat, she-goat, and the kid. 3. The ram, the ewe, and the lamb. Among FOWLS, only pigeons and turtle-doves were commanded to be offered, except in the case of cleansing the leper mentioned chap. xiv. 4, where two clean birds, generally supposed to be sparrows, or other small birds, though of what species is not well known, are specified. Fish were not offered, because they could not be readily brought to the tabernacle alive.

Verso 3. Burnt-sacrifice] The most important of all the sacrifices offered to God; it was wholly consumed, which was not the case in any other offering.

His own voluntary will] Lirtsono, to gain himself acceptance before the Lord: in this way all the Versions appear to have understood the original words, and the connexion in which they stand obviously requires this meaning. [Literally "for good pleasure for him," i.e. the offerer.]

of the tabernacle of the congregation before the LORD.

4 * And he shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering; and it shall be <sup>b</sup> accepted for him <sup>c</sup> to make atonement for him.

5 And he shall kill the <sup>d</sup> bullock before the LORD: * and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall bring the blood, <sup>e</sup> and sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar, that is by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

6 And he shall flay the burnt-offering, and cut it into his pieces.

7 And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire upon the altar, and <sup>f</sup> lay the wood in order upon the fire.

8 And the priests, Aaron's sons, shall lay the parts, the head, and the fat, in order upon the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar.

9 But his inwards and his legs shall he wash in water: and the priest shall burn all on the altar, to be a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a <sup>g</sup> sweet savour unto the LORD.

10 And if his offering be of the flocks, namely, of the sheep, or of the goats, for a burnt-sacrifice; he shall bring it a male <sup>h</sup> without blemish.

11 * And he shall kill it on the side of the altar northward before the LORD: and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall sprinkle his blood round about upon the altar:

12 And he shall cut it into his pieces, with his head and his fat: and the priest shall lay them in order on the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar.

13 But he shall wash the inwards and the legs with water: and the priest shall bring it all, and burn it upon the altar: it is a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

14 And if the burnt-sacrifice for his offering to the LORD be of fowls, then he shall bring his offering of <sup>i</sup> turtle-doves, or of young pigeons.

15 And the priests shall bring it unto the altar, and <sup>j</sup> wring off his head, and burn it on the altar; and the blood thereof shall be wrung out at the side of the altar.

16 And he shall pluck away his crop with <sup>k</sup> his feathers, and cast it <sup>l</sup> beside the altar on the east part, by the place of the ashes.

17 And he shall cleave it with the wings thereof, but <sup>m</sup> shall not divide it asunder: and the priest shall burn it upon the altar, upon the wood that is upon the fire: <sup>n</sup> it is a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

Verse 4. He shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering] By the imposition of hands the person bringing the victim acknowledged, 1. The sacrifice as his own. 2. That he offered it as an atonement for his sins. 3. That he was worthy of death because he had sinned, having forfeited his life by breaking the law. 4. That he entreated God to accept the life of the innocent animal in place of his own. 5. And all this, to be done profitably, must have respect to HIM whose life, in the fulness of time, should be made a sacrifice for sin. 6. The blood was to be sprinkled round about upon the altar, ver. 5, as by the sprinkling of blood the atonement was made; for the blood was the life of the beast, and it was always supposed that life went to redeem life. Almost all the people of the earth had their burnt-offerings, on which also they placed the greatest dependence. It was a general maxim through the heathen world, that there was no other way to appease the incensed gods; and they sometimes even offered human sacrifices, from the supposition that life was necessary to redeem life, and that the gods would be satisfied with nothing less.

Verse 6. He shall flay] Probably meaning the person who brought the sacrifice, who, according to some of the rabbins, killed, flayed, cut up, and washed the sacrifice, and then presented the parts and the blood to the priest, that he might burn the one, and sprinkle the other upon the altar. But it is certain that the priests also, and the Levites, flayed the victims, and the priest had the skin to himself; see chap. vii. 8, and 2 Chron. xxix. 34. The red heifer alone was not flayed, but the whole body, with the skin, &c., consumed with fire. See Num. xix. 5.

Verse 7. Put fire] The fire that came out of the tabernacle from before the LORD, and which was kept perpetually burning; see chap. ix. 24. Nor was it lawful to use any other fire in the service of God. See the case of Nadab and Abihu, chap. x.

Verse 8. The priests—shall lay the parts] The sacrifice was divided according to its larger joints. 1. After its blood was poured out, and the skin removed, the head was cut off. 2. They then opened it and took out the omentum, or caul, that invests the intestines. 3. They took out the intestines with the mesentery, and washed them well, as also the fat. 4. They then placed the four quarters upon the altar, covered them with the fat, laid the remains of the intestines upon them, and then laid the head above all.

5. The sacred fire was then applied, and the whole mass was consumed. This was the holocaust, or complete burnt-offering.

Verse 9. An offering—of a sweet savour] A fire-offering, an odour of rest, or, as the Septuagint express it, "a sacrifice for a sweet-smelling savour;" which place St. Paul had evidently in view when he wrote Eph. v. 2; where he uses the same terms as the Septuagint. Hence we find that the holocaust, or burnt-offering, typified the sacrifice and death of Christ for the sins of the world.

Verse 16. Pluck away his crop with his feathers] In this sacrifice of fowls the head was violently wrung off, then the blood was poured out, then the feathers were plucked off, the breast was cut open, and the crop, stomach, and intestines taken out, and then the body was burnt. Though the bird was split up yet it was not divided asunder. This circumstance is particularly remarked in Abram's sacrifice, Gen. xv. 10. [The word rendered "feathers" should be feces or excrement.]

We have already seen, on ver. 2, that four kinds of animals might be made burnt-offerings to the LORD. All these must be without spot or blemish—the most perfect of their respective kinds, and be wholly consumed by fire. The RICH were to bring the most costly; the POOR, those of least price. Even in this requisition of justice how much mercy was mingled! If a man could not bring a bullock or a heifer, a goat or a sheep, let him bring a calf, a kid, or a lamb. If he could not bring any of these because of his poverty, let him bring a turtle-dove or a young pigeon (see chap. v. 7); and it appears that in cases of extreme poverty, even a little meal or fine flour was accepted by the bountiful LORD as a sufficient oblation; see chap. v. 11. This brought down the benefits of the sacrificial service within the reach of the poorest of the poor; as we may take for granted that every person, however low in his circumstances, might be able to provide the tenth part of an ephah, about three quarts of meal, to make an offering for his soul unto the LORD. But every man must bring something; the law stooped to the lowest circumstances of the poorest of the people, but every man must sacrifice, because every man had sinned. Reader, what sort of a sacrifice dost thou bring to God? Has he the refuse of thy time, and the offal of thy estate? God requires thee to sacrifice as his providence has blessed thee. If thou have much, thou shouldst give liberally to God and the poor; if thou have but little, do thy diligence to give of that little. God's justice requires a measure of that which his mercy has bestowed. But remember that as thou hast sinned, thou needest a Saviour. Jesus is that lamb without spot which has been offered to God for the sin of the world, and which thou must offer to him for thy sin; and it is only through

Him that thou canst be accepted, even when thou dedicatest thy whole body, soul, and substance to thy Maker. Even when we present ourselves a living sacrifice to God, we are accepted for his sake who carried our sins, and bore our sorrows. Thanks be to God, the rich and the poor have equal access unto him through the Son of his love, and equal right to claim the benefits of the great sacrifice!

CHAPTER II.

The meat-offering of flour with oil and incense, 1-3. The oblation of the meat-offering baked in the oven, and in the pan, 4-6. The meat offering baked in the frying-pan, 7-10. No leaven nor honey to be offered with the meat-offering, 11. The oblation of the first-fruits, 12. Salt to be offered with the meat-offering, 13. Green ears dried by the fire, and corn to be beaten out of full ears, with oil and frankincense, to be offered as a meat-offering of first-fruits, 14-16.

AND when any will offer <sup>a</sup>a meat-offering unto the LORD, his offering shall be of fine flour; and he shall pour oil upon it, and put frankincense thereon:

2 And he shall bring it to Aaron's sons the priests: and he shall take thereout his handful of the flour thereof, and of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof; and the priest shall burn <sup>b</sup>the memorial of it upon the altar, to be an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD:

3 And <sup>c</sup>the remnant of the meat-offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': <sup>d</sup>it is a thing most holy of the offerings of the LORD made by fire.

4 And if thou bring an oblation of a meat-offering baked in the oven, it shall be unleavened cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, or unleavened wafers <sup>e</sup>anointed with oil.

5 And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baked <sup>f</sup>in a pan, it shall be of fine flour unleavened, mingled with oil.

6 Thou shalt part it in pieces, and pour oil thereon: it is a meat-offering.

7 And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baked in the frying-pan, it shall be made of fine flour with oil.

8 And thou shalt bring the meat-offering that is made of these things unto the LORD: and when it is presented unto the priest, he shall bring it unto the altar.

9 And the priest shall take from the meat-offering <sup>a</sup>a memorial thereof, and shall burn it upon the altar: it is an <sup>b</sup>offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

10 And <sup>c</sup>that which is left of the meat-offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': it is a thing most holy of the offerings of the LORD made by fire.

Verse 1. Meat-offering] Calmet has remarked that there are five kinds of the minchah mentioned in this chapter, 1. Soleth, simple flour or meal, ver. 1. 2. Cakes and wafers, or whatever was baked in the oven, ver. 4. 3. Cakes baked in the pan, ver. 5. 4. Cakes baked on the frying-pan, or probably a gridiron, ver. 7. 5. Green ears of corn parched, ver. 14. All these were offered without honey or leaven, but accompanied with wine, oil, and frankincense. It is very likely that the minchah, in some or all of the above forms, was the earliest oblation offered to the Supreme Being, and probably was in use before sin entered into the world, and consequently before bloody sacrifices or piacular victims had been ordained. The minchah of green ears of corn dried by the fire, &c., was properly the gratitude-offering for a good seed-time, and the prospect of a plentiful harvest. This appears to have been the offering brought by Cain, Gen. iv. <sup>a</sup>; see the note there. The flour, whether of wheat, rice, barley, rye, or any other grain used for aliment, was in all likelihood equally proper; for in Num. v. 15, we find the flour of barley, or barley-meal, is called minchah. It is plain that in the institution of the minchah no animal was here included, though in other places it seems to include both kinds; but in general the minchah was not a bloody offering, nor used by way of atonement or expiation, but merely in a eucharistic way, expressing gratitude to God for the produce of the soil. It is such an offering as what is called natural religion might be reasonably expected to suggest: but alas! so far lost is man, that even thankfulness to God for the fruits of the earth must be taught by a divine revelation; for in the heart of man even the seeds of gratitude are not found, till sown there by the hand of divine grace.

Offerings of different kinds of grain, flour, bread, fruits, &c., are the most ancient among the heathen nations; and even the people of God have had them from the beginning of the world.

God, says Calmet, requires nothing here which was not in common use for nourishment; but he commands that these things should be offered with such articles as might give them the most exquisite relish, such as salt, oil, and wine, and that the flour should be of the finest and purest kind.

Verse 2. His handful of the flour] This was for a memorial, to put God in mind of his covenant with their fathers, and to recall to their mind his gracious conduct towards them and their ancestors.

In this case a handful only was burnt, the rest was reserved for the priest's use; but all the frankincense was burnt, because from it the priest could derive no advantage.

Verse 5. Baken in a pan] Supposed to be a flat iron plate, placed over the fire; such as is called a griddle in some countries.

Verse 7. The frying-pan] Supposed to be the same with that called by the Arabs a ta-jen, a shallow earthen vessel like a frying-pan, used not only to fry in, but for other purposes.

Verse 8. Thou shalt bring the meat-offering] It is likely that the person himself who offered the sacrifice brought it to the priest, and then the priest presented it before the Lord.

Verse 11. No meat-offering—shall be made with leaven] See the reason of this prohibition in the note on Exod. xii. 8.

Nor any honey] Because it was apt to produce acidity, as some think, when wrought up with flour paste; or rather because it was apt to gripe and prove purgative. This effect, which it has in most constitutions, was a sufficient reason why it should be prohibited here, as a principal part of all these offerings was used by the priests as a part of their ordi-the LORD, shall be made with <sup>a</sup> leaven, for ye shall burn no leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the LORD made by fire.

12 <sup>b</sup> As for the oblation of the first-fruits, ye shall offer them unto the LORD: but they shall not <sup>c</sup> be burnt on the altar for a sweet savour.

13 And every oblation of thy meat-offering <sup>d</sup> shalt thou season with salt: neither shalt thou suffer <sup>e</sup> the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering: 'with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt.

nary diet; and these offerings, being those of the poorer sort, were in greater abundance than most others. As leaven was forbidden because producing fermentation, it was considered a species of corruption, and was therefore used to signify hypocrisy, malice, &c., which corrupt the soul; it is possible that honey might have had a moral reference also, and have signified, as St. Jerome thought, carnal pleasures and sensual gratifications. Some suppose that the honey mentioned here was a sort of saccharine matter extracted from dates. Leaven and honey might be offered with the first-fruits, as we learn from the next verse; but they were forbidden to be burnt on the altar.

Verse 13. With all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt.] SALT was the opposite to leaven, for it preserved from putrefaction and corruption, and signified the purity and persevering fidelity that were necessary in the worship of God. Every thing was seasoned with it, to signify the purity and perfection that should be extended through every part of the divine service, and through the hearts and lives of God's worshippers. It was called the salt of the covenant of God, because as salt is incorruptible, so was the covenant made with Abram, Isaac, Jacob, and the patriarchs, relative to the redemption of the world by the incarnation and death of Jesus Christ. Among the heathens salt was a common ingredient in all their sacrificial offerings; and as it was considered essential to the comfort and preservation of life, and an emblem of the most perfect corporeal and mental endowments, so it was supposed to be one of the most acceptable presents they could make unto their gods, from whose sacrifices it was never absent.

half-ripe ears of wheat parched with fire is a species of food in use among the poor people of Palestine and Egypt to the present day. As God is represented as keeping a table among his people (for the tabernacle was his house, where he had the golden table, shew-bread, &c.), so he represents himself as partaking with them of all the aliments that were in use, and even sitting down with the poor to a repast on parched corn! We have already seen that these green ears were presented as a sort of eucharistical offering for the blessings of seed-time, and the prospect of a plentiful harvest. See the note on ver. 1; several other examples might be added here, but they are not necessary.

The command to offer salt with every oblation, which was punctually observed by the Jews, will afford the pious reader some profitable reflections. It is well known that salt has two grand properties. 1. It seasons and renders palatable the principal aliments used for the support of life. 2. It prevents putrefaction and decay. The covenant of God, that is, his agreement with his people, is called a covenant of salt, to denote, as we have seen above, its stable undecaying nature, as well as to point out its importance and utility in the preservation of the life of the soul. The grace of God by Christ Jesus is represented under the emblem of salt (see Mark ix. 49, Eph. iv. 29, Col. iv. 6), because of its relishing, nourishing, and preserving quality. Without it, no offering, no sacrifice, no religious service, no work even of charity and mercy can be acceptable in the sight of God. In all things we must come unto the Father THROUGH HIM. And from none of our sacrifices or services must this salt of the covenant of our God be lacking.

Verse 11. It is the food of the offering] We have already remarked that God is frequently represented as feasting with his people on the sacrifices they offered ; and because those sacrifices were consumed by that fire which was kindled from heaven, therefore they were considered as the food of that fire, or rather of the Divine Being who was represented by it.

Verse 12. A goat] Implying the whole species, he-goat, she-goat, and kid, as we have already seen.

Verse 17. That ye eat neither fat nor blood.] It is not likely that the fat should be forbidden in the same manner and in the same latitude as the blood. The blood was the life of the beast, and that was offered to make an atonement for their souls ; consequently, this was never eaten in all their generations ; but it was impossible to separate the fat from the flesh, which in many parts is so intimately intermixed with the muscular fibres ; but the blood, being contained in separate vessels, the arteries and veins, might with great ease be entirely removed by cutting the throat of the animal, which was the Jewish method. By the fat therefore mentioned here and in the preceding verse, we may understand any fat that exists in a separate or unmixed state, such as the omentum or caul, the fat of the mesentery, the fat on the kidneys, and whatever else of the internal fat was easily separable, together with the whole of the tail already described. And probably it was the fat of such animals only as were offered to God in sacrifice, that was unlawful to be eaten.

As all temporal as well as spiritual blessings come from God, he has a right to require that such of them should be dedicated to his service as he may think proper to demand. He required the most perfect of all the animals, and the best parts of these perfect animals. This he did, not that he needed any thing, but to show the perfection of his nature and the purity of his service. Had he condescended to receive the meanest animals and the meanest parts of animals as his offerings, what opinion could his worshippers have entertained of the perfection of his nature ? If such imperfect offerings were worthy of this God, then his nature must be only worthy of such offerings. It is necessary that every thing employed in the worship of God should be the most perfect of its kind that the time and circumstances can afford. As sensible things are generally the medium through which spiritual impressions are made, and the impression usually partakes of the nature of the medium through which these impressions are communicated ; hence every thing should not only be decent, but, as far as circumstances will admit, dignified, in the worship of God : the object of religious worship, the place in which he is worshipped, and the worship itself, should have the strongest and most impressive correspondence possible.

CHAPTER IV.

The law concerning the sin-offering for transgressions committed through ignorance, 1, 2. For the priest thus sinning, 3-12. For the sins of ignorance of the whole congregation, 13-21. For the sins of ignorance of a ruler, 22-26. For the sins of ignorance of any of the common people, 27-35.

Verse 2. If a soul shall sin through ignorance] That is, if any man shall do what God has forbidden, or leave undone what God has commanded, through ignorance of the law relative to these points ; as soon as the transgression or omission comes to his knowledge, he shall offer the sacrifice here prescribed, and shall not suppose that his ignorance is an excuse for his sin. He who, when his iniquity comes to his knowledge, refuses to offer such a sacrifice, sins obstinately and wilfully, and to him there remains no other sacrifice for sin—no other mode by which he can be reconciled to God, but he has a certain fearful looking for of judgment—which shall devour such adversaries ; and this seems the case to which the apostle alludes, Heb. x. 26, &c., in the words above quoted. There have been a great number of subtle questions started on this subject, both by Jews and Christians, but the above I believe to be the sense and spirit of the law.

Verse 3. If the priest that is anointed] Meaning, most probably, the high-priest. According to the sin of the people ; for although he had greater advantages than the people sin, which he hath sinned, <sup>a</sup>a young bullock without blemish, unto the LORD, for a sin-offering.

4 And he shall bring the bullock <sup>b</sup>unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the LORD; and shall lay his hand upon the bullock's head, and kill the bullock before the LORD.

5 And the priest that is anointed <sup>c</sup>shall take of the bullock's blood, and bring it to the tabernacle of the congregation.

6 And the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times before the LORD, before the veil of the sanctuary.

7 And the priest shall <sup>d</sup>put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before the LORD, which is in the tabernacle of the congregation; and shall pour <sup>e</sup>all the blood of the bullock at the bottom of the altar of the burnt-offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And he shall take off from it all the fat of the bullock for the sin-offering; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

9 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away,

10 <sup>f</sup>As it was taken off from the bullock of the sacrifice of peace-offerings: and the priest shall burn them upon the altar of the burnt-offering.

11 <sup>g</sup>And the skin of the bullock, and all his flesh, with his head, and with his legs, and his inwards, and his dung, 12 Even the whole bullock shall he carry forth <sup>h</sup>without the camp unto a clean place, <sup>i</sup>where the ashes are poured out, and <sup>j</sup>burn him on the wood with fire: <sup>k</sup>where the ashes are poured out shall he be burnt.

13 And <sup>l</sup>if the whole congregation of Israel sin through ignorance, <sup>m</sup>and the thing be hid from the eyes of the assembly, and they have done somewhat against any of the commandments of the LORD, concerning things which should not be done, and are guilty:

14 When the sin, which they have sinned against it, is known, then the congregation shall offer a young bullock for the sin, and bring him before the tabernacle of the congregation.

could have, in being more conversant with the law of God, yet it was possible even for him, in that time in which the word of God had not been fully revealed, to transgress through ignorance; and his transgression might have the very worst tendency, because the people might be thereby led into sin. Hence several critics understand this passage in this way, and translate it thus: If the anointed priest shall lead the people to sin; or, literally, if the anointed priest shall sin to the sin of the people; that is, so as to cause the people to transgress, the shepherd going astray, and the sheep following after him.

Verse 6. Seven times] The blood of this sacrifice was applied in three different ways: 1. The priest put his finger in it, and sprinkled it seven times before the veil, ver. 6. 2. He put some of it on the horns of the altar of incense. 3. He poured the remaining part at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offerings, ver. 7.

Verse 12. Without the camp] This was intended figuratively to express the sinfulness of this sin, and the availability of the atonement. The sacrifice, as having the sin of the priest transferred from himself to it by his confession and imposition of hands, was become unclean and abominable, and was carried, as it were, out of the Lord's sight;

15 And the elders of the congregation <sup>n</sup>shall lay their hands upon the head of the bullock before the LORD: and the bullock shall be killed before the LORD.

16 <sup>o</sup>And the priest that is anointed shall bring of the bullock's blood to the tabernacle of the congregation.

17 And the priest shall dip his finger in some of the blood, and sprinkle it seven times before the LORD, even before the veil.

18 And he shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar which is before the LORD, that is in the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall pour out all the blood at the bottom of the altar of the burnt-offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

19 And he shall take all his fat from him, and burn it upon the altar.

20 And he shall do with the bullock as he did <sup>p</sup>with the bullock for a sin-offering, so shall he do with this: <sup>q</sup>and the priest shall make an atonement for them, and it shall be forgiven them.

21 And he shall carry forth the bullock without the camp, and burn him as he burned the first bullock: it is a sin-offering for the congregation.

22 When a ruler hath sinned, and <sup>r</sup>done somewhat through ignorance against any of the commandments of the LORD his God, concerning things which should not be done, and is guilty;

23 Or <sup>s</sup>if his sin, wherein he hath sinned, come to his knowledge; he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a male without blemish:

24 And <sup>t</sup>he shall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, and kill it in the place where they kill the burnt-offering before the LORD: it is a sin-offering.

25 <sup>u</sup>And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out his blood at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering.

26 And he shall burn all his fat upon the altar, as <sup>v</sup>the fat of the sacrifice of peace-offerings: <sup>w</sup>and the priest shall make an atonement for him as concerning his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

from the tabernacle and congregation it must be carried without the camp, and thus its own offensiveness was removed, and the sin of the person in whose behalf it was offered (see Heb. xiii. 11-13).

Verse 13. If the whole congregation of Israel sin] This probably refers to some oversight in acts of religious worship, or to some transgression of the letter of the law, which arose out of the peculiar circumstances in which they were then found, such as the case mentioned 1 Sam. xiv. 32, &c.

The sacrifices and rites in this case were the same as those prescribed in the preceding, only here the elders of the congregation, i.e., three of the Sanhedrim, according to Maimonides, laid their hands on the head of the victim in the name of all the congregation.

Verse 22. When a ruler hath sinned] Under the term nasi, it is probable that any person is meant who held any kind of political dignity among the people, though the rabbins generally understand it of the king.

A kid of the goats was the sacrifice in this case, the rites nearly the same as in the preceding cases, only the fat was burnt as that of the peace-offering.

Verse 27. The common people] The people of the land, that is, any individual who was not a priest, king, or ruler against any of the commandments of the LORD, concerning things which ought not to be done, and be guilty;

28 Or *if his sin, which he hath sinned, come to his knowledge: then he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a female without blemish, for his sin which he hath sinned.

30 And the priest shall take of the blood thereof with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar.

among the people; any of the poor or ordinary sort. Any of these, having transgressed through ignorance, was obliged to bring a lamb or a kid, the ceremonies being nearly the same as in the preceding cases. The original may denote the very lowest of the people, the labouring or agricultural classes.

Such institutions as those which are detailed in this chapter could not be considered as terminating in themselves; they necessarily had reference to something of infinitely higher moment; in a word, they typified Him whose soul was made an offering for sin, Isa. liii. 10. And taken out of this reference they seem both absurd and irrational. It is obviously in reference to these innocent creatures being brought as sin-offerings to God for the guilty that St. Paul alludes 2 Cor. v. 21, where he says, He (God) made him to be sin (a sin-offering) for us who KNEW NO SIN, that we might be made the righteousness of God—holy and pure by the power and grace of God, in or through him. And it is worthy of remark, that the Greek word used by the apostle is the same by which the Septuagint, in more than fourscore places in the Pentateuch, translate the Hebrew word chattaah, sin, which in all those places our translation renders sin-offering. Even sins of ignorance cannot be unnoticed by a strict and holy law; these also need the great atonement: on which account we should often pray, with David, Cleanse thou me from secret faults! How little attention is paid to this solemn subject! Sins of this kind—sins committed sometimes ignorantly, and more frequently heedlessly, are permitted to accumulate in their number, and consequently in their guilt; and from this very circumstance we may often account for those painful desertions, as they are called, under which many comparatively good people labour. They have committed sins of ignorance or heedlessness, and have not offered the sacrifice which can alone avail in their behalf. How necessary in ten thousand cases is the following excellent prayer! "That it may please thee to give us true repentance; to forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances; and to endue us with the grace of thy Holy Spirit, to amend our lives according to thy HOLY WORD."—Litany.

Verse 1. If a soul sin] The case referred to here is that of a person who, being demanded by the civil magistrate to answer upon oath, refuses to tell what he knows concerning the subject; such an one shall bear his iniquity—shall be considered as guilty, in the sight of God, of the transgression which he has endeavoured to conceal, and must expect to be punished by him for hiding the iniquity to which he was privy.

Verse 2. Any unclean thing] Either the dead body of a clean animal, or the living or dead carcase of any unclean creature. All such persons were to wash their clothes and themselves in clean water, and were considered as unclean till the evening. But if this had been neglected, they were obliged to bring a trespass-offering.

Verse 4. To do evil, or to do good] It is very likely that rash promises are here intended; for if a man vow to do an act that is evil, though it would be criminal to keep such an oath or vow, yet he is guilty because he made it, and therefore *to do evil, or <sup>b</sup> to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these.

5 And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things that he shall <sup>c</sup> confess that he hath sinned in that thing:

6 And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the LORD, for his sin which he hath sinned, a female from the flock, a lamb or a kid of the goats, for a sin-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his sin.

7 And <sup>c</sup> if he be not able to bring a lamb, then he shall bring for his trespass, which he hath committed, two <sup>d</sup> turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, unto the LORD; one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering.

8 And he shall bring them unto the priest, who shall offer that which is for the sin-offering first, and <sup>e</sup> wring off his head from his neck, but shall not divide it asunder:

9 And he shall sprinkle the blood of the sin-offering upon the side of the altar; and <sup>b</sup> the rest of the blood shall be wrung out at the bottom of the altar: it is a sin-offering.

10 And he shall offer the second for a burnt-offering, according to the <sup>f</sup> manner: <sup>g</sup> and the priest shall make an atonement for him for his sin which he hath sinned, and it shall be forgiven him.

11 But if he be not able to bring two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, then he that sinned shall bring for his offering the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a sin-offering; <sup>h</sup> he shall put no oil upon it, neither shall he put any frankincense thereon: for it is a sin-offering.

must offer the trespass-offering. If he neglect to do the good he has vowed, he is guilty, and must in both cases confess his iniquity, and bring his trespass-offering.

Verse 5. He shall confess that he hath sinned] Even restitution was not sufficient without this confession, because a man might make restitution without being much humbled; but the confession of sin has a direct tendency to humble the soul, and without humiliation there can be no salvation.

Verse 10. He shall offer the second for a burnt-offering] The pigeon for the burnt-offering was wholly consumed, it was the Lord's property; that for the sin-offering was the priest's property, and was to be eaten by him after its blood had been partly sprinkled on the side of the altar, and the rest poured out at the bottom of the altar.

Verse 11. Tenth part of an ephah] About three quarts. The ephah contained a little more than seven gallons and a half.

Verse 15. In the holy things of the Lord] This law seems to relate particularly to sacrilege, and defrauds in spiritual matters; such as the neglect to consecrate or redeem the first-born, the withholding of the first fruits, tithes, and such like; and, according to the rabbins, making any secular gain of divine things, keeping back any part of the price of things dedicated to God, or withholding what man had vowed to pay.

With thy estimation] The wrong done or the fraud committed should be estimated at the number of shekels it was worth, or for which it would sell. These the defrauder was to pay down, to which he was to add a fifth part more, and bring a ram without blemish for a sin-offering besides. There is an obscurity in the text, but this seems to be its meaning. [The estimate was originally made by Moses; afterwards by the officiating priest: chap. xxvii. 12.]

Verse 16. Shall make amends] Make restitution for the 12 Then he shall bring it to the priest, and the priest shall take his handful of it, <sup>a</sup> even a memorial thereof, and burn it on the altar, <sup>b</sup> according to the offerings made by fire unto the LORD: it is a sin-offering.

13 <sup>c</sup> And the priest shall make an atonement for him as touching his sin that he hath sinned in one of these, and it shall be forgiven him: and <sup>d</sup> the remnant shall be the priest's, as a meat-offering.

14 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

15 <sup>e</sup> If a soul commit a trespass, and sin through ignorance, in the holy things of the LORD; then <sup>f</sup> he shall bring for his trespass unto the LORD a ram without blemish out of the flocks, with thy estimation by shekels of silver, after the <sup>g</sup> shekel of the sanctuary, for a trespass-offering:

16 And he shall make amends for the harm that he hath done in the holy thing, and <sup>h</sup> shall add the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the priest: <sup>i</sup> and the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass-offering, and it shall be forgiven him.

17 And if a <sup>j</sup> soul sin, and commit any of these things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the LORD; <sup>k</sup> though he wist it not, yet is he <sup>l</sup> guilty, and shall bear his iniquity.

18 <sup>m</sup> And he shall bring a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, for a trespass-offering, unto the priest: <sup>n</sup> and the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his ignorance wherein he erred and wist it not, and it shall be forgiven him.

wrong he had done according to what is laid down in the preceding verse.

Verse 19. He hath certainly trespassed] And because he hath sinned, therefore he must bring a sacrifice. On no other ground shall he be accepted by the Lord. Reader, how dost thou stand in the sight of thy Maker?

When the infinite purity and strict justice of God are considered, the exceeding breadth of his commandment, our slowness of heart to believe, and our comparatively cold performance of sacred duties, no wonder that there is sinfulness found in our holy things; and at what a low ebb must the Christian life be found when this is the case! This is a sore and degrading evil in the church of God; but there is one even worse than this, that is, the strenuous endeavour of many religious people to reconcile their minds to this state of inexcusable imperfection, and defend it zealously on the supposition that it is at once both unavoidable and useful—unavoidable, for they think they cannot live without it; and useful, because they suppose it tends to humble them! The more inward sin a man has, the more pride he will feel; the less, the more humility. A sense of God's infinite kindness to us, and our constant dependence on him, will ever keep the soul in the dust. Sin can never be necessary to the maintenance or extension of the Christian life, it is the thing which Jesus Christ came into the world to destroy; and his name is called JESUS or Saviour, because he saves his people from their sins. Should any Christian refuse to offer up the following prayer to God? "Almighty God, unto whom all hearts be open, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love thee, and worthily magnify thy holy Name, through Christ our Lord. Amen."—The Liturgy.

CHAPTER VI.

Laws relative to detention of property intrusted to the care of another, to robbery, and deceit, 1, 2; finding of goods lost, keeping them from their owner, and swearing falsely, 3. Such a person shall not only restore what he has thus unlawfully gotten, but shall add a fifth part of the value of the property besides, 4, 5; and bring a ram without blemish, trespass-offering to the Lord, 6, 7. Laws relative to the burnt-offering and the perpetual fire, 8-13. Law of the meat-offering, and who may lawfully eat of it, 14-18. Laws relative to the offerings of Aaron and his sons and their successors, on the day of their anointing, 19-23. Laws relative to the sin-offering, and those who might eat of it, 24-30.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 If a soul sin, and <sup>a</sup>commit a trespass against the LORD, and <sup>b</sup>lie unto his neighbour in that <sup>c</sup>which was delivered him to keep, or in <sup>d</sup>fellowship, <sup>e</sup>or in a thing taken away by violence, or hath <sup>f</sup>deceived his neighbour;

3 Or <sup>g</sup>have found that which was lost, and lieth concerning it, and <sup>h</sup>swareth falsely; in any of all these that a man doeth, sinning therein:

4 Then it shall be, because he hath sinned, and is guilty, that he shall restore that which he took violently away, or the thing which he hath deceitfully gotten, or that which was delivered him to keep, or the lost thing which he found.

5 Or all that about which he hath sworn falsely; he shall even <sup>i</sup>restore it in the principal, and shall add the fifth part more thereto, and give it unto him to whom it appertaineth, <sup>j</sup>in <sup>k</sup>the day of his trespass-offering.

6 And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the LORD, <sup>l</sup>a ram without blemish out of the flock, Ch. xix. 12. Jer. vii. 9. Zech. v. 4.—<sup>i</sup> Ch. v. 16. Num. v. 7. 2 Sam. xii.

Verse 2. Lie unto his neighbour, &c.] This must refer to a case in which a person delivered his property to his neighbour to be preserved for him, and took no witness to attest the delivery of the goods; such a person therefore might deny that he had ever received such goods. On the other hand, a man might accuse his neighbour of detaining property which had never been confided to him, or, after having been confided, had been restored again; hence the law here is very cautious on these points: and because in many cases it was impossible to come at the whole truth without a direct revelation from God, which should in no common case be expected, the penalties are very moderate; for in such cases, even when guilt was discovered, the man might not be so criminal as appearances might intimate.

Verse 3. Have found that which was lost] The Roman lawyers laid it down as a sound maxim of jurisprudence, "That he who found any property, and applied it to his own use, should be considered as a thief, whether he knew the owner or not. On this subject every honest man must say, that the man who finds any lost property, and does not make all due inquiry to find out the owner should, in sound policy, be treated as a thief. In this kingdom, in the time of Alfred the Great, about A.D. 888, golden bracelets, hung up on the public roads, were untouched by the finger of rapine. One of Solon's laws was, Take not up what you laid not down. When all due inquiry is made, if no owner can be found, the lost property may be legally considered to be the property of the finder.

Verse 5. All that about which he hath sworn falsely] This supposes the case of a man who, being convicted by his own conscience, comes forward and confesses his sin.

Restore it in the principal] The property itself, if still remaining, or the full value of it, to which a fifth part more was to be added.

Verse 8. And the Lord spake unto Moses] The best edited Hebrew Bibles begin the sixth chapter at this verse.

Verse 9. This is the law of the burnt-offering] This law with thy estimation, for a trespass-offering unto the priest:

7 <sup>m</sup> And the priest shall make an atonement for him before the LORD: and it shall be forgiven him for any thing of all that he hath done in trespassing therein.

8 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

9 Command Aaron and his sons, saying, This is the law of the burnt-offering: It is the burnt-offering, <sup>n</sup>because of the burning upon the altar all night unto the morning: and the fire of the altar shall be burning in it.

10 <sup>o</sup> And the priest shall put on his linen garment, and his linen breeches shall he put upon his flesh, and take up the ashes which the fire hath consumed with the burnt-offering on the altar, and he shall put them <sup>p</sup>beside the altar.

11 And <sup>q</sup>he shall put off his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the ashes without the camp <sup>r</sup>unto a clean place.

12 And the fire upon the altar shall be burning properly refers to that burnt-offering which was daily made in what was termed the morning and evening sacrifice: and as he had explained the nature of this burnt-offering in general, with its necessary ceremonies, as far as the persons who brought them were concerned, he now takes up the same in relation to the priests who were to receive them from the hands of the offerer, and present them to the Lord on the altar of burnt-offerings.

Because of the burning upon the altar all night] If the burnt-offering were put all upon the fire at once, it could not be burning all night. We may therefore reasonably conclude that the priests sat up by turns the whole night, and fed the fire with portions of this offering till the whole was consumed, which they would take care to lengthen out till the time of the morning sacrifice. The same we may suppose was done with the morning sacrifice; it was also consumed by piecemeal through the whole day, till the time of offering the evening sacrifice. Thus there was a continual offering by fire unto the Lord; and hence in ver. 13 it is said: The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar, it shall never go out. If at any time any extraordinary offerings were to be made, the daily sacrifice was consumed more speedily, in order to make room for such extra offerings.

The Hebrew doctors teach that no sacrifice was ever offered in the morning before the morning sacrifice; and none, the passover excepted, ever offered in the evening after the evening sacrifice; for all sacrifices were made by daylight. The fat seems to have been chiefly burned in the night-season, for the greater light and convenience of keeping the fire alive, which could not be so easily done in the night as in the day-time.

Verse 11. And put on other garments] The priests approached the altar in their holiest garments; when carrying the ashes, &c., from the altar, they put on other garments, the holy garments being only used in the holy place.

Clean place.] A place where no dead carcases, dung, or filth of any kind was laid; for the ashes were holy, in it; it shall not be put out: and the priest shall burn wood on it every morning, and lay the burnt-offering in order upon it; and he shall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offerings.

13 The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar, it shall never go out.

14 And this is the law of the meat-offering: the sons of Aaron shall offer it before the LORD, before the altar.

15 And he shall take of it his handful of the flour of the meat-offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincense which is upon the meat-offering, and shall burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour, even the memorial of it, unto the LORD.

16 And the remainder thereof shall Aaron and his sons eat: with unleavened bread shall it be eaten in the holy place; in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they shall eat it.

17 It shall not be baked with leaven. I have given it unto them for their portion of my offerings made by fire; it is most holy, as is the sin-offering, and as the trespass-offering.

18 All the males among the children of Aaron shall eat of it. It shall be a statute for ever in your generations, concerning the offerings of the LORD made by fire: every one that toucheth them shall be holy.

19 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

20 This is the offering of Aaron and of his sons, which they shall offer unto the LORD in the day when he is anointed: the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat-offering perpetual, as being the remains of the offerings made by fire unto the LORD.

Vorse 13. The fire shall ever be burning] In imitation of this perpetual fire the ancient Persian Magi and their descendants, the Parsees, kept up a perpetual fire; the latter continue it to the present day. This is strictly enjoined in the Zend Avesta, which is a code of laws as sacred among them as the Pentateuch is among the Jews.

Vorse 15. His handful of the flour] An omer of flour, which was the tenth part of an ephah, and equal to about three quarts of our measure, was the least quantity that could be offered even by the poorest sort, and this was generally accompanied with a log of oil, which was a little more than half a pint. This quantity both of flour and oil might be increased at pleasure, but no less could be offered.

Vorse 20. In the day when he is anointed] Not only in that day, but from that day forward, for this was to them and their successors a statute for ever.

Vorse 23. For every meat-offering for the priest shall be wholly burnt] Whatever the priest offered was wholly the LORD's, and therefore must be entirely consumed: the sacrifices of the common people were offered to the LORD, but the priests partook of them: and thus they who ministered at the altar were fed by the altar. Had the priests been permitted to live on their own offerings as they did on those of the people, it would have been as if they had offered nothing, as they would have taken again to themselves what they appeared to give unto the LORD.

Vorse 25. In the place where the burnt-offering is killed, &c.] The north side of the altar.

Vorse 26. The priest—shall eat it] From the expostulation of Moses with Aaron, chap. x. 17, we learn that the priest, by eating the sin-offering of the people, was considered as bearing their sin, and typically removing it from them: and besides, this was a part of their maintenance, or what the scripture calls their inheritance; see Ezek. xlv. 27-30. This was afterwards greatly abused; for improper persons endeavoured to get into the priest's office merely half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night.

21 In a pan it shall be made with oil; and when it is baked, thou shalt bring it in: and the baked pieces of the meat-offering shalt thou offer for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

22 And the priest of his sons that is anointed in his stead shall offer it; it is a statute for ever unto the LORD; it shall be wholly burnt.

23 For every meat-offering for the priest shall be wholly burnt: it shall not be eaten.

24 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 25 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, saying, This is the law of the sin-offering: In the place where the burnt-offering is killed shall the sin-offering be killed before the LORD: it is most holy.

26 The priest that offereth it for sin shall eat it: in the holy place shall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

27 Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy: and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof on any garment, thou shalt wash that whereon it was sprinkled in the holy place.

28 But the earthen vessel wherein it is sodden shall be broken: and if it be sodden in a brazen pot, it shall be both scoured, and rinsed in water.

29 All the males among the priests shall eat thereof: it is most holy.

30 And no sin-offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation, to reconcile within in the holy place, shall be eaten: it shall be burnt in the fire.

that they might get a secular provision, which is a horrible profanity in the sight of God.

Vorse 28. The earthen vessel—shall be broken] This should be considered as implying the vessels brought by individuals to the court of the temple or tabernacle, and not of the vessels that belonged to the priests for the ordinary service. The people dressed their sacrifices sometimes in the court of the tabernacle; see 1 Sam. ii. 13, 14.

The perpetual meat-offering, the perpetual fire, and the perpetual burnt-offering, all cast much light on Heb. vii. 25, where it is said, Christ is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him; seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them; in which words there is a manifest allusion to the perpetual minchah, the perpetual fire, and the perpetual burnt-offering, mentioned here by Moses. As the minchah, or gratitude-offering, should be perpetual, so our gratitude for the innumerable mercies of God should be perpetual. As the burnt-offering must be perpetual, so should the sacrifice of our blessed Lord be considered as a perpetual offering, that all men, in all ages, should come unto God through him who is ever living, in his sacrificial character, to make intercession for men; and who is therefore represented even in the heavens as the Lamb just slain, standing before the throne, Rev. v. 6, Heb. i. 19-22. And as the fire on the altar must be perpetual, so should the influences of the Holy Spirit in every member of the church, and the flame of pure devotion in the hearts of believers, be ever energetic and permanent. A continual sacrifice for continual successive generations of sinners was essentially necessary. Continual influences of the Holy Spirit on the souls of men were essentially necessary to apply and render effectual this atonement, to the salvation of the soul. And incessant gratitude for the ineffable love of God, manifested by his unspeakable gift, is surely required of all those who have tasted that the LORD is gracious. Reader, dost thou feel thy obligations to thy Maker? Does the perpetual fire burn on the altar of thy heart? If not, of what benefit has the religion of Christ been to thee to the present day?

Conclusion of the laws and ordinances relative to burnt-offerings, meat offerings, sin-offerings, and peace-offerings, delivered in this and the preceding chapters, 37, 38.*

LIKEWISE <sup>a</sup>this is the law of the trespass-offering: <sup>b</sup>it is most holy.

2 <sup>c</sup>In the place where they kill the burnt-offering, shall they kill the trespass-offering: and the blood thereof shall he sprinkle round about upon the altar.

3 And he shall offer of it <sup>d</sup>all the fat thereof; the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards.

4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul that is above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away:

5 And the priest shall burn them upon the altar for an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is a trespass-offering.

6 <sup>e</sup>Every male among the priests shall eat thereof: it shall be eaten in the holy place: <sup>f</sup>it is most holy.

7 As the sin-offering is, so is <sup>g</sup>the trespass-offering: there is one law for them: the priest that maketh atonement therewith shall have it.

8 And the priest that offereth any man's burnt-offering, even the priest shall have to himself the skin of the burnt-offering which he hath offered.

9 And <sup>h</sup>all the meat-offering that is baked in the oven, and all that is dressed in the frying-pan, and <sup>i</sup>in the pan, shall be the priest's that offereth it.

10 And every meat-offering, mingled with oil, and dry, shall all the sons of Aaron have, one as much as another.

11 And <sup>j</sup>this is the law of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which he shall offer unto the Lord.

12 If he offer it for a thanksgiving, then he shall offer with the sacrifice of thanksgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers <sup>k</sup>anointed with oil, and cakes mingled with oil, of fine flour, fried.

13 Besides the cakes, he shall offer for his offering <sup>l</sup>leavened bread with the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace-offerings.

14 And of it he shall offer one out of the whole oblation for an heave-offering unto the Lord, <sup>m</sup>and it shall be the priest's that sprinkleth the blood of the peace-offerings.

Verse 4. The fat that is on them] Chiefly the fat that was found in a detached state, not mixed with the muscles; such as the omentum or caul, the fat of the mesentery, the fat about the kidneys, &c.

Verse 8. The priest shall have to himself the skin] Bishop Patrick supposes that this right of the priest to the skin commenced with the offering of Adam, "for it is probable," says he, "that Adam himself offered the first sacrifice, and had the skin given him by God to make garments for him and his wife; in conformity to which the priests ever after had the skin of the whole burnt-offerings for their portion."

Verse 15. He shall not leave any of it until the morning.]

15 <sup>a</sup>And the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offering for thanksgiving shall be eaten the same day that it is offered; he shall not leave any of it until the morning.

16 But <sup>b</sup>if the sacrifice of his offering be a vow, or a voluntary offering, it shall be eaten the same day that he offereth his sacrifice: and on the morrow also the remainder of it shall be eaten:

17 But the remainder of the flesh of the sacrifice on the third day shall be burnt with fire.

18 And if <sup>c</sup>any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings be eaten at all on the third day, it shall not be accepted, neither shall it be <sup>d</sup>imputed unto him that offereth it: it shall be an <sup>e</sup>abomination, and the soul that cateth of it shall bear his iniquity.

19 And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten; it shall be burnt with fire: and as for the flesh, all that be clean shall eat thereof.

20 But the soul that cateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings that pertain unto the Lord, <sup>f</sup>having his uncleanness upon him, even that soul <sup>g</sup>shall be cut off from his people.

21 Moreover the soul that shall touch any unclean thing, as <sup>h</sup>the uncleanness of man, or any <sup>i</sup>unclean beast, or any <sup>j</sup>abominable unclean thing, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which pertain unto the Lord, even that soul <sup>k</sup>shall be cut off from his people.

22 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, <sup>l</sup>Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, <sup>m</sup>Ye shall eat no manner of fat, of ox, or of sheep, or of goat.

24 And the fat of the <sup>n</sup>beast that dieth of itself, and the fat of that which is torn with beasts, may be used in any other use: but ye shall in no wise eat of it.

25 For whosoever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, even the soul that cateth it shall be cut off from his people.

26 <sup>o</sup>Moreover ye shall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast, in any of your dwellings.

Because in such a hot country it was apt to putrefy, and as it was considered to be holy, it would have been very improper to expose that to putrefaction which had been consecrated to the Divine Being.

fat they might eat, but the fat of those was sacred, because they were the only animals which were offered in sacrifice, though many others ranked among the clean animals as well as those. But it is likely that this prohibition is to be understood of these animals when offered in sacrifice, and then only in reference to the inward fat, as mentioned on ver. 4. Of the fat in any other circumstances it cannot be intended, as it was one of the especial blessings which God gave to the people.

Verse 27. Whatsoever soul—that eateth any manner of blood] Shall be cut off—excommunicated from the people of God, and so deprived of any part in their inheritance, and in their blessings.

Verse 29. Shall bring his oblation] Meaning those things which were given out of the peace-offerings to the Lord and to the priest.

Verse 33. In the wilderness of Sinai.] These laws were probably given to Moses while he was on the mount with God; the time was quite sufficient, as he was there with God not less than fourscore days in all; forty days at the giving, and forty days at the renewing of the law.

The following is a list of the different kinds of sacrifices to be offered, with a definition of the original terms, as well as of all others relative to this subject which are used in the Old Testament, and the reference in which they all stood to the great sacrifice offered by Christ.

1. ASHAM, TRESPASS-offering, from asham, to be guilty, or liable to punishment; for in this sacrifice the guilt was considered as being transferred to the animal offered up to God, and the offerer redeemed from the penalty of his sin, ver. 37. Christ is said to have made his soul an offering for sin, Isa. liii. 10.

2. ISHSEH, FIRE-offering, probably from ashash, to be grieved, angered, inflamed; either pointing out the distressing nature of sin, or its property of incensing divine justice against the offender, who, in consequence, deserving burning for his offence, made use of this sacrifice to be freed from the punishment due to his transgression.

3. HABHABIM, ITERATED or REPEATED offerings, from yahab, to supply. The word occurs only in Hos. viii. 13, and probably means no more than the continual repetition of the accustomed offerings, or continuation of each part, of the sacred service.

4. ZEBACH, a SACRIFICE, a creature slain in sacrifice, from zabach, to slay; hence the altar on which such sacrifices were offered was termed mizbeach, the place of sacrifice. Zebach is a common name for sacrifices in general.

5. CHAG, a festival, especially such as had a periodical return, from chagay, to celebrate a festival, to dance round and round in circles. The circular dance was probably intended to point out the revolution of the heavenly bodies, and the exact return of the different seasons.

have I taken of the children of Israel from off the sacrifices of their peace-offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the priest, and unto his sons, by a statute for ever, from among the children of Israel.

35 This is the portion of the anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his sons, out of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, in the day when he presented them to minister unto the LORD in the priest's office, 36 Which the LORD commanded to be given them of the children of Israel, <sup>b</sup> in the day that he anointed them, by a statute for ever throughout their generations.

37 This is the law <sup>c</sup> of the burnt-offering, <sup>d</sup> of the meat-offering, <sup>e</sup> and of the sin-offering, <sup>f</sup> and of the trespass-offering, <sup>g</sup> and of the consecrations, and <sup>h</sup> of the sacrifice of the peace-offerings,

38 Which the LORD commanded Moses in Mount Sinai, in the day that he commanded the children of Israel <sup>i</sup> to offer their oblations unto the LORD, in the wilderness of Sinai.

15. Num. xviii. 18, 19. Deut. xviii. 3.—<sup>b</sup> Ch. viii. 12, 30. Exod. xl. 13, 15.—<sup>c</sup> Ch. vi. 9.—<sup>d</sup> Ch. vi. 14.—<sup>e</sup> Ch. vi. 25.—<sup>f</sup> Ver. 1.—<sup>g</sup> Ch. vi. 20. Exod. xxix. 1.—<sup>h</sup> Ver. 11.—<sup>i</sup> Ch. i. 2.

6. CHATTATH and CHATTAH, SIN-offering, from chata, to miss the mark; it also signifies sin in general, and is a very apt term to express its nature by. A sinner is continually aiming at and seeking happiness; but as he does not seek it in God, hence the scripture represents him as missing his aim, or missing his mark. This is precisely the meaning of the Greek word, translated sin and sin-offering in our Version; and this is the term by which the Hebrew word is translated both by the Septuagint and the inspired writers of the New Testament. The sin-offering was at once an acknowledgment of guilt, and also of the firm purpose of the offerer to return to God.

7. COPHER, the EXPIATION or ATONEMENT, from capbar, to cover, to smear over, or obliterate, or annul a contract. Used often to signify the atonement or expiation made for the pardon or cancelling of iniquity.

8. MOED, an APPOINTED annual festival, from yaad, to appoint or constitute, signifying such feasts as were instituted in commemoration of some great event or deliverance, such as the deliverance from Egypt.

9. MILLUM, CONSECRATIONS or consecration-offerings, from mala, to fill; those offerings made in consecrations, of which the priests partook, or, in the Hebrew phrase, had their hands filled, or which had filled the hands of them that offered them.

10. MINCHAH, MEAT-offering, from nach, to rest, settle after toil. It generally consisted of things without life, such as green ears of corn, full ears of corn, flour, oil, and frankincense; and may be considered as having its name from that rest from labour and toil which a man had when the fruits of the autumn were brought in, or when, in consequence of obtaining any rest, ease, &c., a significant offering or sacrifice was made to God. The jealousy-offering (Num. v. 15) was a simple minchah, consisting of barley-meal only.

11. MESECH and MIMSACH, a MIXTURE-offering, or MIXED LIBATION, called a DRINK-offering, from masach, to mingle; it seems in general to mean old wine mixed with the lees, which made it extremely intoxicating. This offering does not appear to have had any place in the worship of the true God; but from Isa. lxxv. 11, and Prov. xxiii. 30, it seems to have been used for idolatrous purposes, such as the Bacchanalia among the Greeks and Romans, "when all got drunk in honour of the gods."

12. MASEETH, an OBLATION, things carried to the temple to be presented to God, from nasa, to bear or carry, to bear sin; typically, Exod. xxviii. 38, chap. x. 17, xvi. 21; really, Isa. liii. 4, 12. The sufferings and death of Christ were the true maseeth or vicarious bearing of the sins of mankind, as the passage in Isaiah above referred to sufficiently proves.

13. NEDABAH, FREE-WILL or voluntary offering, from nadab, to be free, liberal, princely. An offering not commanded, but given as a particular proof of extraordinary gratitude to God for especial mercies, or on account of some vow or engagement voluntarily taken, ver. 16.

14. NESECH, LIBATION or DRINK-offering, from nasach, to diffuse or pour out. Water or wine poured out at the conclusion or confirmation of a treaty or covenant. To this kind of offering there is frequent allusion and reference in the New Testament, as it typified the blood of Christ poured out for the sin of the world; and to this our Lord himself alludes in the institution of the holy Eucharist. The whole gospel economy is represented as a covenant or treaty between God and man, Jesus Christ being not only the mediator, but the covenant sacrifice, whose blood was poured out for the ratification and confirmation of this covenant or agreement between God and man.

15. OLAH, BURNT-offering, from alah, to ascend, because this offering, as being wholly consumed, ascended as it were to God in smoke and vapour. It was a very expressive type of the sacrifice of Christ, as nothing less than his complete and full sacrifice could make atonement for the sin of the world. In most other offerings the priest, and often the offerer, had a share, but in the whole burnt-offering all was given to God.

16. KETORETH, INCENSE or PERFUME offering, from katar, to burn, i.e. the frankincense, and other aromatics used as a perfume in different parts of the divine service. To this St. Paul compares the agreeableness of the sacrifice of Christ to God, Eph. v. 2: Christ hath given himself for us, an offering—to God for a SWEET-SMELLING savour. From Rev. v. 8 we learn that it was intended also to represent the prayers of the saints, which, offered up on that altar, Christ Jesus, that sanctifies every gift, are highly pleasing in the sight of God.

17. KORBAN, the GIFT-offering, from karab, to draw nigh or approach. Korban was a general name for any kind of offering, because through these it was supposed a man had access to his Maker.

18. SHELAMIM, PEACE-offering, from shalam, to complete, make whole; for by these offerings that which was lacking was considered as being now made up, and that which was broken, viz., the covenant of God, by his creatures' transgression, was supposed to be made whole; so that after such an offering, the sincere and conscientious mind had a right to consider that the breach was made up between God and it, and that it might lay confident hold on this covenant of peace. To this the apostle evidently alludes, Eph. ii. 14-19.

19. TODAH, THANK-offering, from yadah, to confess; offerings made to God with public confession of his power, goodness, mercy, &c.

20. TENUPHAH, WAVE-offering, from naph, to stretch out; an offering of the first-fruits stretched out before God, in acknowledgment of his providential goodness. This offering was moved from the right hand to the left.

21. TERUMAH, HEAVE-offering, from ram, to lift up, because the offering was lifted up towards heaven, as the wave-offering, in token of the kindness of God in granting rain and fruitful seasons, and filling the heart with food and gladness. As the wave-offering was moved from right to left, so the heave-offering was moved up and down; and in both cases this was done several times. These offerings had a blessed tendency to keep alive in the breasts of the people a due sense of their dependence on the divine providence and bounty, and of their obligation to God for his continual and liberal supply of all their wants.

CHAPTER VIII.

Moses is commanded to consecrate Aaron and his sons, 1-3. Moses convenes the congregation; washes, clothes, and anoints Aaron, 4-12. He also clothes Aaron's sons, 13. Offers a bullock for them as a sin-offering, 14-17. And a ram for a burnt-offering, 18-21. And another ram for a consecration-offering, 22-24. The fat, with cakes of unleavened bread, and the right shoulder of the ram, he offers as a wave-offering, and afterwards burns, 25-28. The breast, which was the part of Moses, he also waves, 29. And sprinkles oil and blood upon Aaron and his sons, 30. The flesh of the consecration-ram is to be boiled and eaten at the door of the tabernacle, 31, 32. Moses commands Aaron and his sons to abide seven days at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, which they do accordingly, 33-36.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Take Aaron, and his sons with him, and <sup>b</sup> the garments, and <sup>c</sup> the anointing oil, and a bullock for the sin-offering, and two rams, and a basket of unleavened bread;

3 And gather thou all the congregation together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 And Moses did as the LORD commanded him: and the assembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

5 And Moses said unto the congregation, <sup>d</sup> This is the thing which the LORD commanded to be done.

6 And Moses brought Aaron and his sons, <sup>e</sup> and washed them with water.

7 And he put upon him the <sup>f</sup> coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it unto him therewith.

8 And he put the breastplate upon him: also he <sup>h</sup> put in the breastplate the Urim and the Thummim.

9 <sup>i</sup> And he put the mitre upon his head; also upon the mitre, even, upon his forehead, did he put the golden plate, the holy crown; as the LORD<sup>j</sup> commanded Moses.

10 <sup>k</sup> And Moses took the anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle and all that was therein, and sanctified them.

11 And he sprinkled thereof upon the altar seven times, and anointed the altar and all his vessels, both the laver and his foot, to sanctify them.

12 And he <sup>l</sup> poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him, to sanctify him.

13 <sup>m</sup> And Moses brought Aaron's sons, and put 14 <sup>b</sup> And he brought the bullock for the sin-offering: and Aaron and his sons <sup>c</sup> laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the sin-offering.

15 And he slew it; <sup>d</sup> and Moses took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger, and purified the altar, and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and sanctified it, to make reconciliation upon it.

16 <sup>e</sup> And he took all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moses burned it upon the altar.

17 But the bullock, and his hide, his flesh, and his dung, he burnt with fire without the camp; as the Lord <sup>f</sup> commanded Moses.

18 <sup>g</sup> And he brought the ram for the burnt-offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

19 And he killed it; and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

20 And he cut the ram into pieces: and Moses burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat.

21 And he washed the inwards and the legs in water; and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt-sacrifice for a sweet savour, and an offering made by fire unto the Lord; <sup>h</sup> as the Lord commanded Moses.

22 And <sup>i</sup> he brought the other ram, the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

23 And he slew it; and Moses took of the blood of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

24 And he brought Aaron's sons, and Moses put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet: and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

25 <sup>j</sup> And he took the fat, and the rump, and all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and the right shoulder:

26 <sup>k</sup> And out of the basket of unleavened bread, that was before the Lord, he took one unleavened cake, and a cake of oiled bread, and one wafer, and put them on the fat, and upon the right shoulder:

27 And he put all <sup>l</sup> upon Aaron's hands, and upon his sons' hands, and waved them for a wave-offering before the Lord.

28 <sup>m</sup> And Moses took them from off their hands, and burnt them on the altar upon the burnt-offering: they were consecrations for a sweet savour: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

29 And Moses took the breast, and waved it for a wave-offering before the Lord: for of the ram of consecration it was Moses' <sup>n</sup> part; as the Lord commanded Moses.

30 And <sup>o</sup> Moses took of the anointing oil, and of the blood which was upon the altar, and sprinkled it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon his sons' garments with him; and sanctified Aaron, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.

31 And Moses said unto Aaron and to his sons, <sup>p</sup> Boil the flesh at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and there eat it with the bread that is in the basket of consecrations, as I commanded, saying, Aaron and his sons shall eat it.

32 <sup>q</sup> And that which remaineth of the flesh and of the bread shall ye burn with fire.

33 And ye shall not go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in seven days, until the days of your consecration be at an end: <sup>r</sup> for seven days shall he consecrate you.

34 <sup>s</sup> As he hath done this day, so the Lord hath commanded to do, to make an atonement for you.

35 Therefore shall ye abide at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation day and night seven days, and <sup>t</sup> keep the charge of the Lord, that ye die not: for so I am commanded.

36 So Aaron and his sons did all things which the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses.

Verse 8. He put in the breastplate the Urim and the Thummim.] The Urim and Thummim are here supposed to be something different from the breastplate itself.

Verse 14. The bullock for the sin-offering.] This was offered each day during the seven days of consecration.

Verse 23. Put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, &c.] Calmet remarks that the consecration of the high-priest among the Romans bore a considerable resemblance to the consecration of the Jewish high-priest.

Verse 30. And Moses took—the blood—and sprinkled it upon Aaron, &c.] Thus we find that the high-priest himself must be sprinkled with the blood of the sacrifice; and our blessed Lord, of whom Aaron was a type, was sprinkled with his own blood. 1. In his agony in the garden. 2. In his being crowned with thorns. 3. In the piercing of his hands and his feet. And 4. In his side being pierced with the spear. All these were so many acts of atonement performed by the high-priest.

Verse 33. For seven days shall he consecrate you.] This number was the number of perfection among the Hebrews; and the seven days' consecration implied a perfect and full consecration to the sacerdotal office.

Verse 36. So Aaron and his sons did.] This chapter shows the exact fulfilment of the commands delivered to Moses, Exod. xxix.; and consequently the complete preparation of Aaron and his sons to fill the awfully important office of priests and mediators between God and Israel, to offer sacrifices and make atonement for the sins of the people.

CHAPTER IX.

Aaron is commanded to offer, on the eighth day, a sin-offering and a burnt-offering, 1, 2. The people are commanded also to offer a sin-offering, a burnt-offering, peace-offerings, and a meat-offering, 3, 4. They do as they were commanded; and Moses promises that God shall appear among them, 5, 6. Aaron is commanded to make an atonement for the people, 7. He and his sons prepare and offer the different sacrifices, 8-21. Aaron and Moses bless the congregation, 22, 23. And the fire of the Lord consumes the sacrifice, 24,

AND <sup>a</sup>it came to pass on the eighth day that Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel;

2 And he said unto Aaron, <sup>b</sup>Take thee a young calf for a sin-offering, <sup>c</sup>and a ram for a burnt-offering, without blemish, and offer them before the Lord.

3 And unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak, saying, <sup>d</sup>Take ye a kid of the goats for a sin-offering; and a calf and a lamb, both of the first year, without blemish, for a burnt-offering;

4 Also a bullock and a ram for a peace-offering, to sacrifice before the Lord; and <sup>e</sup>a meat-offering mingled with oil: for <sup>f</sup>to day the Lord will appear unto you.

5 And they brought that which Moses commanded before the tabernacle of the congregation: and all the congregation drew near and stood before the Lord.

6 And Moses said, This is the thing which the Lord commanded that ye should do: and <sup>g</sup>the glory of the Lord shall appear unto you.

7 And Moses said unto Aaron, Go unto the altar, and <sup>h</sup>offer thy sin-offering, and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for thyself and for the people: and <sup>i</sup>offer the offering of the people, and make an atonement for them; as the Lord commanded.

8 Aaron therefore went unto the altar, and slew the calf of the sin-offering, which was for himself.

9 <sup>j</sup>And the sons of Aaron brought the blood unto him: and he dipped his finger in the blood, and <sup>k</sup>put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the blood at the bottom of the altar.

10 <sup>l</sup>But the fat, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver, of the sin-offering, he burnt upon the altar; <sup>m</sup>as the Lord commanded Moses. 11 <sup>n</sup>And the flesh and the hide he burnt with fire without the camp.

12 And he slew the burnt-offering; and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, <sup>o</sup>which he sprinkled round about upon the altar.

13 <sup>p</sup>And they presented the burnt-offering unto him, with the pieces thereof, and the head: and he burnt them upon the altar.

14 <sup>q</sup>And he did wash the inwards and the legs, and burnt them upon the burnt-offering, on the altar.

15 <sup>r</sup>And he brought the people's offering, and took the goat, which was the sin-offering for the people, and slew it, and offered it for sin, as the first.

16 And he brought the burnt-offering, and offered it <sup>s</sup>according to the <sup>t</sup>manner.

17 And he brought <sup>u</sup>the meat-offering, and <sup>v</sup>took an handful thereof, and burnt it upon the altar, <sup>w</sup>beside the burnt-sacrifice of the morning.

18 He slew also the bullock and the ram <sup>x</sup>for <sup>y</sup>a sacrifice of peace-offerings, which was for the people: and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled upon the altar round about;

19 And the fat of the bullock and of the ram, the rump, and that which covereth the inwards, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver;

20 <sup>z</sup>And they put the fat upon the breasts, <sup>aa</sup>and he burnt the fat upon the altar:

21 And the breasts and the right shoulder Aaron waved <sup>ab</sup>for a wave-offering before the Lord: as Moses commanded.

22 And Aaron lifted up his hand toward the people, and <sup>ac</sup>blessed them, and came down from offering of the sin-offering, and the burnt-offering, and peace-offerings.

Verse 1. On the eighth day] This was the first day after their consecration, before which they were deemed unfit to minister in holy things, being considered as in a state of imperfection.

Verse 2. Take thee a young calf, &c.] As these sacrifices were for Aaron himself, they are furnished by himself, and not by the people, for they were designed to make atonement for his own sin. And this is supposed by the Jews to have been intended to make an atonement for his sin in the matter of the golden calf. This is very probable, as no formal atonement for that transgression had yet been made.

Verse 3. Take ye a kid] In chap. iv. 14, a young bullock is commanded to be offered for the sin of the people: but here the offering is a kid, which was the sacrifice appointed for the sin of the ruler, chap. iv. 22, 23, and hence some think that the reading of the Samaritan and the Septuagint is to be preferred: Speak unto the ELDERS of Israel, these being the only princes or rulers of Israel at that time; and for them it is possible this sacrifice was designed. It is, however, supposed that the sacrifice appointed, chap. iv. 14, was for a particular sin, but this for sin in general; and that it is on this account that the sacrifices differ.

Verse 6. And the glory of the Lord shall appear] God shall give the most sensible signs of his presence among you; this he did in general by the cloud on the tabernacle, but in this case the particular proof was the fire that came out from before the Lord, and consumed the burnt-offering; see ver. 23, 24.

Verse 7. Make an atonement for thyself] This showed the imperfection of the Levitical law; the high-priest was obliged to make an expiation for his own sins before he could make one for the sins of the people. See Heb. v. 3, vii. 27, ix. 7.

Verse 22. And Aaron lifted up his hand toward the people, and blessed them] The form of the blessing we have in Num. vi. 23, &c.

And came down from offering of the sin-offering, &c.] A sin-offering, a burnt-offering, a meat-offering, and peace-offerings were made to God that his glory might appear to the whole congregation. This was the end of all sacrifice and religious service; not to confer any obligation on God, but to make an atonement for sin, and to engage him to dwell among and influence his worshippers.

LEVITICUS.

23 And Moses and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the congregation, and came out, and blessed the people: *and the glory of the LORD appeared unto all the people.

*Ver. 6. Num. xiv. 10. xvi. 19, 42.—Gen. iv. 4. Judg. vi. 21. 1 Kings xviii. 38. 2 Chron. vii. 1. Ps. xx. 3. 2 Mac. ii. 10, 11.

Verse 23. Moses and Aaron went into the tabernacle] It is supposed that Moses accompanied Aaron into the tabernacle to show him how to offer the incense, prepare the lamps and the perfume, adjust the shew-bread, &c., &c.

And the glory of the Lord appeared] To show that every thing was done according to the divine mind, 1. The glory of Jehovah appears unto all the people; 2. A fire came out from before the Lord, and consumed the burnt-offering. This was the proof which God gave upon extraordinary occasions of his acceptance of the sacrifice. This was done, probably, 1. In the case of Abel, Gen. iv. 4. 2. In the case of Aaron; see above, ver. 24. 3. In the case of Gideon, Judg. vi. 21. 4. In the case of Manoah and his wife. Compare Judg. xiii. 19-23. 5. In the case of David dedicating the threshing-floor of Ornan, 1 Chron. xxi. 26. 6. In the case of Solomon dedicating the temple, 2 Chron. vii. 1. 7. In the case of Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 38. Hence to express the accepting of an offering, sacrifice, &c., the verb dishshen is used, which signifies to reduce to ashes, i.e. by fire from heaven. In such a case as this, it was necessary that the fire should appear to be divinely sent, and should come in such a way as to preclude the supposition that any art or deceit had been practised on the occasion. Hence it is not intimated that Moses and Aaron brought it out of the tabernacle, professing that God had kindled it there for them, but the fire came out from BEFORE the Lord, and ALL the PEOPLE saw it. The victims were consumed by a fire, evidently of no human kindling. Josephus says that "a fire proceeded from the victims themselves of its own accord, which had the appearance of a flash of lightning, and consumed all that was upon the altar." And it is very likely that by the agency of the ethereal or electric spark, sent immediately from the divine presence, the victims were consumed.

Verse 24. When all the people saw, they shouted, and fell on their faces.] 1. The miracle was done in such a way as gave the fullest conviction to the people of its reality. 2. They exulted in the thought that the God of almighty power and energy had taken up his abode amongst them. 3. They prostrated themselves in his presence, thereby intimating the deep sense they had of HIS goodness, of their unworthiness, and of the obligation they were under to live in subjection to his authority, and obedience to his will. This celestial fire was carefully preserved amongst the Israelites till the time of Solomon, when it was renewed, and continued amongst them till the Babylonish captivity. This divine fire was the emblem of the Holy Spirit. And as 24 And <sup>b</sup>there came a fire out from before the LORD, and consumed upon the altar the burnt-offering, and the fat; which when all the people saw, <sup>c</sup>they shouted, and fell on their faces.

*1 Kings xviii. 39. 2 Chron. vii. 3. Ezra iii. 11.

no sacrifice could be acceptable to God which was not salted, i.e. seasoned and rendered pleasing by this fire, as our Lord says, Mark ix. 49, so no soul can offer acceptable sacrifices to God, but through the influences of the Divine Spirit. Hence the promise of the Spirit under the emblem of fire, Matt. iii. 11, and its actual descent in this similitude on the day of Pentecost, Acts ii. 3, 4. [The theory of the Rabbins, that the supernatural fire, mentioned in ver. 24, was miraculously sustained until the building of Solomon's Temple, and then renewed, has no foundation in Holy Scripture.]

The most remarkable circumstance in this chapter is the manifestation of the presence of God, and the consuming of the victims by the miraculous fire. We have already seen that the chief design of these sacrificial rites was to obtain reconciliation to God, that the Divine Presence might dwell and be manifested among them. To encourage the people to make the necessary preparations, to offer the sacrifices in a proper spirit, and to expect especial mercies from the hand of God, Moses promises, ver. 4, that the Lord would appear unto them on the morrow, and that his glory should appear, ver. 6. In hope or expectation of this, the priests, the elders, and the people purified themselves by offering the different sacrifices which God had appointed; and when this was done God did appear, and gave the fullest proofs of his approbation, by miraculously consuming the sacrifices which were prepared on the occasion. Does not St. John evidently refer in these circumstances, 1 Epistle, chap. iii. 2, 3. This manifestation of God in the tabernacle was a type of his presence, first, in the church militant on earth; and secondly, in the church triumphant in heaven. They who expect to have the presence of God here, must propitiate his throne of justice by the only available sacrifice; they who wish to enjoy everlasting felicity, must be purified from all unrighteousness, for without holiness none can see the Lord. If we hope to see him as he is, we must resemble him. How vain is the expectation of glory, where there is no meekness for the place! And how can we enter into the holiest but by the blood of Jesus? Heb. x. 19. And of what use can this sacrifice be to those who do not properly believe in it? And can any faith, even in that sacrifice, be effectual to salvation, that does not purify the heart? Reader! earnestly pray to God that thou hold not the truth in unrighteousness.

CHAPTER X.

Nadab and Abihu offer strange fire before the Lord, and are destroyed, 1-5. Aaron and his family forbidden to mourn for them, 6, 7. He and his family are forbidden the use of wine, 8-11. Directions to Aaron and his sons concerning the eating of the meat-offerings, &c., 12-15. Moses chides Aaron for not having eaten the sin-offering, 16-18. Aaron excuses himself, and Moses is satisfied, 19, 20.

Verse 1. And Nadab and Abihu—took either of them his censor] The manner of burning incense in the temple service was, according to the Jews, as follows: "One went and gathered the ashes from off the altar into a golden vessel, a second brought a vessel full of incense, and a third brought a censor with fire, and put coals on the altar, and he whose office it was to burn the incense strewed it on the fire at the command of the governor. At the same time all the people went out of the temple from between the porch and the altar." See Luke i. 9, 10.

Here we find Aaron's sons neglecting the divine ordinance, and offering incense with strange, that is, common fire—fire not of a celestial origin; and therefore the fire of God consumed them. So that very fire which, if properly applied, and devoured them, and they died before the LORD.

3 Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the LORD spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified. And Aaron held his peace.

4 And Moses called Mishael and Elzaphan, the sons of Uzziel the uncle of Aaron, and said unto them, Come near, carry your brethren from before the sanctuary out of the camp.

5 So they went near, and carried them in their coats out of the camp; as Moses had said.

6 And Moses said unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar and unto Ithamar, his sons, Uncover not your heads, neither rend your clothes; lest ye die, and lest wrath come upon all the people: but let your brethren, the whole house of Israel, bewail the burning, which the LORD hath kindled.

7 And ye shall not go out from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: for the anointing oil of the LORD is upon you. And they did according to the word of Moses.

8 And the LORD spake unto Aaron, saying,

9 Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations:

would have sanctified and consumed their gift, becomes now the very instrument of their destruction! How true is the saying, The Lord is a consuming fire! He will either hallow or destroy us; he will purify our souls by the influence of his Spirit, or consume them with the breath of his mouth! The tree which is properly planted in a good soil is nourished by the genial influences of the sun: pluck it up from its roots, and the sun, which was the cause of its vegetative life and perfection, now dries up its juices, decomposes its parts, and causes it to moulder into dust. Thus must it be done to those who grieve and do despite to the Spirit of God. Reader, hast thou this heavenly fire? Hear then the voice of God, QUENCH NOT THE SPIRIT!

Some critics are of opinion that the fire used by the sons of Aaron was the sacred fire, and that it is only called strange from the manner of placing the incense on it. I cannot see the force of this opinion. [Inasmuch as no direct command had been given by God as to the using of the sacred fire, some have thought that the sin of Nadab and Abihu consisted in their offering what was not commanded, and at an irregular time.]

Which he commanded them not. Every part of the religion of God is divine. He alone knew what he designed by its rites and ceremonies, for that which they prefigured—the whole economy of redemption by Christ, was conceived in his own mind, and was out of the reach of human wisdom and conjecture. He therefore who altered any part of this representative system, who omitted or added any thing, assumed a prerogative which belonged to God alone, and was certainly guilty of a very high offence against the wisdom, justice, and righteousness of his Maker. This appears to have been the sin of Nadab and Abihu, and this at once shows the reason why they were so severely punished. The most awful judgments are threatened against those who either add to, or take away from, the declarations of God.

Verse 8. And Aaron held his peace. How elegantly expressive is this of his parental affection, his deep sense of the presumption of his sons, and his own submission to the justice of God! The flower and hope of his family was nipped in the bud and blasted; and while he exquisitely feels as a father, he submits without murmuring to this awful dispensation of Divine Justice. It is an awful thing to introduce innovations either into the rites and ceremonies, or 10 And that ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean;

11 And that ye may teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the LORD hath spoken unto them, by the hand of Moses.

12 And Moses spake unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar and unto Ithamar, his sons that were left, Take the meat-offering that remaineth of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and eat it without leaven beside the altar: for it is most holy:

13 And ye shall eat it in the holy place, because it is thy due, and thy sons' due, of the sacrifices of the LORD made by fire: for so I am commanded.

14 And the wave-breast and heave-shoulder shall ye eat in a clean place; thou, and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee: for they be thy due, and thy sons' due, which are given out of the sacrifices of peace-offerings of the children of Israel.

15 The heave-shoulder and the wave-breast shall they bring with the offerings made by fire of the fat, to wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD; and it shall be thine, and thy sons' with thee, by a statute for ever; as the LORD hath commanded.

16 And Moses diligently sought the goat of the sin-offering, and, behold, it was burnt: and he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the sons of Aaron which were left alive, saying, into the truths, of the religion of Christ; he who acts thus cannot stand guiltless before his God.

It has often been remarked that excessive grief stupefies the mind, so that amazement and deep anguish prevent at once both tears and complaints; hence that saying of Seneca, "Slight sorrows are loquacious; deep anguish has no voice."

Verse 4. Uzziel the uncle of Aaron] He was brother to Amram the father of Aaron; see Exod. vi. 18-22.

Verse 5. Carried them in their coats out of the camp] The modern impropriety of burying the dead within towns, cities, or places inhabited, had not yet been introduced; much less that abomination, at which both piety and common sense shudder, burying the dead about and even within places dedicated to the worship of God!

Verse 6. Uncover not your heads, &c.] They were to use no sign of grief or mourning, 1. Because those who were employed in the service of the sanctuary should avoid every thing that might incapacitate them for that service; and 2. Because the crime of their brethren was so highly provoking to God, and so fully merited the punishment which he had inflicted, that their mourning might be considered as accusing the Divine Justice of undue severity.

Verse 7. The anointing oil of the Lord is upon you.] They were consecrated to the divine service, and this required their constant attendance, and most willing and cheerful service.

Verse 9. Do not drink wine nor strong drink] Some have supposed, from the introduction of this command here, that Aaron's sons had sinned through excess of wine, and that they had attempted to celebrate the divine service in a state of inebriation.

Strong drink.—The word shechar, from shachar, to inebriate, signifies any kind of fermented liquors. This is exactly the same prohibition that was given in the case of John Baptist, Luke i. 15: Wine and sikkera he shall not drink. Any inebriating liquor, says St. Jerome (Epist. ad Nepot.) is called sicera, whether made of corn, apples, honey, dates, or other fruit. One of the four prohibited drinks among the Mohammedans in India, is called salar, which signifies inebriating drink in general, but especially date wine or arrack. From the original word probably we have borrowed our term cider or sider, which among us exclusively signifies the fermented juice of apples.

Verse 10. That ye may put difference between holy and 17 * Wherefore have ye not eaten the sin-offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and God hath given it you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the Lord?

18 Behold, <sup>b</sup> the blood of it was not brought in within the holy place: ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy place, <sup>c</sup> as I commanded.

unholy] This is a strong reason why they should drink no inebriating liquor, that their understanding being clear, and their judgment correct, they might be always able to discern between the clean and the unclean, and ever pronounce righteous judgment. Injunctions similar to this were found among the Egyptians, Carthaginians, and Greeks. Indeed, common sense itself shows that neither a drunkard nor a sot should ever be suffered to minister in holy things.

Verse 16. Moses diligently sought the goat] The goat which was offered the same day for the sins of the priests and the people (see chap. ix. 15, 16), and which, through the confusion that happened on account of the death of Nadab and Abihu, was burnt instead of being eaten.

Verse 19. And such things have befallen me, &c.] The excuse which Aaron makes for not feasting on the sin-offering according to the law, is at once appropriate and dignified; as if he had said: "God certainly has commanded me to eat of the sin-offering; but when such things as these have happened unto me, could it be good in the sight of the Lord? Does he not expect that I should feel as a father under such afflicting circumstances?" With this spirited answer Moses was satisfied; and God, who knew his situation, took no notice of the irregularity which had taken place in the solemn service. To human nature God has given the privilege to weep in times of affliction and distress. In his infinite kindness he has ordained that tears, which are only external evidences of our grief, shall be the outlets to our sorrows, and tend to exhaust the cause from which they flow. See on ver. 3. [The eating of the flesh of the sin-offering was not a joyous meal; and the reason of Aaron's abstinence is to be found rather in his sense of personal unworthiness, and his conviction of the need of a deeper holiness.]

Though the punishment of Nadab and Abihu may appear severe, because the sacred text does not specify clearly the nature and extent of their crime, we may rest assured that it was of such a nature as not only to justify, but to demand, 19 And Aaron said unto Moses, Behold, <sup>a</sup> this day have they offered their sin-offering and their burnt-offering before the Lord; and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin-offering to day, <sup>a</sup> should it have been accepted in the sight of the Lord?

20 And when Moses heard that, he was content.

* Jer. vi. 20. xiv. 13. Hos. ix. 4. Mal. i. 10, 13.

such a punishment. God has here given us a full proof that he will not suffer human institutions to take the place of his own prescribed worship. It is true this is frequently done, for by many what is called natural religion is put in the place of divine revelation; and God seems not to regard it: but though vengeance is not speedily executed on an evil work, and therefore the hearts of the children of men are set to do wickedness, yet God ceases not to be just; and those who have taken from or added to his words, or put their own inventions in their place, shall be reprov'd and found liars in the great day. His long-suffering leads to repentance; but if men will harden their hearts, and put their own ceremonies, rites, and creeds, in the place of divine ordinances and eternal truths, they must expect to give an awful account to him who is shortly to judge the quick and the dead.

Were the religion of Christ stripped of all that state policy, fleshly interest, and gross superstition have added to it, how plain and simple, and, may we not add, how amiable and glorious, would it appear! Well may we say of human inventions in divine worship what one said of the paintings on old cathedral windows, Their principal tendency is to prevent the light from coming in. Nadab and Abihu would perform the worship of God, not according to his command, but in their own way; and God not only would not receive the sacrifice from their hands, but, while encompassing themselves with their own sparks, and warming themselves with their own fire, this had they from the hand of the Lord—they lay down in sorrow, for they went out a fire from the Lord, and devoured them. What is written above is to be understood of persons who make a religion for themselves, leaving divine revelation; for, being wilfully ignorant of God's righteousness, they go about to establish their own. This is a high offence in the sight of God. Reader, God is a Spirit, and they who worship him must worship him in spirit and truth. Such worshippers the Father seeketh.

Nor do they defile seed by accidentally touching it, provided the water which has touched their flesh do not touch or moisten the seed, 37, 38. 6 And the hare, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you.

7 And the swine, though he divide the hoof, and be cloven-footed, yet he cheweth not the cud; he is unclean to you.

8 Of their flesh shall ye not eat, and their carcase shall ye not touch; they are unclean to you.

as inebriation unfits a person for the regular performance of every function of life, it must be especially sinful in those who minister in holy things, and to whom the teaching of the ignorant, and the cure of souls in general, are intrusted.

Having delivered the law against drinking wine, Moses proceeds to deliver a series of ordinances, all well calculated to prevent the Israelites from mixing with the surrounding nations, and consequently from being contaminated by their idolatry. In chap. xi. he treats of unclean meats. In chap. xii., xiii., xiv., xv., he treats of unclean persons, garments, and dwellings. In chap. xvi. he treats of the uncleanness of the priests and the people, and prescribes the proper expiations and sacrifices for both. In chap. xvii. he continues the subject, and gives particular directions concerning the mode of offering, &c. In chap. xviii. he treats of unclean matrimonial connexions. In chap. xix. he repeats sundry laws relative to these subjects, and introduces some new ones. In chap. xx. he mentions certain uncleannesses practised among the idolatrous nations, and prohibits them on pain of death. In chap. xxi. he treats of the mourning, marriages, and personal defects of the priests, which rendered them unclean. And in chap. xxii. he speaks of unclean sacrifices, or such as should not be offered to the Lord. After this, to the close of the book, many important and excellent political and domestic regulations are enjoined, the whole forming an ecclesiastico-political system superior to any thing the world ever saw.

Verse 3. Whatsoever parteth the hoof and is cloven-footed] These two words mean the same thing—a divided hoof, such as that of the ox, where the hoof is divided into two toes, and each toe is cased with horn.

Cheweth the cud] Ruminates; casts up the grass, &c., which had been taken into the stomach for the purpose of mastication.

The word cud is probably not originally Saxon, though found in that language in the same signification in which it is still used. Junius, with great show of probability, derives it from the Cambro-British chwyd, a vomit, as it is the ball of food vomited, or thrown up, from the first stomach through the oesophagus into the mouth, which is called by this name. Those who prefer a Saxon derivation may have it in the verb which lies at the root of our word chew; and so cud might be considered a contraction of chewed, but this is not so likely as the preceding.

Verse 5. The coney] Not the rabbit, but rather a creature nearly resembling it, which abounds in Judea, Palestine, and Arabia. [Probably the Hyra Syriacus, an animal of the size of a rabbit.]

Verse 6. The hare] It is very likely that different species of these animals are included under the general terms shaphan and arnebeth, for some travellers have observed that there are four or five sorts of these animals, which are used for food in the present day in those countries. Some think the mountain rat, marmot, squirrel, and hedghog, may be intended under the word shaphan. [The hare does not actually chew the cud. But it appears to do so, by the movement of its jaw after eating; and Moses uses the language of appearance.]

10 And all that have no fins and scales in the seas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing which is in the waters, they shall be an abomination unto you:

11 They shall be even an abomination unto you; ye shall not eat of their flesh, but ye shall have their carcases in abomination.

12 Whatsoever hath no fins nor scales in the waters, that shall be an abomination unto you.

13 And these are they which ye shall have in abomination among the fowls; they shall not be eaten, they are an abomination: the eagle, and the ossifrage, and the ospray,

14 And the vulture, and the kite after his kind;

15 Every raven after his kind;

16 And the owl, and the night hawk, and the cuckow, and the hawk after his kind.

Verse 7. And the swine] One of the most gluttonous, libidinous, and filthy quadrupeds in the universe; and because of these qualities, sacred to the Venus of the Greeks and Romans, and the Friga of our Saxon ancestors; and perhaps on these accounts forbidden, as well as on account of its flesh being strong and difficult to digest, affording a very gross kind of aliment, apt to produce cutaneous, scorbutic, and scrofulous disorders, especially in hot climates.

Verse 9. Whatsoever hath fins and scales] Because these, of all the fish tribe, are the most nourishing; the others which are without scales, or whose bodies are covered with a thick glutinous matter, being in general very difficult of digestion.

Verse 13. And these—among the fowls—the eagle] Nesher, from nashar, to lacerate, cut, or tear to pieces; hence the eagle, a most rapacious bird of prey, from its tearing the flesh of the animals it feeds on; and for this purpose birds of prey have, in general, strong crooked talons and a hooked beak.

The ossifrage] Or bone-breaker, from os, a bone, and frango, I break, because it not only strips off the flesh, but breaks the bone in order to extract the marrow. In Hebrew it is called peres, from paras, to break or divide in two, and probably signifies that species of the eagle anciently known by the name of ossi-fraga, and which we render ossi-frage.

Ospray] Generally supposed to mean the black eagle. Among the Greeks and Romans the eagle was held sacred, and is represented as carrying the thunderbolts of Jupiter. This occurs so frequently, and is so well known, that references are almost needless. [The ospray was probably the bearded, or golden vulture.]

Verse 14. The vulture] Daah, from the root to fly, and therefore more probably the kite or glade, from its remarkable property of gliding or sailing with expanded wings through the air. The daah is a different bird from the daiyah, which signifies the vulture.

The kite] Thought by some to be the vulture, by others the merlin. Parkhurst thinks it has its name from the root arah, to covet, because of its rapaciousness; some contend that the kite is meant. That it is a species of the hawk, most learned men will allow.

Verse 15. Every raven] A general term comprehending the raven, crow, rook, jackdaw, and magpie.

Verse 16. The owl] Bath haysaanah, the daughter of vociferation, the female ostrich, probably so called from the noise they make. The ostrich is a very unclean animal, and eats its own ordure. This is a sufficient reason, were others wanting, why such a fowl should be reputed to be unclean, and its use as an article of diet prohibited. [Gesenius renders the original "daughter of greediness."]

The night hawk] Tachmas, from chamas, to force away, act violently and unjustly; supposed to signify the male ostrich, from its cruelty towards its young; but others suppose it to be stris Orientalis, or Oriental owl.

The cuckow] Shachaph, supposed rather to mean the sea mew; called shachaph, from shachepheth, a wasting distemper, or atrophy, because its body is the leanest, in proportion to its bones and feathers, of most other birds, always 21 Yet these may ye eat, of every flying creeping thing that goeth upon all four, which have legs above their feet, to leap withal upon the earth;

22 Even these of them ye may eat; <sup>e</sup>the locust after his kind, and the bald locust after his kind, and the beetle after his kind, and the grasshopper after his kind.

appearing as if under the influence of a wasting distemper. A fowl which, from its natural constitution or manner of life, is incapable of becoming plump or fleshy, must always be unwholesome; and this is reason sufficient why such should be prohibited. [More probably the original refers to a species of gull.]

And the hawk] Nets, from the root natsah, to shoot forth or spring forward, because of the rapidity and length of its flight, the hawk being remarkable for both. As this is a bird of prey it is forbidden, and all others of its kind.

Verse 17. The little owl] Cos, the bittern, night-raven, or night-owl, according to most interpreters. Some think the onocrotalus or pelican may be intended; for as the word cos signifies a cup in Hebrew, and the pelican is remarkable for a pouch or bag under the lower jaw, it might have had its Hebrew name from this circumstance; but the kaath in the following verse is rather supposed to mean this fowl, and the cos some species of the bubo or owl.

The cormorant] Shaluch, from the root which signifies to cast down; hence the Septuagint, the catarract, or bird which falls precipitately down upon its prey. It probably signifies the plungeon or diver, a sea fowl, which I have seen at sea dart down as swift as an arrow into the water, and seize the fish which it had discovered while even flying, or rather soaring, at a very great height. [It is generally supposed that a kind of pelican is here intended.]

The great owl] Yanshuyh, according to the Septuagint and the Vulgate, signifies the ibis, a bird well known and held sacred in Egypt. Some critics, with our translation, think it means a species of owl or night bird, because the word may be derived from mesheph, which signifies the twilight, the time in which owls chiefly fly about.

Verse 18. The swan] Tinshemeth. The Septuagint translate the word by the porphyryon, purple or scarlet bird; could we depend on this translation, we might suppose the flamingo or some such bird to be intended. Some suppose the goose to be meant, but this is by no means likely, as it cannot be classed either among ravenous or unclean fowls.

The pelican] As kaath signifies to vomit up, the name is supposed to be very descriptive of the pelican, who receives its food into the pouch under its lower jaw, and, by pressing it on its breast with its bill, throws it up for the nourishment of its young. Hence the fable which represents the pelican wounding her breast with her bill, that she might feed her young with her own blood; a fiction which has no foundation but in the above circumstance.

The gier-eagle] As the root of this word signifies tenderness and affection, it is supposed to refer to some bird remarkable for its attachment to its young; hence some have thought that the pelican is to be understood. Bochart endeavours to prove that it means the vulture, probably that species called the golden culture. [This is some marsh-bird, resembling the raven, but white.]

Verse 19. The stork] Chasidah, from chasad, which signifies to be abundant in kindness, or embarant in acts of beneficence; hence applied to the stork, because of its affection to its young, and its kindness in tending and feeding its parents when old; facts attested by the best informed and most judicious of the Greek and Latin natural historians. It is remarkable for destroying and eating serpents, and on this account might be reckoned by Moses among unclean birds.

23 But all other flying creeping things, which have four feet, shall be an abomination unto you.

24 And for these ye shall be unclean: whosoever toucheth the carcase of them shall be unclean until the even.

25 And whosoever beareth ought of the carcase of them, shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

26 The carcases of every beast which divideth the hoof, and is not cloven-footed, nor cheweth the cud, are unclean unto you: every one that toucheth them shall be unclean.

27 And whatsoever goeth upon his paws, among all manner of beasts that go on all four, those are unclean unto you: whose toucheth their carcase shall be unclean until the even.

<sup>a</sup> Mat. iii. 4. Mark i. 6.—<sup>c</sup> Ch. xiv. 8. xv. 5. Num. xix. 10, 22. xxxi. 24.

The heron] This word has been variously understood: some have rendered it the kite; others, the woodcock; others the curlew; some, the peacock; others, the parrot; and others, the crane. The root anaph signifies to breathe short through the nostrils, to snuff as in anger; hence to be angry; and it is supposed that the word is sufficiently descriptive of the heron, from its very irritable disposition. It will attack even a man in defence of its nest; and I have known a case where a man was in danger of losing his life by a stroke of a heron's bill near the eye, who had climbed up into an high tree to take its nest. [A bird of the snipe kind.]

The lapwing] Concerning the genuine meaning of the original, there is little agreement among interpreters. [The authorized version is probably correct.]

The bat] This being a sort of monster partaking of the nature of both a bird and beast, it might well be classed among unclean animals, or animals the use of which in food should be avoided.

Verse 20. All fowls that creep] Such as the bat, already mentioned, which has claws attached to its leathern wings, and which serve in place of feet to crawl by, the feet and legs not being distinct; but this may also include all the different kinds of insects, with the exceptions in the following verse.

Going upon all four] May signify no more than walking regularly or progressively foot after foot as quadrupeds do; for it cannot be applied to insects literally, as they have in general six feet, many of them nure, some reputed to have a hundred, hence called centipedes; and some a thousand, hence called millipedes; words which often signify no more than that such insects have a great number of feet.

Verse 21. Which have legs above their feet] This appears to refer to the different kinds of locusts and grasshoppers, which have very remarkable hind legs, long and with high joints, projecting above their backs, by which they are enabled to spring up from the ground, and leap high and far.

Verse 22. The locust] Arbeh, either from arab, to lie in wait or in ambush, because often immense flights of them suddenly alight upon the fields, vineyards, &c., and destroy all the produce of the earth; or from rabah, he multiplied, because of their prodigious swarms.

The bald locust] Probably so called from its rugged, craggy form.

The beetle] This word occurs only in this place. The beetle never can be intended here, as that insect never was eaten by man, perhaps, in any country of the universe. [It was a sort of locust.]

The grasshopper] Bochart supposes that this species of locust has its name from the Arabic verb hajaba, to veil; because when they fly, as they often do, in great swarms, they eclipse even the light of the sun. One thing, however, is evident, viz., that the locust was eaten, not only in those ancient times, in the time of John Baptist, Matt. iii. 4, but also in the present day. They have been eaten in Africa, Greece, Syria, Persia, and throughout Asia; and whole tribes seemed to have lived on them, and were hence called acridophagoi, or locust-eaters, by the Greeks.

Verse 27. Whosoever goeth upon his paws] His palms or hands, probably referring to those animals whose feet 28 And he that beareth the carcase of them shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: they are unclean unto you.

29 These also shall be unclean unto you among the creeping things that creep upon the earth; the weasel, and the mouse, and the tortoise after his kind,

30 And the ferret, and the chameleon, and the lizard, and the snail, and the mole.

31 These are unclean to you among all that creep: whosoever doth touch them, when they be dead, shall be unclean until the even.

32 And upon whatsoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it shall be unclean; whether it be any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or sack, whatsoever vessel it be, wherein any work is done, it must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even; so it shall be cleansed.

33 And every earthen vessel, whereinto any of them falleth, whatsoever is in it shall be unclean; and ye shall break it.

34 Of all meat which may be eaten, that on which such water cometh shall be unclean: and all drink that may be drunk in every such vessel shall be unclean.

35 And every thing whereupon any part of their carcase falleth shall be unclean; whether it be oven, or ranges for pots they shall be broken down: for they are unclean, and shall be unclean unto you.

36 Nevertheless a fountain or pit, wherein there is plenty of water, shall be clean: but that which toucheth their carcase shall be unclean.

37 And if any part of their carcase fall upon any sowing seed, which is to be sown, it shall be clean.

38 But if any water be put upon the seed and any part of their carcase fall therein, it shall be unclean unto you.

39 And if any beast, of which ye may eat, die; ho that toucheth the carcase thereof shall be unclean until the even.

40 And he that eateth of the carcase of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even; he also that beareth the carcase of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

41 And every creeping thing, that creepeth upon the earth, shall be an abomination; it shall not be eaten, 42 Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all four, or whatsoever hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth, them ye shall not eat; for they are an abomination.

43 Ye shall not make yourselves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled thereby.

44 For I am the LORD your God: ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy; for I am holy: neither shall ye defile yourselves with any manner of creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

45 For I am the LORD that bringeth you up out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: ye shall therefore be holy; for I am holy.

46 This is the law of the beasts, and of the fowls, and every living creature, that moveth in the waters, and of every creature that creepeth upon the earth;

47 To make a difference between the unclean and the clean, and between the beast that may be eaten, and the beast that may not be eaten.

resemble the feet and hands of the human being, such as apes, monkeys, and all creatures of that genus; together with bears, frogs, &c.

Verse 29. The weasel] Bochart conjectures, with great propriety, that the mole, not the weasel, is intended by the Hebrew word; its property of digging into the earth, and creeping or burrowing under the surface, is well known. [The weasel is probably a correct rendering.]

The mouse] Probably the large field rat, or what is called by the Germans the hamster, though every species of the mus genus may be here prohibited.

The tortoise] Most critics allow that the tortoise is not intended here, but rather the crocodile, the frog, or the toad. The frog is most probably the animal meant, and all other creatures of its kind. [More probably a kind of lizard.]

Verse 30. The ferret] Anakah, from anuk, to grieve, to cry out: a species of lizard, which derives its name from its piercing, doleful cry.

The chameleon] Bochart contends that this is the waril or guaril, another species of lizard, which derives its name from its remarkable strength and vigour in destroying serpents, the Hebrew each signifying to be strong, firm, vigorous; it is probably the same with the mongoose, a creature still well known in India, where it is often domesticated in order to keep the houses free from snakes, rats, mice, &c.

The lizard] Bochart contends that this is also a species of lizard, called by the Arabs wahara, which creeps close to the ground, and is poisonous.

The snail] Another species of lizard, according to Bochart, called huluka by the Arabians, which lives chiefly in the sand.

The mole.] Bochart seems to have proved that this is the chameleon, which has its Hebrew name from its wide gaping mouth, very large lungs, and its deriving its nourishment from small animals which float in the air, so that it has been conjectured by some to feed on the air itself.

Verse 32. Any vessel of wood] Such as the wooden bowls still in use among the Arabs. Or raiment, or skin—any trunks or baskets covered with skins, another part of the furniture of an Arab tent; the goat-skins, in which they churn their milk, may be also intended. Or sack—any hair-cloth used for the purpose of transporting goods from place to place.

Verse 33. And every earthen vessel] Such pitchers as are commonly used for drinking out of, and for holding liquids.

Verse 35. Ranges for pots] To understand this, we must observe that the Arabs dig a hole in their tent, about a foot and a half deep; three-fourths of this they lay about with stones, and the fourth part is left open for the purpose of throwing in their fuel. This little temporary building is probably what is here designed by ranges for pots; and this was to be broken down when any unclean thing had fallen upon it.

Verse 36. A fountain or pit, &c.] This must either refer to running water, the stream of which soon carries off all impurities, or to large reservoirs where the water soon purifies itself; the water in either which touched the unclean thing being considered as impure, the rest of the water being clean.

Verse 37. Any sowing seed] If any part of an impure carcase fall accidentally on seed about to be sown, it shall not on that account be deemed unclean; but if the water put to the seed, to prepare it for being sown, shall be touched by such impure carcases, the seed shall be considered as unclean, ver. 38. Probably this may be the meaning of these passages.

Verse 42. Whatsoever hath more feet] Than four; that is, all many-footed reptiles, as well as those which go upon the belly having no feet, such as serpents; besides the four-footed smaller animals mentioned above.

Verse 44. Ye shall sanctify yourselves] Ye shall keep yourselves separate from all the people of the earth, that ye may be holy; for I am holy. And this was the grand design of God in all those prohibitions and commands; for these external sanctifications were only the emblems of that internal purity which the holiness of God requires here, and without which none can dwell with him in glory hereafter.

1. From the great difficulty of ascertaining what animals are meant in this part of the law, we may at once see that the law itself must be considered as abrogated; for there is not a Jew in the universe who knows what the animals are, a very few excepted, which are intended by these Hebrew words; and therefore he may be repeatedly breaking this law by touching and being touched either by the animals themselves, or their produce, such as hair, wool, fur, skin, intestines, differently manufactured, &c., &c. It therefore appears that this people have as little law as they have gospel.

2. While God keeps the eternal interests of man steadily in view, he does not forget his earthly comfort; he is at once solicitous both for the health of his body and his soul. He has not forbidden certain aliments because he is a Sovereign, but because he knew they would be injurious to the health and morals of his people. Many moral alterations take place in the mind in consequence of the influence of the bodily organs; and these latter are greatly influenced by the kind of aliment which the body receives. God knows what is in man, and he knows what is in all creatures; he has therefore graciously forbidden what would injure both body and mind, and commanded what is best calculated to be useful to both. Solid-footed animals, such as the horse, and many-toed animals, such as the cat, &c., are here prohibited. Beasts which have bid or cloven hoofs, such as the ox and sheep, are considered as proper for food, and therefore commanded. The former are unclean, i.e. unwholesome, affording a gross nutriment, often the parent of scorbutic and scrofulous disorders; the latter clean, i.e. affording a copious and wholesome nutriment, and not laying the foundation of any disease. Ruminating animals concoct their food better than the others which swallow it with little mastication, and therefore their flesh contains more of the nutritious juices, and is more easy of digestion. The animals which do not ruminates do not concoct their food so well, and hence they abound with gross animal juices, which yield a comparatively unwholesome nutriment to the human system. In all these prohibitions God shows himself as the tender Father of a numerous family, pointing out to his inexperienced, froward, and ignorant children, those kinds of aliments which he knows will be injurious to their health and domestic happiness, and prohibiting them on pain of his highest displeasure. On the same ground he forbade all fish that have not both fins and scales, such as the conger eel, &c., which abound in gross juices and fat which very few stomachs are able to digest. Who, for instance, that lives solely on swine's flesh, has pure blood and healthy juices? And is it not evident, in many cases, that the man partakes considerably of the nature of the brute on which he exclusively feeds? I could pursue this inquiry much further, and bring many proofs founded on indisputable facts, but I forbear; for he who might stand most in need of caution, would be the first to take offence.

3. In the conclusion of these ordinances God shows that the grand scope and design of all was that they might be a holy people, and that they might resemble him who is a holy God. GOD IS HOLY; and this is the eternal reason why all his people should be holy—should be purified from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. No faith in any particular creed, no religious observance, no acts of benevolence and charity, no mortification, attrition, or contrition, can be a substitute for this. We must be made partakers of the divine nature. We must be saved from our sins—from the corruption that is in the world, and be made holy within and righteous without, or never see God. For this very purpose Jesus Christ lived, died, and revived, that he might purify us unto himself; that through faith in his blood our sins might be blotted out, and our souls restored to the image of God. Reader, art thou hungering and thirsting after righteousness? Then blessed art thou, for thou shalt be filled.

CHAPTER XII.

Ordinances concerning the purification of women after child-birth, 1; after the birth of a son, who is to be circumcised the eighth day, 2, 3. The mother to be considered unclean for forty days, 4. After the birth of a daughter, fourscore days, 5. When the days of her purifying were ended, she was to bring a lamb for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon or a turtle-dove for a sin offering, 6, 7. If poor, and not able to bring a lamb, she was to bring either two turtle doves or two young pigeons, 8.

AND spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a woman have conceived seed, and born a man child: then she shall be unclean seven days; according to the days of the separation for her infirmity, shall she be unclean.

3 And in the eighth day, the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised.

4 And she shall then continue in the blood of her purifying three and thirty days; she shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary, until the days of her purifying be fulfilled.

Verse 2. If a woman have conceived] In the extent mentioned here the ordinances of this chapter have little relation to us; and to enquire into their physical reasons as far as they related to the Jews, could afford but little edification; and to make such a subject sufficiently plain would require such minute examination and circumstantial detail as could scarcely be proper for general readers.

Verse 3. And in the eighth day] Before this time the child could scarcely be considered as having strength sufficient to bear the operation; after this time it was not necessary to delay it, as the child was not considered to be in covenant with God, and consequently not under the especial protection of the divine providence and grace, till this rite had been performed. Circumcision was to every man a 5 But if she bear a maid child, then she shall be unclean two weeks, as in her separation: and she shall continue in the blood of her purifying threescore and six days.

6 And when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a son, or for a daughter, she shall bring a lamb of the first year for a burnt-offering and a young pigeon, or a turtle dove, for a sin-offering, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the priest:

7 Who shall offer it before the LORD, and make an atonement for her; and she shall be cleansed constant, evident sign of the covenant into which he had entered with God, and of the moral obligations under which he was thereby laid. It was also a means of purity, and was especially necessary among a people naturally incontinent, and in a climate not peculiarly favourable to chastity. This is a light in which this subject should ever be viewed, and in which we see the reasonableness, propriety, expediency, and moral tendency of the ceremony.

Verse 4. The blood of her purifying] The term purifying here does not imply that there is any thing impure in the blood at this or the other times referred to above; on the contrary, the blood is pure, perfectly so, as to its quality, but is excessive in quantity.

Verse 6. When the days of her purifying] It is not easy from the issue of her blood. This is the law for her that hath born a male or female.

8 * And if <sup>b</sup> she be not able to bring a lamb, then she shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons;

* Ch. v. 7. Luke ii. 24.—<sup>b</sup> Heb. her to account for the difference in the times of purification, after the birth of a male and female child. After the birth of a boy the mother was considered unclean for forty days; after the birth of a girl fourscore days. There is probably no physical reason for this difference, and it is difficult to assign a political one. Some of the ancient physicians assert that a woman is in the order of nature much longer in completely recovering after the birth of a female than after the birth of a male child. This assertion is not justified either by observation or matter of fact. Others think that the difference in the time of purification after the birth of a male and female is intended to mark the inferiority of the female sex. This is a miserable reason, and pitifully supported.

She shall bring—a burnt-offering, and—a sin-offering] It is likely that all these ordinances were intended to show man's natural impurity or original defilement by sin, and the necessity of an atonement to cleanse the soul from unrighteousness.

Verse 8. And if she be not able to bring a lamb, then she shall bring two turtles or two young pigeons] As the Virgin Mary brought only the latter, hence it is evident that she was not able, i.e. she was not rich enough to provide the former; for such a holy woman would not have brought the less offering, had she been capable of bringing the greater. How astonishing is this! The only heir to the throne of David was not able to bring a lamb to offer in sacrifice to God! How abominable must SIN be when it required him the one for the burnt-offering, and the other for a sin-offering: * and the priest shall make an atonement for her, and she shall be clean.

hand find not sufficiency of.—<sup>c</sup> Ch. iv. 28.

who was in the form of God thus to empty and to humble himself, yea, even to the death of the cross, in order to make an atonement for it, and to purify the soul from all defilement!

The priest shall make an atonement for her] Every act of man is sinful, but such as proceed from the influence of the grace and mercy of God. Her sorrow in conception, and her pain in bringing forth children, reminded the woman of her original offence; an offence which deserved death, an offence which she could not expiate, and for which a sacrifice must be offered: and in reference to better things the life of an animal must be offered as a ransom for her life. And being saved in childbirth, though she deserved to die, she is required, as soon as the days of her separation were ended, to bring a sacrifice according to her ability to the priest, that he might offer it to God as an atonement for her. Thus, wherever God keeps up the remembrance of sin, he keeps up also the memorial of sacrifice, to show that the state of a sinner, howsoever deplorable, is not hopeless, for that he himself has found out a ransom. Every where, in the law and in the gospel, in every ordinance and in every ceremony, we may see both the justice and the mercy of God. Hence, while we have the knowledge of our sin we have also the knowledge of our cure.

Reader, whilst thou art confessing thy own misery, do not forget the Lord's mercy; and remember, he saves to the uttermost all that come through Christ unto him.

Verse 2. The plague of leprosy] This dreadful disorder has its name leprosy from the Greek lepra, from lepis, a scale, because in this disease the body was often covered with thin white scales, so as to give it the appearance of snow.

In Hebrew this disease is termed tsaraath, from tsara, to smite or strike; but the root in Arabic signifies to cast down or prostrate, and in Æthiopic, to cause to cease, because, says Stockius, "it prostrates the strength of man, and obliges him to cease from all work and labour."

There were three signs by which the leprosy was known. 1. A bright spot. 2. A rising (enamelings) of the surface. 3. A scab; the enamelled place producing a variety of layers, or stratum super stratum, of these scales.

Verse 3. The priest shall—pronounce him unclean.] Literally, shall pollute him, i.e. in the Hebrew idiom, shall declare or pronounce him polluted; and in ver. 23 it is said, the priest and it be in the skin of his flesh like the plague of leprosy; * then he shall be brought unto Aaron the priest, or unto one of his sons the priests:

shall pronounce him clean, the priest shall cleanse him, i.e. declare him clean. In this phrase we have the proper meaning of Matt. xvi. 19 * Whatsoever ye bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. By which our Lord intimates that the disciples, from having the keys, i.e. the true knowledge of the doctrine, of the kingdom of heaven, should, from particular evidences, be at all times able to distinguish between the clean and the unclean, the sincere and the hypocrite; and pronounce a judgment as infallible as the priest did in the case of the leprosy, from the tokens already specified. And as this binding and loosing, or pronouncing fit or unfit for fellowship with the members of Christ, must in the case of the disciples be always according to the doctrine of the kingdom of heaven, the sentence should be considered as proceeding immediately from thence, and consequently as divinely ratified. The priest polluted or cleansed, i.e. de-skin of the flesh: and when the hair in the plague is turned white, and the plague in sight be deeper than the skin of his flesh, it is a plague of leprosy: and the priest shall look on him, and pronounce him unclean.

4 If the bright spot be white in the skin of his flesh, and in sight be not deeper than the skin, and the hair thereof be not turned white; then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague seven days.

5 And the priest shall look on him the seventh day: and, behold, if the plague in his sight be at a stay, and the plague spread not in the skin; then the priest shall shut him up seven days more:

6 And the priest shall look on him again the seventh day: and, behold, if the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean: it is but a scab: and he <sup>a</sup> shall wash his clothes and be clean.

7 But if the scab spread much abroad in the skin, after that he hath been seen of the priest for his cleansing, he shall be seen of the priest again:

8 And if the priest see that, behold, the scab spreadeth in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a leprosy.

9 When the plague of leprosy is in a man, then he shall be brought unto the priest;

10 <sup>b</sup> And the priest shall see him: and, behold, if the rising be white in the skin, and it have turned the hair white, and there be <sup>c</sup> quick raw flesh in the rising;

11 It is an old leprosy in the skin of his flesh, and the priest shall pronounce him unclean, and shall not shut him up: for he is unclean.

12 And if a leprosy break out abroad in the skin, and the leprosy cover all the skin of him that hath the plague from his head even to his foot, wheresoever the priest looketh;

13 Then the priest shall consider: and, behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: it is all turned white: he is clean.

14 But when raw flesh appeareth in him, he shall be unclean.

15 And the priest shall see the raw flesh, and pronounce him to be unclean: for the raw flesh is unclean: it is a leprosy,

16 Or if the raw flesh turn again, and be changed unto white, he shall come unto the priest;

17 And the priest shall see him: and, behold, if the plague be turned into white; then the priest shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: he is clean.

18 The flesh also, in which, even in the skin thereof, was a <sup>d</sup> boil, and is healed;

19 And in the place of the boil there be a white rising, or a bright spot, white, and somewhat reddish, and it be shewed to the priest;

20 And if, when the priest seeth it, behold, it be in sight lower than the skin, and the hair thereof be turned white; the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague of leprosy broken out of the boil.

21 But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hairs therein, and if it be not lower than the skin, but be somewhat dark; then the priest shall shut him up seven days:

22 And if it spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean; it is a plague.

23 But if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not, it is a burning boil: and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

24 Or if there be any flesh, in the skin, whereof there is <sup>e</sup> a hot burning, and the quick flesh that burneth have a white bright spot, somewhat reddish or white;

25 Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the hair in the bright spot be turned white, and it be in sight deeper than the skin; it is a leprosy broken out of the burning; wherefore the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.

26 But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hair in the bright spot, and it be no lower than the other skin, but be somewhat dark; then the priest shall shut him up seven days:

27 And the priest shall look upon him the seventh day: and if it be spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.

28 And if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not in the skin, but it be somewhat dark; it is a rising of the burning, and the priest shall pronounce him clean: for it is an inflammation of the burning.

29 If a man or a woman have a plague upon the head or the beard;

clared the man clean or unclean, according to signs well known and infallible. The disciples or ministers of Christ bind or loose, declare to be fit or unfit for church fellowship, according to unequivocal evidences of innocence or guilt. In the former case the priest declared the person fit or unfit for civil society; in the latter, the ministers of Christ declare the person against whom the suspicion of guilt is laid, fit or unfit, for continued association with the church of God. The office was the same in both, a declaration of the truth, not from any power that they possessed of cleansing or polluting, of binding or of loosing, but by the knowledge they gained from the infallible signs and evidences produced on the respective cases.

Verse 18. If the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean] Why is it that the partial leper was pronounced unclean, and the person totally covered with the disease clean? This was probably owing to a different species or stage of the disease; the partial disease was contagious, the total not contagious. That there are two different species or degrees of the same disease described here, is sufficiently evident. In one, the body was all covered with a white enamelled scurf; in the other, there was a quick raw flesh in the risings. On this account the one might be deemed unclean, i.e. contagious, the other not; for contact with the quick raw flesh would be more likely to communicate the disease than the touch of the hard dry scurf. The ichor proceeding from the former; when brought into contact with the flesh of another, would soon be taken into the constitution by means of the absorbent vessels; but where the whole surface was perfectly dry, the absorbent vessels of another person coming in contact with the diseased man could imbibe nothing, and therefore there was comparatively no danger of infection. Hence that species or stage of the disease that exhibited the quick raw rising was capable of conveying the infection for the reasons already assigned, when the other was not. As the leprosy infected bodies, clothes, and even the walls of houses, is it not rational to suppose that it was occasioned by a species of animalcule or vermin burrowing under the skin? Of this opinion there are some learned supporters.

Verse 18. In the skin thereof, was a boil] A person with any sore or disposition to contagion was more likely to catch the infection by contact with the diseased person, than he was whose skin was whole and sound, and his habit good.

30 Then the priest shall see the plague: and, behold, if it be in sight deeper than the skin; and there be in it a yellow thin hair; then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a dry scall, even a leprosy upon the head or beard.

31 And if the priest look on the plague of the scall, and, behold, it be not in sight deeper than the skin, and that there is no black hair in it; then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague of the scall seven days:

32 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the plague: and, behold, if the scall spread not, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the scall be not in sight deeper than the skin;

33 He shall be shaven, but the scall shall he not shave; and the priest shall shut up him that hath the scall seven days more:

34 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and, behold, if the scall be not spread in the skin, nor be in sight deeper than the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him clean: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

35 But if the scall spread much in the skin after his cleansing;

36 Then the priest shall look on him: and, behold, if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for yellow hair; he is unclean.

37 But if the scall be in his sight, at a stay, and that there is black hair grown up therein; the scall is healed, he is clean: and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

38 If a man also or a woman have in the skin of their flesh bright spots, even white bright spots;

39 Then the priest shall look: and, behold, if the bright spots in the skin of their flesh be darkish white: it is a freckled spot that groweth in the skin; he is clean.

40 And the man whose hair is fallen off his head, he is bald; yet is he clean.

41 And he that hath his hair fallen off from the part of his head toward his face, he is forehead bald; yet is he clean.

42 And if there be in the bald head, or bald forehead, a white reddish sore; it is a leprosy sprung up in his bald head, or his bald forehead.

43 Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the rising of the sore be white reddish in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the leprosy appeareth in the skin of the flesh:

44 He is a leprous man, he is unclean: the priest shall pronounce him utterly unclean; his plague is in his head.

45 And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent, and his head bare, and he shall put a covering upon his upper lip, and shall cry "Unclean, unclean."

46 All the days wherein the plague shall be in him he shall be defiled; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his habitation be.

47 The garment also that the plague of leprosy is in, whether it be a woollen garment, or a linen garment;

48 Whether it be in the warp, or woof; of linen, or of woollen; whether in a skin, or in any thing made of skin;

49 And if the plague be greenish or reddish in the garment, or in the skin, either in the warp or in the woof, or in any thing of the skin; it is a plague of leprosy, and shall be shewed unto the priest:

50 And the priest shall look upon the plague, and shut up it that hath the plague seven days:

51 And he shall look on the plague on the seventh day: if the plague be spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in a skin, or in any work that is made of skin; the plague is a fretting leprosy; it is unclean.

52 He shall therefore burn that garment, whether warp or woof, in woollen or in linen, or any thing of skin, wherein the plague is: for it is a fretting leprosy; it shall be burnt in the fire.

53 And if the priest shall look, and, behold, the plague be not spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin;

54 Then the priest shall command that they wash the thing wherein the plague is, and he shall shut it up seven days more:

55 And the priest shall look on the plague, after that it is washed: and, behold, if the plague have not changed his colour, and the plague be not spread; it is unclean; thou shalt burn it in the fire it is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without.

56 And if the priest look, and, behold, the plague be somewhat dark after the washing of it; then he shall rend it out of the garment, or out of the skin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof:

57 And if it appear still in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; it is a spreading plague: thou shalt burn that wherein the plague is with fire.

58 And the garment, either warp, or woof, or whatsoever thing of skin it be, which thou shalt wash, if the plague be departed from them, then it shall be washed the second time, and shall be clean.

59 This is the law of the plague of leprosy in a garment of woollen or linen, either in the warp, or woof, or any thing of skins, to pronounce it clean, or to pronounce it unclean.

Verse 29. A plague upon the head or the beard] This refers to a disease in which, according to the Jews, the hair either on the head or the chin dropped out by the roots.

Verse 33. The scall shall he not shave] Lest the place should be irritated and inflamed, and assume in consequence other appearances besides those of a leprous infection; in which case the priest might not be able to form an accurate judgment.

Verse 45. His clothes shall be rent, &c.] He was to have his clothes rent in token of extreme sorrow; his head was to be made bare, the ordinary bonnet or turban being omitted; and he was to have a covering upon his upper lip, his jaws being tied up with a linen cloth after the same manner in which the Jews bind up the dead. He was also to cry, Unclean, unclean, in order to prevent any person from coming near him.

Verse 47. The garment also] The whole account here seems to intimate that the garment was fretted by this contagion; and hence it is likely that it was occasioned by a species of small animals, which we know to be the cause of the itch; these, by breeding in the garments, must necessarily multiply their kind, and fret the garments, i.e. corrode a portion of the finer parts, after the manner of moths, for their nourishment.

Verse 52. He shall therefore burn that garment] There being scarcely any means of radically curing the infection. It is well known that the garments infected by the psora, or itch animal, have been known to communicate the disease even six or seven years after the first infection.

Verse 54. He shall shut it up seven days more] To give time for the spreading of the contagion, if it did exist there; that there might be the most unequivocal marks and proofs that the garment was or was not infected.

Verse 58. It shall be washed the second time] According to the Jews the first washing was to put away the plague, the second to cleanse it.

Both among Jews and Gentiles leprosy has been considered as a most expressive emblem of sin, the properties and circumstances of the one pointing out those of the other. The similitude or parallel has been usually run in the following manner:

1. The leprosy began with a spot, a simple hidden infection being the cause.

2. This spot was very conspicuous, and argued the source whence it proceeded.

3. It was of a diffusive nature, soon spreading over the whole body.

4. It communicated its infectious nature, not only to the whole of the person's body, but also to his clothes and habitation.

5. It rendered the infected person loathsome, unfit for and dangerous to society, because of its infectious nature.

6. The person infected was obliged to be separated from society, both religious and civil; to dwell by himself without the camp or city, and hold commerce with none.

7. He was obliged to proclaim his own uncleanness, publicly acknowledge his defilement, and, sensible of his plague, continue humbled and abased before God and man.

How expressive all these are of the nature of sin and the state of a sinner, a spiritual mind will at once perceive.

1. The original infection or corruption of nature is the grand hidden cause, source, and spring of all transgression.

2. Iniquity is a seed that has its growth, gradual increase, and perfection. As the various powers of the mind are developed, so it diffuses itself, infecting every passion and appetite through their whole extent and operation.

3. As it spreads in the mind, so it diffuses itself through the life; every action partaking of its influence, till the whole conduct becomes a tissue of transgression, because every imagination of the thoughts of a sinner's heart is only evil continually, Gen. vi. This is the natural state of man.

4. As a sinner is infected, so is he infectious; by his precept and example, he spreads the infernal contagion wherever he goes; joining with the multitude to do evil, strengthening and being strengthened in the ways of sin and death, and becoming especially a snare and a curse to his own household.

5. That a sinner is abominable in the sight of God and of all good men, that he is unfit for the society of the righteous, and that he cannot, as such, be admitted into the kingdom of God, needs no proof.

6. It is owing to the universality of the evil that sinners are not expelled from society as the most dangerous of all monsters, and obliged to live without having any commerce with their fellow-creatures. Ten lepers could associate together, because partaking of the same infection; and civil society is generally maintained, because composed of a leprous community.

7. He that wishes to be saved from his sins must humble himself before God and man, sensible of his own sore and the plague of his heart; confess his transgressions; look to God for a cure, from whom alone it can be received; and bring that Sacrifice by which alone his guilt can be taken away, and his soul be purified from all unrighteousness.

CHAPTER XIV.

*Introduction to the sacrifices and ceremonies to be used in cleansing the leper, 1-3. Two living birds, cedar-wood, scarlet, and hyssop, to be brought for him who was to be cleansed, 4. One of the birds to be killed, 5; and the living bird, with the cedar-wood, scarlet, and hyssop, to be dipped in the blood, and to be sprinkled on him who had been infected with the leprosy, 6, 7; after which he must wash his clothes, shave his head, eyebrows, beard, &c., bathe himself, tarry abroad seven days, 8, 9; on the eighth day he must bring two he-lambs, one ewe-lamb, a tenth deal of flour, and a log of oil, 10; which the priest was to present as a trespass-offering, wave-offering, and sin-offering before the Lord, 11-13. Afterwards he was to sprinkle both the blood and oil on the person to be cleansed, 14-18. The atonement made by these offerings, 19, 20. If the person were poor, one lamb, with the flour and oil, two turtle doves, or two young pigeons, were only required, 21, 22. These to be presented, and the blood and oil applied as before, 23-32. Laws and ordinances relative to houses infected by the leprosy, 33-48. An atonement to be made in order to cleanse the house, similar to that made for the healed leper, 49-53. 2 This shall be the law of the leper in the day of his cleansing: He shall be brought unto the priest;

* Mat. viii. 2-4. Mark i. 40, 44.

Verse 3. The priest shall go forth out of the camp] As the leper was obliged, because of his uncleanness, to dwell without the camp, and could not be admitted till the priest had declared that he was clean; hence it was necessary that the priest should go out and inspect him, and, if healed, offer for him the sacrifices required, in order to his re-admission. As the priest alone had authority to declare a person clean or unclean, it was necessary that the healed person should show himself to the priest, that he might make a declaration that he was clean and fit for civil and religious society, without which, in no case could he be admitted: hence, when Christ cleansed the lepers, Mat. viii. 2-4, he commanded them to go and show themselves to the priest, &c.

Verse 4. Two birds alive and clean, &c.] Whether these birds were sparrows, or turtle-doves, or pigeons, we know not; probably any kind of clean bird, or bird proper to be eaten, might be used on this occasion, though it is more likely that turtle-doves or pigeons were employed, because these appear to have been the only birds offered in sacrifice. Of the cedar-wood, hyssop, clean bird, and scarlet wool or fillet, were made an aspergillum, or instrument to sprinkle with. The cedar-wood served for the handle, the hyssop and living bird were attached to it by means of the scarlet wool or crimson fillet. The bird was so bound to this handle as that its tail should be downwards in order to be dipped into the blood of the bird that had been killed. The whole of this made an instrument for the sprinkling of the blood, and when this business was done, the living bird was let loose, and permitted to go whithersoever it would. Of all these purifications, and their accompanying circumstances, we may safely say, because authorised by the New Testament so to do, that they pointed out the purification of the soul through the atone-that is to be cleansed two <sup>a</sup>birds alive and clean, and <sup>b</sup>cedar-wood, and <sup>c</sup>scarlet, and <sup>d</sup>hyssop:

5 And the priest shall command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen vessel over running water.

6 As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar-wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them and the living bird in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water:

7 And he shall <sup>e</sup>sprinkle upon him that is to be cleansed from the leprosy <sup>f</sup>seven times, and shall pronounce him clean; and shall let the living bird loose <sup>g</sup>into the open field.

8 And he that is to be cleansed <sup>h</sup>shall wash his clothes, and shave off all his hair, <sup>i</sup>and wash himself in water, that he may be clean: and after that he shall come into the camp, and <sup>j</sup>shall tarry abroad out of his tent seven days.

9 But it shall be on the seventh day, that he shall shave all his hair off his head and his beard and his eyebrows, even all his hair he shall shave off: and he shall wash his clothes; also he shall wash his flesh in water, and he shall be clean.

10 And on the eighth day <sup>k</sup>he shall take two he-lambs without blemish, and one ewe-lamb <sup>l</sup>of the first year without blemish, and three tenth deals of fine flour for <sup>m</sup>a meat-offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil.

11 And the priest that maketh him clean shall present the man that is to be made clean, and those things, before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

12 And the priest shall take one he-lamb, and <sup>n</sup>offer him for a trespass-offering, and the log of oil, and <sup>o</sup>wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

13 And he shall slay the lamb <sup>p</sup>in the place where he shall kill the sin-offering and the burnt-offering, in the holy place: for <sup>q</sup>as the sin-offering is the priest's, <sup>r</sup>so is the trespass-offering: <sup>s</sup>it is most holy.

14 And the priest shall take some of the blood of the trespass-offering, and the priest shall put it <sup>t</sup>upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot;

15 And the priest shall take some of the log of oil, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand:

16 And the priest shall dip his right finger in the oil that is in his left hand, and shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger seven times before the LORD:

17 And of the rest of the oil that is in his hand shall the priest put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of the trespass-offering:

18 And the remnant of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall pour upon the head of him that is to be cleansed: <sup>u</sup>and the priest shall make an atonement for him before the LORD.

19 And the priest shall offer <sup>v</sup>the sin-offering, and make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed from his uncleanness; and afterward he shall kill the burnt-offering:

20 And the priest shall offer the burnt-offering and the meat-offering upon the altar; and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and he shall be clean.

21 And <sup>w</sup>if he be poor, and <sup>x</sup>cannot get so much, then he shall take one lamb for a trespass-offering <sup>y</sup>to be waved, to make an atonement for him, and one tenth deal of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering, and a log of oil;

22 <sup>z</sup>And two turtle doves, or two young pigeons, such as he is able to get: and the one shall be a sin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering.

23 <sup>aa</sup>And he shall bring them on the eighth day for his cleansing unto the priest, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the LORD.

24 <sup>ab</sup>And the priest shall take the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the log of oil, and the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD:

25 And he shall kill the lamb of the trespass-offering, <sup>ac</sup>and the priest shall take some of the blood of the trespass-offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot:

26 And the priest shall pour of the oil into the palm of his own left hand;

27 And the priest shall sprinkle with his right finger some of the oil that is in his left hand, seven times before the LORD:

28 And the priest shall put of the oil that is in his hand upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the place of the blood of the trespass-offering:

29 And the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed, to make an atonement for him before the LORD.

ment and Spirit of Christ; but to run analogies between the type and the thing typified is difficult and precarious.

Verse 5. Over running water. Literally, living, that is, spring water. The meaning appears to be this: Some water was taken from a spring, and put into a clean earthen vessel, and they killed the bird over this water, that the blood might drop into it; and in this blood and water mixed they dipped the instrument before described, and sprinkled it seven times upon the person who was to be cleansed. The living or spring water was chosen because it was purer than what was taken from pits or wells, the latter being often in a putrid or corrupt state; for in a ceremony of purifying or cleansing, everything must be as pure and perfect as possible.

Verse 7. Shall let the living bird loose. The Jews teach that wild birds were employed on this occasion, no tame or domestic animal was used. The bird let loose bears a near analogy to the scape-goat.
